TO a photo-play a good story is as important as the keystone is to an arch! If the story is weak a collapse is certain.

From Maine to California James Oliver Curwood is known for the strength of his stories, and one of his strongest is "God's Country and the Law," to be released through the ARROW FILM CORPORATION. Adding RITCHEY posters was the last necessary touch to make this production a perfect box-office success. The twenty-four sheet from the set is reproduced above. It has those qualities of color, design and execution that are certain to appeal to the great mass of the motion picture public.

Producer-Exhibitor Combination Threatens Peril to Industry

By ADOLPH ZUKOR

This article by Mr. Zukor first appeared in Variety, October 25th, 1918, and also in Progress-Advance, November 7, 1918.

AFTER careful deliberation, I have decided to comply with Variety's request for a frank expression of opinion on the vital issue that has been developed in the industry by those factors in the trade which are playing the double role of producer and exhibitor. I have been asked repeatedly by exhibitors throughout the country to express my opinion on this important matter, but have always withheld from facing that task because of the belief that my present position and that of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation might be misconstrued through such a declaration.

Variety's specific recognition of the situation, however, and its request for a definite statement of fact and opinion cannot now be ignored without the same possibility of misconstruction of motive. I therefore feel it my duty, not only to my own company, but to the industry at large, to paint the true picture of a situation which, if permitted to continue, will soon be beyond the control of any one factor, or all the factors in the industry.

The evil of producing and exhibiting coalitions is one of the gravest perils that has ever confronted the motion picture industry. For some time past this condition has been developing and now threatens to halt the industry's progress, if indeed it does not set it back beyond the point at which it first took its place among the organized industries of the day. It has been permitted to develop this far because no one individual, either producer or exhibitor, has dared face the facts himself, and compel other producers and exhibitors to face them with him.

Why Minimize Results?

LET us suppose that we are facing each other and have just decided that we wish to remain in the business in which we are engaged. Do you believe you can produce, distribute, and exhibit motion pictures, all at the same time, with equal ability in all of these three distinct fields? Frankly, I am sure you don't. Then why do a thing if it is not the thing you can do best—or why do other things in addition to the thing you can do best, thereby taking away from the maximum results you could accomplish by concentration upon that one thing? The day of butcher and baker and candlestick maker embodied in one personage has passed—forever. In the modern industrial and commercial world, under the fusion of keen competition and the application of highly scientific processes, it is the specialist—the expert in an individual field of thought or activity—who alone survives. Young as the motion picture industry is, it has progressed so rapidly and so far within a short space of time as to develop unique talents and create a new variety of specialists. No less true than the physical law that a body cannot occupy two places at the same time is the psychological law that a mind cannot do two separate things equally well.

Able Men Attracted

THE tremendous opportunities along new avenues of activity which the motion picture opened up attracted to the industry men with keen and agile minds, men with an inclination toward original thought. These men, obeying the natural law of mind and will, sought that stratum of the trade into which their native talents and tendencies best fitted them. So. D. W. Griffith, Cecil B. DeMille, Thomas H. Ince and Maurice Tourneur mingled their dramatic genius with the new-born screen art, and emerged as the foremost creators of the photoplay; so S. L. Rothapfel, Moe Mark, Harold Edel, Eugene H. Roth, Sid Grauman, John H. Kunsky, and many other great exemplars of the art of exhibition—for it is an art in the same degree as that of production—found themselves attracted to the theatre end of the business, to the temples that they knew would be reared in which the people might worship the new amusement-god; so Jesse L. Lasky, Wm. A. Brady and Max Karger contributed their combined administrative and artistic experience and became the great producing executives of the industry; so Hiram Abrams and Walter E. Greene, W. W. Irwin and Richard A. Rowland applied their sound business sense to the new commercial problems which the industry presented for solution, and developed into the foremost distributors of the photoplay. These men all specialized, and in the fields in which they concentrated their efforts have attained their greatest success and prestige.

Specialization Is Insurance

AFTER years of constant thought for the betterment of the industry, for the progress of the organization with which I am associated, and for my personal advancement to the highest point of efficiency which I can possibly reach, I am convinced that the most important question I can ask myself, or any member of my organization is: "ARE YOU SPECIALIZING?" If you are, you are insuring your business or the branch of it in which you are engaged. If you are not, your business is disintegrating, whether it is paying you dividends today or not; for the man who is specializing while you are not will control your business before you have become aware of his interest in it.

But even a more important protection for your business than the fact that you are specializing in your branch of it is the security that comes of the knowledge that others are also specializing in their branches of the industry; for unless there continue to be producing specialists, scenario specialists, financial specialists, the greatest and most elaborate theatres will not have attractions for their screens, the best equipped studios will not have materials for production, the best managed exchanges will not have sufficient film with which to maintain themselves, and the industry will retrograde first and disintegrate finally, because of the lack of specialization. Translate the thought into everyday terms of your own business. The only way a retailer can assure himself of a consistent quantity and quality of any product is to encourage the manufacturers of that product to produce it at a profit to themselves. The only way a manufacturer can assure himself of a consistent revenue is to make that product as well as he possibly can and then sell it to the retailer at a price so low, in proportion to the quality, that the latter can sell it again at a profit to himself. But the quality of the goods must be high enough to sell itself over again. That is the big problem in every industry today, and in the motion picture business as well—TO MAKE THE VERY HIGHEST POSSIBLE QUALITY AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE SELLING PRICE.

Exhibitors Have Advantages

WE should all realize that the most effective way to develop the industry to its largest capacity is to maintain a broad open field of endeavor in its every branch. The exhibitors now enjoy the advantage of having the choice of several well-established feature programs from which they can select any range of subjects suitable to their individual requirements. Also because these producing firms are well established they are in a position to produce pictures far ahead of release date, giving the exhibitor an added advantage in being able to arrange his bookings far in advance, and therefore avail himself of a careful selection of subjects. The producers, in feeling that they have all the exhibitors in the country as prospective customers, are encouraged to make greater efforts and expend bigger sums for their productions and equipment. On the other hand, the exhibitors, in keeping all their lines open, have the choice of all the productions on the market. In this manner the business opportunities of both factors are unrestricted and permissible of any possible expansion. The moment the exhibitors limit the market of producers, or the producers limit the buying opportunities of the exhibitor, the business is retarded and its growth is stunted. The retailer of every other business examines all the samples of the product in which he is dealing, and selects the best. The exhibitor is the retailer of the picture industry, and should follow the same merchandising principle of examining all the samples and selecting the best for his requirements.

Why build barriers about your own business—why limit your own field—why create your own competition?

There are psychological influences which impair the efficiency of the exhibitor who produces or the producer who exhibits. The exhibitor judges human nature in the aggregate by the comparatively small number of people who visit his theatre. Very often there are sectional differences of opinion. We see the manifestation of this principle in politics, and with plays and novels. The exhibitor-producer is apt to read the nation's amusement desires by the box-office receipts in one type of theatre—for the small exhibitor can have no interest in a producing company.

A Difficult Art

IT seems amazing to me that while the producer has always appreciated the intricate groups of knowledge necessary to an exhibitor for the successful carrying on of his business—comprising a mastery of architectural values, the importance of light effects and other mechanical matters, not to mention a knowledge of exploitation and the public at large—the exhibitor has always underestimated the importance of the units and the specialized knowledge and experience that go into the making of a successful producing concern.

Producing motion pictures is a specific and difficult art. It calls for organization and development along many new avenues of thought; it requires a capable scenario department for the selection of material and for the preparation of it, when it is secured, to the needs of the stars and in accordance with the desires of the public; for a staff of directors that can take that material and transfuse life and reality into it, for a list of players, all of whom represent dramatic ability, but each of whom must possess a certain individuality to invest the whole scheme of their work with variety (one of the most essential factors in continuously pleasing the public). All this means organization and constant improvement. It means years of experience. I can safely say that it required six years of constant effort and unending labor to bring the organization of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to the stage of efficiency it has now reached, and it will take twice as long to duplicate this record, for the reason that the raw materials, both physical and personal, were at our disposal with which to fashion this machine, in a greater degree than they could now be available to any other unit in the industry, existent or future.

Specialization Essential

HAVE all the producers and distributors adhered to the important principle of specialization in their chosen fields? If they had, the following could never have been possible.

A certain star attains great eminence and a powerful public following. She is worth a hundred times the salary of an equally famous stage star, because of the peculiar mechanism of the photoplay which permits her to crowd a hundred theatres simultaneously instead of only one. She has a contract, which eventually expires. The producer with whom she has been identified for years, who has proudly and gladly watched her progress and has assisted that progress as much as possible, wishes to renew that contract, with a substantial addition as a tribute to her augmented popularity and greater ability—gained under the excellent producing conditions with which he has surrounded her. A group of exhibitors joined on a cooperative basis offers her a bigger sum. The producer cannot ignore his investment in that star, his efforts of years, his associates and their interests—he is compelled to offer still more for the contract which he could have obtained without the counter-offer for far less.

Who Pays? The Exhibitor!

THE producer wishes to pay this star, as he does every other star, in accordance with her box-office value. He wishes her to have all the money that can be derived from the theatres, provided there remains a profit for the exhibitors. He knows that as a basic principle of human nature, the money she receives for her services, the greater incentive she will have for more devoted effort. But he does not wish to pay her a sum based upon inflated box-office values, even if they are inflated by the exhibitors themselves through their producing competition, because it creates an artificial and unhealthy condition for the whole industry, including the producer, the exhibitor, and even the star in question.

This situation, in which retailers deliberately and systematically arrange to pay more for the product they have to buy than they would normally have to pay, has no parallel in the annals of business, and is unequalled in any other industry in the world. The exhibitors are not only creating their own competition by contesting the plans and policies of established producing companies, but they are directly paying the cost of this competition in the form of higher rentals. And the worst of it is that the cost of this destructive and futile practise is paid not alone by the few exhibitors responsible for the condition, but by every other exhibitor in the country. Certain exhibitors who feel that they can pay less for pictures by joining together in affiliation of exhibitors are right in one part of their theory—they will pay less for pictures—but they will get poorer pictures. If all the exhibitors paying $50 a day decide they will pay no more than $25 a day, they will get pictures just half as good as those they are receiving today. Can't you see that this result must follow?

[ADVERTISEMENT BY FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORP.]

Threatens Peril to Industry

Quality Suffers

IF the producer makes a picture that he knows will take in altogether $100,000, it is certain that he is not going to spend $125,000 to make it, even if the type of subject requires that amount, or a greater sum, for adequate treatment. This inevitably means deterioration of quality, and therefore retrogression of the entire industry. If the exhibitor, therefore, who can afford to pay more for pictures than the price he would like to pay, faces this fact and is content to accept a less quality for less money, he may and can have his desire fulfilled almost immediately, and he may even make more money temporarily by such a change. I am prepared to go even this far in order to frankly face his view; but will he retain his present public and attract a new following to his theatre if he does not show better and better pictures all the time? This statement is not unsupported by actual fact. Take the history of the industry—look back upon the producing concerns who started out with a very promising producing program, with ambitions to produce an excellent quality of pictures, and many of whom indeed actually produced excellent pictures in the early stages of their existence. The exhibitors began cutting their rentals, and the quality of the pictures began to drop just as quickly and as surely. The high salaried technical experts were discharged; men of less ability replaced them—and trade marks that bade fair to challenge the world's attention as representative of a high quality product, deteriorated, and in many cases have become a joke in the trade and to the public.

Poorer Goods for Less Money

IT is not necessary for me to mention names to establish that fact. Every exhibitor in the country will think immediately of at least three concerns that entered the business under very auspicious conditions and with a high quality product to present to the trade. The exhibitors have driven these concerns to the minor positions they occupy today, only because they recognized their power to obtain that product for less money. They paid less and they got less. Not only did they lose in that respect, but they deprived themselves of a much bigger benefit by destroying a producing competition that would have exerted a much larger influence upon their business by creating a stimulus for better quality that only serious competition can make certain.

Cheap pictures are more easily made than good pictures because they do not require the same amount of heart-breaking thought and energy, aside from the difference in money; but a series of cheap pictures today in the majority of theatres throughout the country would kill the industry more quickly than it would have been killed five years ago but for the advent of better pictures, for the reason that the public is more discriminating now than it was then, and would, therefore, tire of the cheap product far more quickly and permanently.

Upon what does the future of the motion picture industry depend? Upon the man-power and woman-power engaged in it. Do you recall what Andrew Carnegie said when he was queried as to which he would rather lose—his organization or his plants? He replied that he would rather lose his plants ten times than lose a single part of his organization, for without the latter the plants would be idle, but with it he could build his plants again in a year.

Organization Meets Test

DRAWING a little analogy, when the Famous Players studio burned down on September 11, 1914, the company could not have proceeded to rehabilitation if it did not have the loyalty of a splendid organization with special abilities. Such an organization develops only from the principle of specialization. Every man knew the part he was to play in any emergency and was equipped to perform it with speed and accuracy. The fact that this organization was equipped so perfectly and manned so well made it possible for us to keep on the supply of pictures to exhibitors without a moment's interruption, thereby protecting him from loss or even inconvenience. This was a direct manifestation of the power of good to the exhibitor himself in supporting fully the plans and policies of reputable producing companies. Such results are built only upon concentrated efforts. Upon the men and women, the boys and girls, in the studios, theatres, exchanges and executive offices of producing and distributing companies, depend whatever greater glories are yet to crown the motion picture art.

Do Not Scatter Energies

LET them grow and develop in one sphere of activity, let them become experts, specialists. Do not let them scatter their energies and distribute their talents over so wide a field as to have no weight in any one. This appeal extends to the leaders as well as the followers, to the chiefs as well as the subordinates, engaged in whatsoever branch of the industry. Let us all coordinate our work, producing, distributing, exhibiting, to the best of our mutual interests—which all the better elements of the trade are now trying to do—but let us avoid such a close unification that the exhibitor becomes wholly or partly a producer, or the producer slightly or extensively an exhibitor.

For then it will be nobody's business!

Another important defect in the present relations between exhibitors and producers emanates from a tendency on the part of exhibitors in certain cities throughout the country to dominate the business of exhibitors in smaller surrounding communities, creating for themselves an artificial power over these smaller exhibitors, and in this manner limiting their choice of subjects. Already there have been evidences of dictation to the smaller exhibitors as to which pictures they should or should not be permitted to procure. I have always been unalterably opposed to this dictatorship because it is bound to limit the natural growth and independence of the smaller exhibitor and therefore hinder the advance of the entire industry. The exhibitors alone can cure this evil by a resolute refusal to be drawn into any allied booking scheme, even if the results promised are of temporary benefit to themselves. It is only the man who looks ahead who will be in the business a few years hence, and all temporary profits should be measured by what his status in the trade will be months after that profit has been made and spent.

Need Is Clearly Seen

I see it today as clearly as I saw the need for better pictures in 1912 that if the producer and exhibitor do not coordinate their interests and permit full and unlimited activity in their own spheres, the industry will drift into the same chaotic condition out of which it energed only in recent years.

If exhibitors establish or rent studios for the production of pictures the producers will have to build theatres, not in order to rebuke the exhibitors, but for the simple reason that that will be the only means open to them to protect their producing investments. Such a condition would result in ruinous competition in both branches of the industry, but the producer would have the advantage because he would already have the goods to sell, and the ability and the experience to make the better pictures.

No Room for Disorders

I HOPE the situation never develops to such a point. So does everyone else who has analyzed the business and looks forward to a brighter future for it. Every branch of the motion picture industry is big enough, at present and for future growth, without seeking new worlds to conquer. There are only a few men in each generation who are possessed of inordinate ambition, and it is a curious fact that they invariably fail. Let the motion picture industry, which has become a symbol to the world of twentieth century industrial organization, which within the span of a few years has taken its place among the old and foremost industries of the world, which has become one of the greatest blessings to humanity and an agency of yet unguessed value to future generations—let this industry be free of such disturbers!

Let it not be said when the full history of the motion picture art is written that its glory was blighted and its radiance dimmed by a would-be Caesar or Napoleon, who in destroying himself destroyed also the spirit and will of the constructive workers of the industry.

I appeal to all those who have sought the motion picture as a life-work, and who have found in the world of the studio, the exchange or the theatre an answer to the ambitions within their hearts calling for expression. I appeal to them to protect their worlds from invasion—not that they might go on making more money, but that they might expand their abilities and increase their efficiency the better to contribute to the motion picture's greatness.

WHAT BRANCH OF THE BUSINESS ARE YOU IN?

WHAT IS YOUR FUTURE?

WILL YOU HAVE A THEATRE OR A STUDIO.

As surely as there is a natural law of compensation, as surely as there is an irresistible impulse for self-preservation, as surely as there is a point beyond which competition becomes an evil instead of a benefit, so surely, if you want both, you will have neither.

ADOLPH ZUKOR.

A Declaration of Independence

IN a country founded on Independence and maintained by a determination to fight for Independence it is fitting that a great industry should follow the political and spiritual leadership that has made us a great nation.

This organization is pledged to find for the independent producer, the backbone of the industry, a market for his product. This organization looks to the independent exhibitor to provide that market.

Confident of the determination and the ability of the exhibitor to carry to a successful conclusion this month of September set aside for independent productions in every independent theatre we are offering for release three productions of the highest box-office value.

HOME-KEEPING HEARTS

From the story by Charles W. Barrell.

Directed by Carlyle Ellis

A powerful picture of a man's regeneration set in an atmosphere that will recall the stage triumphs of "Shore Acres," "'Way Down East," and other great rural successes." It is a good old-fashioned country melodrama that will captivate any audience.

THE FAMILY CLOSET

Here is the last word in a society drama. It was adapted from The Saturday Evening Post story "Black Sheep" by Will J. Payne, and was personally directed by John B. O'Brien.

It is the story of the family skeleton rattled by blackmailers after a silence of twenty years. It strips bare the weakness of fair weather friends and reveals in a succession of punches a picture approaching dramatic perfection.

DISCONTENTED WIVES

A HERALD PRODUCTION

Here is a title that will jam them into your theatre and a production that will fascinate them when they see it. It is one of the genuinely big women pictures of the year.

The appeal of the young and beautiful, but discontented woman, is tremendous. Her love of clothes, of finery, of riches is intense. Her womanhood, and the ways of woman, are the big secrets that you and your patrons will like.

THE BLOT

What the Critics Say About "The Blot"

Leeds in "Variety": This Lois Weber picture should clean up a tidy sum of money. It touches the heart. It is sensible, intelligent and on a live topic—A good market bet.

Taylor in "Motion Picture News": The fertile mind of Lois Weber has turned from marital and sex problems and "The Blot" is a splendid example of her powers. There is a real depth to her theme.

Weitzel in "Moving Picture World": Bear down hard on the theme of this story. The underpaid white collar professions are always good for a strong appeal to the public. Lois Weber has provided a strong human theme in "The Blot."

Wid's Daily: There is a splendid human interest in "The Blot," and a great deal of heart interest besides.

Weekly Film Review, Atlanta: Real, deep and vital. Had Miss Weber sought the world over it is doubtful if she could have found a subject of more human interest and sincere appeal.

Reel Journal, Kansas City: Unquestionably Lois Weber's best work. Better than "Humoresque." A big score for the industry in its battle against censorship.

New York Telegraph. By reason of its earnestness it is truly dramatic. It is a thoroughly intelligent picture with a purpose.

A Splendid Success at its New York Premiere

"Fresh from a view of 'Disraeli,' George Arliss seems to us the screen's greatest artist . . . Henry Kolker has done a great piece of work in the direction, and the star, Mr. Arliss, possesses more magnetism than most of the handsome heroes of the screen combined . . . Of all the plays which have been transferred to the screen, it seems that none have been more successfully done than this one of Louis N. Parker's . . . The titles, evidently taken from the play, leave nothing to be desired, and the photography, settings and costumes make 'Disraeli' at least 99 44-100 perfect."

N. Y. Tribune.

"'Disraeli' is distinctly a motion picture event. The distinguished acting of George Arliss is even more effective in the screen version than in the stage success of the same name. Here is a motion picture that is signally intelligent. No one interested in the development of screen art can afford to miss it."

N. Y. Commercial.

"It is extraordinarily well cast, beautifully photographed and endowed with a certain artistic quality that gets you. The final picture of all—the reception of the successful Disraeli by Queen Victoria—is one of the handsomest tableaux I can recall."

N. Y. American.

"'Disraeli' proves a delightful thing . . . dignified, glowing, dramatic and tender . . . The film has many remarkable features. First, its star; second, its truthfulness to its origin; third, its tremendous charm of background and direction; fourth, its excellent supporting cast and so on and so on!"

N. Y. Evening Journal.

"When the final count is in 'Disraeli,' George Arliss' new film, will rank with the notable screen achievements of 1921."

N. Y. Evening Mail.

"Mr. Arliss is a motion picture actor as naturally as he is a stage actor . . . The picture is highly worth seeing for the sake of his uncommonly fine acting."

N. Y. World.

"Mr. Arliss is an exceptional screen player . . . As a screen figure, considered by itself in its motion picture context, Mr. Arliss' 'Disraeli' is vivid and verisimilar and an impersonation that gives the photoplay distinction and puts it well above the average production in interest."

N. Y. Times.

'It is a stimulating and a refreshing oasis in a wilderness of senseless 'photoplay' creations."

N. Y. Evening Globe.

"George Arliss plays with suavity and with all his best saturnine glitter that sardonic role that is probably his most famous on the speaking stage, and for once in a way the screen seems able to convey a good deal of the tang of a personality."

N. Y. Herald.

"Mr. Arliss' skill in making the great Prime Minister of Victoria come to life on the screen is really uncanny. None of the vivid drama . . . has been lost in the play's transference to the screen."

N. Y. Evening Telegram.

"The picture setting forth his adventures in the role of Prime Minister of England has that elusive and much to be desired quality known in easy spoken circles as class."

N. Y. Daily News.

729 Seventh Avenue

My dear Mr. Lichtman:-
Ben Turpin in "Love's Outcast," the first of the Mack Sennett-Associated Producers starring him, has set a new record for the California and Miller's Theatres. It is the first time in our history that any two-reel comedy has been held over to play a second week at Miller's After having been shown at the California. This action on our part was due wholly to the tremendous drawing power revealed by Turpin as a star in this picture and because of the universal satisfaction this picture gave our patrons. "Love's Outcast" is great fun and of the highest merit. Here power to the combination of factors that is responsible for it and the subsequent Ben Turpin specials that will be released through the Associated Producers and which we are anxiously awaiting the privilege of showing to our patrons.
Very sincerely yours,
Robert H. Poole

Gentlemen:—

Just closed the most satisfactory, pleasing and successful engagement of the best picture I have ever played during my fourteen years as an exhibitor.

"OVER THE HILL" did wonders for our house in many ways. It made us many new friends, made better friends out of the old ones, brought people to the theatre we had not seen for months. In fact, it brought them out of the canyons of the Santa Monica Mountains and the low sea flats off Playa Del Rey, both points being quite a few miles from our theatre.

The picture proved to be a self-advertiser after the first day, as business picked up and held to the capacity notch for the full five days' engagement.

We never had an adverse criticism, but hundreds took the trouble to come and praise the picture.

"OVER THE HILL" is a direct source of revenue to the United States Post Office Department, as I know of many letters and post cards sent to those back home after seeing the show.

As a friend to the box office "OVER THE HILL" is 101%.

In conclusion would say the patrons of the Rosemary and myself thank you, Mr. Fox, for "OVER THE HILL."

Yours truly,

James Dams.

SAYS

"Johnny Hines this week made his appearance as a feature production star and our Cincinnati reviewer who attended the premier showing of 'Burn 'Em Up Barnes' there this week not only praised the picture and the star in his report, but in a personal letter to the writer added:

"'Hope you'll have more pictures like this Johnny Hines treat for me to review. It's a bird. Wife liked it so well I dislike putting in a bill for writing the review.'

"What better compliment could Johnny ask for than this one from our Cincinnati correspondent, a shrewd newspaper man and an experienced showman. We are satisfied that Johnny is a complete success in his initial feature. We congratulate 'Torchy' on expanding his efforts to the feature field and we hope all his future productions will be as good and as entertaining as our Cincinnati correspondent says his first one is."

Motion Picture News

Action!

Action is Needed; Action is Vital; Who Will Act?

THE press of the United States, with all its power and prestige, proposes to fight the present paternalistic tendency of the State and Federal governments, their fast increasing and highly dangerous reliance upon men instead of laws——

In other words, Censorship!

This industry publishes news and entertainment—upon a vast scale. Censorship is already here. Censorship is the greatest problem the motion picture faces. There is an opportunity—wide open, right now, for the motion picture to align its interests and forces with those of the press in a broad and effective appeal to the public.

What is to be done about it?

The picture theatres of the United States pay a war tax to the government of over $65,000,000 cash annually—

Yet, this Summer, 30% of these theatres were forced to close—or thought they must—in order to save their owners' shirts; and the producing and distributing branches are heavily handicapped by lack of capital and paying through the nose for what they get.

The big newspapers—like the Chicago Tribune—laugh at our complaints, because they don't believe them. Congress and its Ways and Means Committees are equally uninformed or misinformed about this industry's capacity to pay.

This industry has no figures to present.

And worse still, it has not even, thus far, presented a united front in an effort to get this unfair burden of taxation lifted or reduced.

What is to be done?

A single representative of an actors' Union went to Washington and had a 30% ad valorem tariff on foreign pictures put in the Tariff Act.

He had an organization behind him.

This duty, once fixed by law, will cost this industry its foreign market and a cash loss of $25,000,000 a year.

Yet 14,000 theatres with a total investment of a billion dollars and producing and distributing interests with a quarter of a billion more invested and today supplying the world's commerce in films—this very large and well intrenched industry stands helpless or least incapable of any united stand against a single-handed attack forceful enough almost to sink it.

What is to be done?

Here are three great crises. There are no greater ones confronting us. In a financial way they involve a cash outlay on the part of this industry of at least one hundred millions of dollars a year. In an artistic way the development of the motion picture is fully involved, to say nothing of the moral fibre of its industry.

There are no greater questions than these. No commercial problem involving the separate or involved interests of the three branches of the industry approaches them; and they strike straight home to the bread and butter interests of every individual in the business.

These situations have got to be grappled with; that is all there is to it.

How?

There are many things to be done—many minor things.

But there is one main thing to be accomplished without which all other efforts will get nowhere.

That one thing is the immediate creation of a committee or commission or joint body—call it what you will—which is impowered to and will effectively and entirely represent this big manufacturing industry at Washington now—and hereafter before every State legislature during the flood of attempted legislation which will later on follow the creation of New York's Censorship board.

This committee will deal only with taxes, tariffs, censorship and issues which concern the undivided interests of the industry at large. It will employ special men for its special jobs. But above all else it will represent and have the authority to represent this entire industry.

We have today no united front; and in consequence, our weakness is as pitiful as it is inexcusable.

We are fiddling while big fires burn.

The obvious way is to recruit this committee from the National Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association. But that is not so important as the full recognition on the part of all—of these two Associations and of every firm in the business and every individual in the business that the situation is big and serious and that all other considerations have got to give way to it.

This committee is needed now.

We ask for action; and surely we speak for every exhibitor, distributor and producer in the business.

May we ask for an immediate expression from the National Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association?

Let's Go After It

IF the heavy war taxes on theatres and films are not to be removed or reduced, at least they might be put to some practical use.

The Amusement Admissions Tax is today one of the Government's chief sources of revenue. It stands fifth among the special taxes in this respect, being exceeded only by taxes on freight, passenger transportation, automobiles, and corporation stock.

At present no segregation is made in the returns. Admissions to picture, legitimate and vaudeville houses, cabarets, sports, etc., etc., are indiscriminately lumped together. The expense of collection is very large and, it would seem, a very small additional labor in the field would permit segregated reports to reach the Treasury Department.

Such a tax report would give this business an exact barometer upon its market conditions and their trend, about the only one possible and the only one we shall ever have. It does seem as though a slight additional expense should be entered into in order to give this industry the full benefit of so valuable an opportunity.

Secretary Hoover realizes the great value to all industries of definite statistics; and a call has already been sent to the papers of all trades to assist in this work. Evidently the Department of Commerce expects to spend money and effort to this end. Here is a case where another Department, that of the Treasury, can, with only additional expense, accomplish what would cost anew a large amount.

We believe that a spirited and representative appeal from this industry's leaders and from its Associations would secure the desired result. Perhaps, Secretary Hoover, a great friend to this industry, would lend his help. So also would the legitimate and vaudeville and other amusement interests involved.

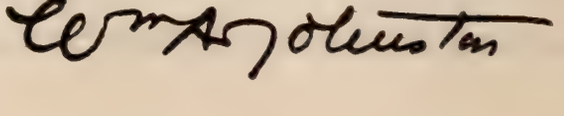
Guarantees

IN the round table discussion on the fate of the "big picture" on the opposite page, Frank Newman of Kansas City, raises an interesting point in the always tempting but politically "delicate" subject "Percentage."

Mr. Newman declares it his belief that the exhibitor should have no objection to the development of an equitable system of percentage that, by properly rewarding the producer, will serve to keep the "super" type of attraction in picture houses and out of the legitimate theatre.

"But," declares Mr. Newman, "the producer must not ask for guarantees. He must be prepared to take the same gamble I do. He did not guarantee me my investment when I built the million-dollar Newman theatre, he does not guarantee me the tremendous ground rent and large overhead of my playhouse while his picture is playing there."

We agree with Mr. Newman that in percentage there is likely to be found a solution for the problem of the big picture in the big picture theatre. And we agree with him equally emphatically, that no mutually equitable and just system of long-run percentage showings is going to be worked out on a basis of bickering and haggling over "guarantees."



Big Pictures—Pro and Con

Where Does the Big Picture Belong, in the Legitimate House or the Picture Palace?—Prominent Film Men Discuss William A. Johnston's Editorial

"HOW are we to take care of the big pictures, encourage them, keep them within the picture industry?" This was the question raised by William A. Johnston in a recent editorial—an issue of vital importance as the new season dawns. Plans for "bigger pictures" are in the making; big pictures are being prepared for the market—what will be done with them?

Numerous prominent film men have come to the front with expressions of opinion on the big picture and its fate. As was to be expected their views vary as widely as the vantage point from which they survey the question.

Frank Newman and Harold Franklin state the exhibitor viewpoint rather clearly. Mr. Franklin, after recounting the effort to make Shea's Criterion a Buffalo home for the long-run picture, while leaving the Hippodrome to follow its established policy declares:

"Our experience proved to us, however, that there were not sufficient 'super' pictures produced last season that could support such a theatre as this. While the tone of production is much higher at this season than it has been at the beginning of any other season there are probably not more than a handful of that type of picture that the public will buy at top-notch prices. Therefore, the legitimate theatre cannot be considered successful competition either for pictures of patronage as compared to the regular motion picture theatre excepting for the two or three pictures that actually stand out as 'super.'

"If there has been a falling off in picture theatre business it is not because of any business depression, but must be blamed on the similarity and hackneyed type of motion picture that is being fed to the public. If anything is to save the prosperity of the motion picture business it is a combined effort on the part of the leading producers to give to the regular patrons of the motion picture theatre the best that motion picture brains and artistry can afford."

Frank Newman steps to the front with a bold statement of the debt the producer owes the motion picture theatre. He says:

"Just thirty months ago I opened the Newman theatre seating two thousand, and representing an investment of slightly over two million dollars. To procure the location I pay a ground rental of $75,000 annually. It was because I thought that 'Big Pictures' would be the gradual development of the production end of the business that I was inspired to build such a theatre and to make such an investment.

"In fairness to the producer, unless my theatres can give them the revenue that a legitimate house can, I do not blame them in the least for running 'Big Pictures' in the legitimate theatres. I ran a picture in my Royal which seats 900 people. The price of admission at that time was considerably lower than it is at present, yet after a three-week run the distributor received $6,700 in film rental. I defy any distributor or producer who has ever shown a motion picture in a legitimate theatre in this city (or in any other city of similar size and conditions) to show me where their run paid them one-third as much.

"Further, this picture played to thousands, a great percentage of whom were the fans, who by their support have made the industry grow. The balance was made up of people who either see pictures rarely or else had never before attended a motion picture performance. The 'Big Pictures' made friends—not only for itself, but for the industry. It made new fans. It was propaganda for the exhibitor as well as the producer. Can you imagine any better method of advertising or making new motion picture fans than showing the worthy productions to the masses?

"Experience has proven that a run in a motion picture theatre following a run in a legitimate house is not generally conducive of extraordinary business. I know there are exceptions to the rule. In New York City, Chicago and possibly one or two other theatrical centers where advanced admission prices are paid for big stage productions, I feel that it is just as fair and just as good business to show 'Big Pictures' at advanced admissions. But remember the average city of one-half million or smaller caters to the same patronage week after week. Transients are but a small percentage of the attendance. Weekly family patronage expects their exhibitor to give them the biggest and best just the same as they expect their merchant to give them the biggest and best in his line.

"I believe that for 'Big Pictures' that are 'Big Pictures' an equitable percentage arrangement is just and fair to distributor and exhibitor alike. I think that any distributor who asks for a guarantee and a percentage is out of line. The producers for whose pictures I built the Newman theatre made me no guarantee against my investment. My losses are my own. The producer likewise should expect to lose or make, according to the revenue that his picture will get."

From a distributor, J. D. Williams, of First National, comes a strong backing up of the exhibitor stand. Mr. Williams declares:

"The independent exhibitors of the country are entitled to the cream of the industry's production as well as to the milk, and I cannot see any justification for the policy by certain producers of engaging legitimate theatres for extended runs for big feature attractions and then having exhausted the high-priced clientele in a locality to offer the picture to regular motion picture exhibitors, thereby establishing them as more or less a second rate market. These same producers have no hesitancy whatever in taking an ordinary picture not big enough for an extended run at advanced prices and offering it in the first instance to the regular motion picture theatres with a great fan-flare and ballyhoo that they are getting something wonderful.

"The big picture is here to stay, and I believe that if the producers who create them will only seek the cooperation of the exhibitors, that it will not be necessary to engage legitimate theatres at exorbitant rentals. If an exhibitor refuses to distinguish between pictures and classifies them all as seven-day bookings or three-day bookings without regard to their individual merit, he is deliberately discouraging the producer and destroying the incentive for bigger and better productions."

R. H. Cochrane, of Universal, surveys the problem from both sides and in his analysis gives an answer that probably more closely interprets the views of most producers and distributors. He says:

"Running the picture in the legitimate house undoubtedly gives a longer run than most of the moving picture theatres see fit to give. There is no room for doubt that this has an effect on the moving picture theatres. If we run a big picture only a week in a regular picture house, the theatres we are trying to sell our goods to do not consider this a real run. Most of them tell us that the one week run has not created a big public interest in the picture, in other words has not really exploited it. The result is that they are not willing to pay us what we figure we must get in order to get back our cost and a reasonable profit. But if we run the picture a long time with much advertising in a legitimate house, they seem willing to pay more for the attraction when it comes to their houses. This leads to the conclusion that it is the mental viewpoint of the average picture house owner which forces the producer to use a fairly long run in a legitimate theatre.

"That's the good side of the legitimate theatre run from the producer's angle. Now for the bad:

"The long run ties up the producer's money for a long time. He can't give play dates on his big picture in the territory where he is exploiting it until the long run is ended. Therefore if he is exploiting many big pictures in many centers and is having long runs in each case, a tremendous lot of his capital is idle. In these days this is a serious matter, but is is not so serious as having to sell the picture without profit as is often the case when a big picture is offered to the average picture theatre without a long run to give it prestige.

"The solution is not in the producer's hands. It is in the exhibitor's."

From that veteran of "big pictures in legitimate houses" Harry Raver, the impressario of "Cabiria," comes this summary:

The picture house, geared as it is to a week run, must change its policy or take its medicine. The exhibitor must have the goods—the real big picture—to draw his crowd, and there aren't anywhere near fifty-two of these a year. Too, how many film men know "a big picture" when they see one?

Fred Warren sees a future dark and dreary as far as the big picture in picture theatres is concerned, unless adequate inducements are offered producers of the "super" class offering. He declares:

"Failure to play greater attractions for lone runs is going to bring showmen like Erlanger, Shubert, or Selwyn into opposition with the exhibitor, who will be left with a huge investment, to play machine-made pictures."

Is This True?

"Every time we have released a big picture directly to exhibitors, without a long run, we have suffered to the extent of many thousands of dollars.

"On the other hand, every time we have exploited a big picture with a real run in a legitimate theatre, we have found it easier to sell whether it had more or less merit than the picture which had no run.

"Maybe the exhibitor finds the same thing is true. Maybe he finds it easier to pack his house with a picture which has had a run. If that is so, he is probably perfectly willing to pay more for it, because he feels it is worth more. That being the case, there isn't any problem to solve." R. H. COCHRANE.

Shuberts Take Over House

Included among the twenty theatres taken over by the Shuberts for vaudeville purposes is the Capitol theatre, at Springfield, Mass., one of the newest and most modern houses in Western, Massachusetts, devoted since its opening less than two years ago to high-class motion picture programs and vaudeville located on Main street, it is in the heart of the city's shopping district—AGARD.

Select Pictures of Canada Absorbed by Allens

A highly important development in moving picture circles of Canada has been the absorption of the Select Pictures Corporation of Canada, Limited, by the Famous Players Film Service, Limited. The latter is an Allen enterprise and is one of the oldest moving picture exchanges in the Dominion with offices in all key cities from Coast to Coast.

The absorbing of the Select exchange means that the Allens now have Goldwyn, Selznick, Hodkinson and First National features at their disposal as well as Educational and other releases. The Select Pictures Corporation of Canada, Limited, now ceases to exist and the Select offices and organization across the country will be merged with the Famous Players Film Service, Limited. Phil. Kaufman, general manager of the Canadian Select, will be associated with Louis Rosenfeld, manager of the Famous Players Film Service, in directing sales and distribution.

Eastman Purchases Three Laboratories

THE Eastman Kodak Company threw its hat squarely in the middle of the ring this week, and added sizzling fuel to the laboratory controversy with the announcement of the purchase of the G. M., San Jacq and Paragon laboratories.

These are the film developing plants which the Allied Independent Laboratories, in their crusade against a protective tariff on raw stock, alleged were controlled by Jules Brulatour, distributer for Eastman film.

The official announcements of the Eastman Company contains two important paragraphs. "It is the purpose of the Kodak Company," says one section of the statement, "to give to the trade all the important savings which will be effected by the close connection of the manufacture of the raw film with its finishing."

In some quarters this is interpreted as foreshadowing a price-cutting war. It is followed in a later portion of the announcement with this statement:

"In carrying on this business it should be distinctly understood that the Kodak Company does not intend to confine the use of its raw film to its own laboratories, but will continue, as heretofore, to fill all demands from whatever source."

The balance of the Eastman declaration is as follows:

"The Eastman Kodak Company has decided that the time has now arrived when, in order to protect its own interests, it is necessary that it should go into the printing and developing of motion picture films for the trade generally. The Kodak Company proposes to give this new undertaking the advantages of its great technical facilities, including its research laboratory, to the end that this part of the business will be brought up to the same high standard of uniformity and excellence as its manufacture of the raw film.

"The rapidly increasing importation of foreign film and the necessity of doing everything possible to protect the American industry by instituting every economy possible, renders this action at this time imperative.

"By this action the Eastman Kodak Company proposes to give to the motion picture industry the benefit of its superior facilities and technical skill and all the economies to be obtained by uniting two heretofore separate businesses, one the manufacture, the other the printing, developing and finishing of motion picture film."

Incorporations in N. Y. State Increase

With a comparative increase in the amount of capitalization, the past week witnessed the incorporation of nine companies to engage in the motion picture business in New York state, the capitalization aggregating over $400,000. These concerns, with the directors for the first year and the amount of capital stock, are:

Motion Picture Life, $9,000, Oscar I. Lamberger, Brooklyn; Leland S. Ferguson, New York; Henry Schapiro, West New York, N. J.; P. T. B., Incorporated, $750, M. L. and S. W. V. Taylor, New York; G. Deneen, Brooklyn; Nassau County Amusement Corporation, Rockville, $150,000, Godfrey H. Hyman, Dorothy and Louis Hyman, Rockville Center; Acosta Picture Co., Inc., $150,000, Morris A. Kashin, Isaac Garfunkel, Solomon Adler, New York City; The People's Players, $6,000, Geoffrey C. Stein, Samuel M. Weller, Chismore H. Packard, New York; Tilford Cinema Corporation, $500, Walter F. Tilford, Thomas W. Switzler, W. B. Ihnen, New York; Scarsdale Theatre, Incorporated, $60,000, Stephen B. Fish, Scarsdale; Lamar Germany, Stony Creek, Conn.; Edward L. Brown, New York; Truart Film Corporation, $5,000, Joseph M. Edelson, Rose Fishbach, Dorothy R. Hubener, New York; Celina Realty Corporation, $20,000, Elias Bernstein, Bernard and Lina Shapiro, Brooklyn.

Nashville Concern Capitalizes at $300,000

Application for a charter for the Cumberland Motion Picture Production Co., of Davidson County Corp., was filed recently in the office of the Tennessee Secretary of State. The company is capitalized at $300,000. The incorporators are: Frank J. Carroll, V. S. Tupper, W. J. Wallace, D. D. Canfield, E. C. Edgar, J. P. Lawrence, H. W. Spicer, C. A. Conley and L. M. Gibson.

Changes Among Paramount Branch Managers

S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, has announced the following appointments in the Paramount sales organization: Herbert W. Given, formerly branch manager at Pittsburg, is appointed branch manager at Chicago, succeeding the late Joseph H. Gilday, who acted as branch manager in addition to his duties as district manager. E. M. Stuve, formerly sales manager at the Pittsburg office, is appointed branch manager, succeeding Mr. Given. The appointments were effective August 15.

M. A. Shauer, manager of the advertising accessories department, announced the appointment of the following exchange accessories managers: R. P. Collins, Boston; M. C. Burles, Salt Lake City; F. L. Collins, Kansas City. The appointments were made by the respective branch managers.

Hodkinson Denies Break with Pathe Exchanges

W. W. Hodkinson has issued a denial to the statement which appeared in a recent issue of a theatrical trade paper. It was reported that Hodkinson pictures would no longer be released through Pathe Exchanges.

"There is absolutely no ground for the statement that Hodkinson Pictures will hereafter be released on the State rights market and withdrawn from the Pathe Organization," said Mr. Hodkinson, "Our contract for physical distribution through Pathe still has considerable time to run. We have entertained no thought of abandoning our own organization."

M.P.T.O. Committee Protests September Rentals

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America committee, consisting of W. A. True, J. C. Ritter, A. R. Pramer and H. B. Varner, has issued a statement condemning the independent producers and distributors who have taken advantage of "Independent Month" to raise their scale of prices for film rentals. They state that the independent producers stand in need of all co-operation at the hands of the independent exhibitor.

"Any co-operation at a time like this," declares the committee, "must be of a substantial nature. If it merely exhausts itself in protestations of sympathy, it means nothing. Properly conducted, inspired by the right motives and guided by a little vision, the month of October can be made a tremendous instrument in the progress of independent production and distribution."

Minneapolis Mayor Bans "Birth of a Nation"

In banning "The Birth of a Nation," which it was planned to revive, at the Blue Mouse theatre, in Minneapolis, Mayor George E. Leach, of that city, has indicated his intention to keep any film suggestive of or that might incite race hatred, out of the city. Although it was believed that "The Birth" could be brought back to big business, Mayor Leach was first consulted through the desire of local exhibitors to cooperate.

The mayor has announced his intention of appointing a censor who would see all pictures and then report to Leach any that he considered bad. He said, however, that he would keep his campaign promise to never ban a picture without seeing it first. Local exhibitors are doubting that the mayor can legally appoint a censor because of an ordinance prohibiting the mayor from delegating any of his powers to an individual or individuals.

Musicians and Operators Resist Proposed Wage Cut

Discussions and Strikes Follow Reductions Throughout Country

THE readjustment of the wage scale, which has forced practically every industry of the country to undergo a period of travail, has not passed by the exhibiting side of the motion picture industry. From many sections of the country reports are received which tell of the effort of theatre owners to reduce the pay of their musicians and other employees. In most cases the wage cut is meeting with strenuous resistance.

In Indianapolis the present wage and working condition agreements of the union operators, musicians and stage hands expires with the end of August, and committees have been at work for several weeks trying to negotiate for bases for new contracts. As yet nothing has been accomplished. The managers are standing for a twenty per cent wage cut and the abolition of a number of labor restrictions which, they say, have been detrimental to proper progress. Union leaders in a series of conferences last week refused to accede to the managers' demands and there appeared some likelihood that there might be strikes resulting. It is said, however, that the managers have frankly told the union men that they are in position to operate without the loss of a single day with non-union help and that the only way for the organized men to keep their jobs is to take the cuts.

The house owners are particularly anxious to do away with the working agreement clauses which strictly limit the kind and amount of work the various trades shall do. For instance, under the present arrangement electricians demand and receive $3 extra pay for changing the lettering of front signs. Managerial attacks also are being centered upon clauses which compel theaters to keep certain numbers of men in the orchestra and on the stage hand pay rolls according to the size of the house, regardless of whether or not they are needed.

Baltimore motion picture operators are fighting efforts to have them agree to a reduced wage scale. A technicality, the operators say, already has reverted to their favor in the negotiations which are under way. A special committee of the Exhibitors League of Maryland composed of Arthur B. Price, J. Louis Rome and George A. McDermit had served notice on the operators that the existing contract would not be renewed on August 30 next. The exhibitors requested a conference.

Claiming that the notice came a day after a special twenty day period provided for such action, the operators did not accept the invitation to confer. Both sides now claim the next move is up to the other.

M.P.T.O. to Be Represented at Senate Tax Hearing

AT the forthcoming hearing on the five per cent. film rental tax and the seating tax, to be held at the Capitol before the Senate Finance Committee, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will be represented by the National President, Sydney S. Cohen; National Counsel, James J. Walker; W. A. True, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut; A. R. Pramer, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Oowners of Nebraska; Col. H. B. Varner, Executive Committee member from North Carolina, and D. A. Harris, Executive Committee member from Pittsburgh.

The Senate Finance Committee will be told that the five per cent. film rental tax and the seating tax are borne in their entirety solely by the exhibitors. The committee representing the theatre owners in the organization will urge a removal, or at least a modification of the two taxes as being burdensome in the extreme to the exhibitors, and as being unjust and working undue hardships on the theatre owners, at a consequent loss, in the final analysis, to the Government itself.

Five Kansas City downtown theatres are without music. The musicians were called out by their union as a result of a disagreement over the length of the time they should play. For the present the Liberty, Doric, Newman, Royal and Twelfth Street theatres will be without orchestra music.

Since August 1, 1920, a five and a half hour day has been in effect and the musicians were allowed a fifteen minute rest period in each hour. Recently, however, a new agreement was reached between the exhibitors and the musicians. Samuel Harding, owner of the Liberty and Doric theatres, was told that the musicians would not begin the six hour day previously agreed to until September 1. Wednesday the orchestra at the Newman theatre, owned by Frank Newman, who also owns the Royal and Twelfth Street theatres, was not permitted to play. The Royal orchestra also was called out of the pit and refused permission to play. Mr. Newman has insisted to the tentative agreement that the musicians begin the longer day at once.

In Houston, Texas, the theatre managers notified the Musicians' Union that they would no longer deal with the Union, but would recruit their forces from any source available. A ten per cent reduction has been insisted upon by the exhibitors, and has been rejected by the Union.

In Charlotte, N. C., theatre owners are preparing to declare for the open shop policy to become effective September 1st.

Misunderstanding on the part of the operators of the Southern Enterprises, formerly the Lynch Enterprises, and members of the Musicians Protective Association has added its weight to the desire of theatre owners throughout the city to announce the "open shop" policy, it was explained.

A substantial reduction in salaries for musicians and operators is expected in Minneapolis when conferences between Union representatives and a committee by the United Theatrical Protective League are brought to a close.

Nat'l Ass'n Appeals for Lower Rail Rates

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is taking a prominent part in the campaign for a general reduction in railroad passenger rates. Last week the Association's Washington representative, Jack S. Connolly, appeared before the Interstate Commerce Commission on behalf of the film interests and appealed for lower passenger rates throughout the country. With him were representatives of many other important industries.

It was pointed out to the Commission that the picture industry is one of the most important customers of railroads, not only in the transportation of producing units over long hauls but in the selling end of the business, and that excessive rates are imposing a hardship upon the picture interests at a time of great depression in all lines of business.

The members of the Interstate Commerce Commission were informed that when the railroad passenger rates were increased several years ago the motion picture industry was at the height of its prosperity. Now, however, more than thirty per cent of the theatres are closed and the proportionate selling cost by exchanges to those still operating has greatly increased.

Grainger in Los Angeles

J. R. Grainger, better known around the Astor as "Jimmy," has arrived in Los Angeles, where he will consult with Marshall Neilan on the matter of Fall distribution of "Bits of Life," the four-story production recently finished and "Penrod," which Wesley Barry will star in.

Various innovations in the distribution of Marshall Neilan productions via Associated First National Pictures are being planned effecting the productions to be released during the coming season.

Kent Elected to Famous Board

SIDNEY R. KENT, general manager of the department of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was elected to the board of directors at the board's meeting, held on August 22.

Mr. Kent's election is unique in the history of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in that he is the first man to rise from the ranks of the company to a place on the board of directors. Before entering the motion picture business he was for seven years with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., most of his work being confined to the West. Later he was with the American Druggist Syndicate as assistant to the president. He came into the motion picture business four years ago with the General Film Company, where he worked with former Postmaster-General Frank H. Hitchcock in liquidating the affairs of that company.

Three and a half years ago Mr. Kent became connected with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the administrative bureau in the New York office and a few months later entered the distribution department as a special representative. He was appointed district manager of the territory embracing the Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis and Des Moines exchange territories, which position he held until May, 1919, when he was called to the home office to become general sales manager. In January of this year he succeeded Al Lichtman as general manager of the department of distribution.

As sales manager and administrative head of the entire distribution branch of the company's business he has been responsible for many innovations. Noteworthy among them are the establishing of the zoning system, which has given wider distribution to Paramount pictures than they ever had before, through the setting of more equitable prices for all exhibitors, and the inauguration of the Paramount school of salesmanship, which is regarded among film men as one of the most constructive ideas ever put into effect in the industry.

Sees Salaries Reduced if Tariff Goes Through

Miss Edna Williams, who has entire charge and direction of the sales of the foreign film business of the R-C Pictures Corp., when asked for a statement regarding the 30 per cent ad valorem duty on foreign pictures as contained in the Fordney Tariff bill, said:

"We are opposed to the proposed tariff. Twenty per cent of the revenue from our gross business has to come from foreign countries. A 30 per cent ad valorem duty will exclude from the United States practically all foreign pictures. Retaliatory tariffs will exclude American pictures from practically all the foreign countries. The loss of the foreign market will cost American producers and distributors millions of dollars annually.

"England, South America, Australia and Mexico depend upon America for about 80 per cent of their films, whereas the foreign films in America are hardly two per cent of our total consumption and probably never will be over five per cent."

George S. Cook Dies

George Stanfield Cook, one of the best liked of the rising young men in the moving picture industry, died at his home, No. 237 Central Park West at nine o'clock, Tuesday evening, August 16, of ptomaine poisoning. He was 34 years of age.

Mr. Cook had been identified with the film industry for about ten years and had just severed his relation with the Fox organization to join Moving Picture World.

Mike Rosenberg Enters Los Angeles Filmdom

It was announced this week in Los Angeles that Mike Rosenberg, head of the De Luxe Feature Film Corporation of Seattle, Wash., has become actively associated with Irving M. Lesser and the Western Pictures Exploitation Company. Mr. Rosenberg will remain in Los Angeles permanently and make his executive headquarters there.

This new connection will greatly strengthen the Western Pictures Exploitation Company, announces Mr. Lesser. Among the distribution contracts now in the hands of this company are the Jackie Coogan features, a series of David Butler specials, eight Lester Cuneo specials and several others.

Wilkerson Manages N. Y. Exchange for Warren

The F. B. Warren Corporation announces a switch in the branch managerial staff of their organization. W. R. Wilkerson has been transferred from the Minneapolis office to assume charge of the New York exchange, replacing Marx S. Nathan, who goes to Cincinnati in the same capacity for the Warren Corporation. Nathan replaces Irving Hanover in the Cincinnati exchange.

Abe and Julius Stern Returning from Europe

On August 24, Abe Stern, treasurer of the Universal, and his brother, Julius Stern, president of Century comedies, will leave London to board the S. S. Olympic at Plymouth, bound for New York. This culminated a three-month trip abroad.

Rent Tax Repeal Being Sought by Nat'l Ass'n

Through Saul E. Rogers, Chairman of the National Association's Taxation Committee and William A. Brady, President of the organization, strong arguments for the repeal of the 5 per cent rental tax will be made to the Senate Finance Committee which next week will begin its consideration of the Revenue Bill that has been adopted by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. Chairman Rogers is now making a personal canvas of the members of the Senate Finance Committee, placing squarely before them the urgent necessity for immediate relief to the industry by lessening its taxation burden.

"This matter is one which affects the public in general," said Chairman Rogers in an interview on the taxation question. "Unless a determined drive is made at once to bring forcefully before the Senators and Congressmen the fact that the public itself, as well as the motion picture industry is earnestly protesting against the excessive taxation on motion picture entertainment, these wartime excises will remain on the statute books forever.

"We are advocating the substitution of a general sales tax to be equally distributed over all industries. It is manifestly unfair for a few industries to be saddled with heavy excise taxes and to allow other industries to be exempt from them!"

Iowa-Nebraska Convention on September 19-20

A double State convention of the exhibitors of Nebraska and Iowa will be held at the Paxton Hotel, Omaha, Neb., on September 19th and 20th. There are more than eleven hundred members in the two states and invitations to attend are being sent to every exhibitor in the territory. The convention will be held during the big fall festival at Omaha, the Ak-Sar-Ben carnival. Special rates are being granted by all railroads.

Famous Players Pays Regular Quarterly Dividend

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's consoldiated statement (which includes the earnings of subsidiary companies owned 90 per cent. or more) reports for the half-year ended June 25, 1921, net operating profits of $3,078,697, after deducting all charges including Federal income and excess profit taxes and reserves for same.

After allowing for payment of dividends on the Preferred Stock, the above earnings are at the annual rate of $26.04 on the 206,849 shares of common stock outstanding in the hands of the public.

At Monday's meeting of the Board of Directors the regular quarterly dividend of $2.00 per share on the common stock of the company was declared payable October 1st, 1921, to stockholders of record at the close of business September 15th, 1921.

Revival of Picture Patronage Is Rolling Eastward, Says Warren

Executive, Back from Trip, Analyzes Slump and Makes Prediction

"THE Pacific Coast region has been the white spot on the map of the United States, not only in motion pictures, but in other economic and industrial lines throughout the present summer," says F. B. Warren, president of the corporation bearing his name, upon his return from a six weeks' trip throughout the West.

"Motion picture patronage in California this summer has shown a very slight decrease over the year before, despite all claims to the contrary by uninformed persons in the East. The seats of picture pessimism have been found in two places—in the studio in Los Angeles, where production came to a virtual standstill through previous over-production; and in New York, where many distributors with low grade product on their hands found it growing increasingly difficult to unload such stuff on the exhibitors. In areas like Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma their feeling cannot be classified as pessimism. Those sections have suffered from an even more depressing weather condition than is customary and they have slumped as they always have and always will slump in summer.

"In Los Angeles Sid Graumann has had one of his best summers; not his best, but one with which he is satisfied. Fred and Roy Miller have had a good summer at the California and the Miller; Mack Sennett has had an exceptionally good summer at his attractive Mission. Abe Gore and Sol Lesser have done well most of the summer with their Kinema and when they ran into a little streak were wise enough to close the Kinema for long anticipated improvements, reopening quickly to good business.

"In San Francisco Turner and Dahnken have played to excellent business at the Tivoli and in their chain of theatres in the state, with possibly one or two exceptions. Their state of mind on the business actual and prospective may be understood when it is stated that the T. & D. Junior chain of theatres is being constantly increased. Eugene Roth told me that the volume of patronage in the Paramount allied houses under his dominion has been quite satisfactory and he then stated, what many other exhibitors are telling me: That the public is growing more selective every day in its choice of picture entertainment and is shunning both themes and personalities that it does not like.

"In a part of the far Northwest, there has been an industrial recession in a few cities, notably in Butte and Tacoma, and these recessions are valid and understandable. But in the main the Jensen & Von Herberg cities are thriving. In Salt Lake George Mayne, an old-timer in point of service in this industry, tells me that Mr. Swanson and himself are well satisfied with the summer patronage they have had.

"The Goldberg Brothers in Omaha, quite accustomed to feeling the effects of a Nebraska summer on their several large theatre enterprises, have had a summer satisfactory to themselves on the direct statement of Harry Goldberg to me, and as evidence of their satisfaction they are building another very large theatre to open in mid-winter.

"Two months ago when the majority of the producers and distributors in New York were starting their annual yellow whine about conditions, I took occasion to advise exhibitors not to reduce their admission prices, saying that at present admission levels they were giving the public more for their money than they could buy in any other line in the world. I advised then, based upon what I knew to be sound economic argument, that it would be better to mortgage their theatres to foot temporary losses than to cut admissions. This advice was resented in certain directions. On the day that I gave this advice Aaron Jones used quarter page advertisements in the Chicago dailies to announce reduced admission levels in all of his theatres. Jones is one of the shrewdest operators in this business, and his action looked to be more conclusive than any advice from a New York distributor. But the thing that is not generally known is that after a few weeks Mr. Jones restored his prices to their former levels and they are there now and are going to stay.

"It is not often that I care to make a prediction in this business but there is one that I am going to make:

"The time is coming within the next year, or two years, when 5,000 motion picture theatres in the United States will lock the front doors on June 15 and keep them locked until September 1 or 10. They won't buy a picture or show a picture in that time. Theatres doing this will have to pay rent to landlords, or if owned by their management, will have to charge up rental for this closed period. They will also have to pay taxes, and interest on investment. And that is all. They will escape staff overhead, film rentals, advertising and exploitation overhead. And they will escape running at a heavier loss each week than the loss incurred by closing up and going out of business for the summer. This is going to happen in territories where oppressive heat is inevitable. Owners are going to stop fighting the elements. If certain exhibitors lack the money to take such a loss they are going to the banks and give their notes and borrow their summer losses, take the blow all at once in June and spend a happier summer than they have ever spent before.

"As a distributor I can say that those exhibitors who did close in this manner for cause will be better customers of the distributing companies when they reopen than they are when they stay open and go through hell to meet their payrolls. Distributors and producers are going to learn, and if they don't learn Wall street and banks are going to make them learn, to cut down production and to make and release fewer pictures in the summer months. This will enable the retail theatre outlets to absorb the market supply of pictures. Nearly every unpleasant problem that confronts the motion picture industry is manufactured and brought into being from within the industry itself. Outside forces exert very little effect upon the motion picture industry. It is the plotting, conniving, greedy inside forces that keep up the picture turmoil and give the industry its lack of good standing in the industrial society of the country."

Doug and Mary Coming East to Attend Premiere

A LATE telegram from Los Angeles advises that Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford left for New York on last Sunday to attend the opening of "The Three Musketeers" at the Lyric theatre in New York City. Director Al Green and Jack Pickford followed on Tuesday with the initial print of "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

After a couple of days in New York, Mr. Green and Mr. Pickford will return to Los Angeles to produce "A Tailor Made Man," starring Jack Pickford, for release by United Artists.

Doran Cox, assistant director to Fred Niblo, is now in Montana, selecting locations for "The Virginian," which Douglas Fairbanks will produce next.

Motion Picture Day Plan Is Postponed

EDWARD M. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the General Sales Managers' Committee for Motion Picture Day, has issued the following statement after a meeting of producers and distributors at noon on August 18:

"From the reports received from the various committees appointed to conduct the campaign for Motion Picture Day, the central committee in charge has concluded that Motion Picture Day, as originally set for August 25th, 1921, should be postponed for the following reasons:

"A large percentage of the motion picture theatres in the United States are now closed owing to present depressed conditions in the motion picture industry. It is manifestly unfair to permit those exhibitors, producers and distributors who agreed to participate in the plan to assume the entire burden. Several valuable suggestions received by the committee since the first announcement of Motion Picture Day will be incorporated in a new plan which is now being worked out. Offers from many of the most prominent screen artists to assist in insuring the success of the Motion Picture Day plan will be accepted, with the probable result that one or more all-star feature productions will be undertaken for release in connection with Motion Picture Day, either this year or in 1922."

Vitagraph to Distribute for Independents

Completion of Elaborate Exchange System Will Enable Handling of Independent Product

IT was announced at the Vitagraph headquarters this week that the Vitagraph Company will distribute productions for independent producers, having finally completed the perfection of an elaborate exchange system.

In an interview this week, John M. Quinn, general manager of Vitagraph, stated that the work involving construction of some new exchange buildings and additional equipment had been completed, and that Vitagraph was in a position to take care over the distribution of the films of any independent producers who had a product worthy of Vitagraph's attention.

"Will you handle short subjects?" Mr. Quinn was asked.

"No, we are not interested in any subjects except those of special production calibre," he replied. "These may be star features or all-star or non-star, or of any division whatsoever. We make only one condition,—that they are of the highest class.

"This does not mean that we would not be interested in the small independent producer's output as well as those of larger ones. It means simply that the product must be good, better than the average and something of a special quality about it. Nothing else will do."

For the past three years Vitagraph has been adding to its exchange system, putting up Vitagraph buildings in cities in which previously there were no Vitagraph branch offices at all, and making over other exchanges to secure twice the available floor space and in many cases more than that. Ground for new buildings was acquired in Chicago, Dallas and Seattle and Vitagraph buildings erected on these lots, and a new branch opened in Oklahoma City after an extensive plot of ground had been secured and a modern exchange building constructed upon it. Vitagraph now has another new exchange building in course of construction at Los Angeles.

In addition, from July of last year until May of this year, branches in ten other cities were enlarged, and new and more commodious leased quarters were found for four other branches. When Vitagraph moved its administrative offices from 1600 Broadway to 469 Fifth Avenue late last year, the New York branch which had formerly occupied part of the sixth floor of the Broadway building, moved to the tenth floor of that building and now occupies that floor.

Zukor and Committee Take Up Hartford Case

Working Hard to Reach Settlement; A. S. Black Expected at Next Conference This Week

TWO more conferences between Adolph Zukor and the M. P. T. O. of A. Committee have been held since going to press last week. The first of these took place on Thursday, August 18th, at the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters, and the second on Monday, August 22nd, at the same place. Both meetings were taken up mainly with the discussion of the complaint lodged against A. S. Black and Famous Players-Lasky by W. R. Hartford, an exhibitor of Pawtucket, R. I.

Mr. Hartford, according to the evidence submitted, has been using and advertising Paramount service in Pawtucket for the past year. Recently, A. S. Black organized a theatrical company to build a competing house in Pawtucket. In this enterprise Mr. Black took in Mr. Spitz as an associate and also sold stock on the public market. Under a present contract with Famous Players-Lasky, Black's Pawtucket company will have exclusive right to Paramount service when the new house is opened. Mr. Hartford will thus be deprived of service from this source, although, according to the testimony presented, he has done much to advertise the Paramount pictures in Pawtucket.

At the Thursday meeting, Mr. Zukor declared he had been in touch with Mr. Black on the Hartford case and that Mr. Black had expressed his willingness to accept a compromise in Mr. Hartford's favor provided Mr. Zukor could win over Mr. Spitz and the public stockholders in the theatre organization to the arrangement of providing Mr. Hartford with Paramount service in Pawtucket. Mr. Zukor pointed out that stock had been sold to the public with the presentation that Paramount service was to be used in the new theatre when opened. This fact adds to the complicated nature of the problem. Mr. Zukor expressed his own readiness to supply Mr. Hartford with Paramount service but pointed out the possibility of being enjoined from doing so by action on the part of Mr. Black's associates in the Pawtucket theatre company.

Mr. Zukor suggested an alternative plan. He said that if Mr. Hartford would use a source of film supply other than Paramount, he would make up to Mr. Hartford in a monetary way the difference between what Mr. Hartford would make by using such "outside" service and what he would have made by using Paramount service.

Early in the discussion Senator James Walker, counsel to the M. P. T. O. of A., sought to impress on the Famous Players-Lasky executives, Mr. Zukor and his counsel, E. J. Ludvigh, who is also the Famous Players-Lasky secretary, that while the M. P. T. O. of A. is anxious to see justice done to Mr. Hartford yet there is a broader issue at stake, namely, the prevention of the recurrence of such alleged abuses on independent exhibitors in the future. In reply, Mr. Zukor reiterated his promise to prevent to the fullest extent of his power the repetition of such situations in the future and to check any future extension of Black's activities to new places in New England where such activities were of detriment to the independent exhibitors.

Mr. Zukor further stated that he and his counsel, Mr. Ludvigh, had perused carefully the contract with the Black Enterprises and that it was his belief that by virtue of the contractual relations involved Famous Players-Lasky was empowered to restrain the extension of activities on the part of Black into any new location in New England in the future. "Moreover," declared Mr. Zukor, "Mr. Black is now fully aware of our intention to do right by the independent exhibitor, and I feel sure after my talk with Mr. Black that he will not do anything in the future along this line that is contrary to our wishes."

Mr. Hartford attended the Monday meeting in response to the conference's invitation. It developed that he has the First National franchise for Pawtucket. Mr. Hartford said he contracted for the First National franchise only after he had learned of the Black company's enterprise to build a competing house. Mr. Hartford also stated that he was ready to waive the First National franchise if he could get the Paramount service.

Senator Walker inquired of Mr. Zukor whether he would be willing to run the chance of a law-suit on the part of the stockholders in Black's Pawtucket Theatre Company by supplying Mr. Hartford with Paramount service. Mr. Zukor said he would be willing provided Mr. Black's consent could be secured to the same proposition.

It was decided that Mr. Zukor get in touch with Mr. Black and ask him to attend the next conference to be held late this week in all probability.

Censors Approve of "Foolish Wives" and Enjoy Studioland

Guests of Universal Discuss Various Plans for Co-operation

THE party of official censors from various sections of the United States and Canada which made the trip to Los Angeles, as the guests of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film Manufacturing Co., came to an end on Sunday, August 29th, when the censors departed after giving their official approval of "Foolish Wives," the big Universal special, which was hurriedly cut and titled and shown to them in twenty-four reels. The censors were sincere in their praise and but a few minor changes were suggested.

This final showing was under the personal direction of Eric von Stroheim, and specially composed music had been adapted by the leader of the orchestra which provides emotional atmosphere for Universal dramas, under Mr. von Stroheim's supervision. No one but the censors, their immediate party, those who worked on the picture, and District Manager Irving Thalberg were admitted to the showing.

"The consensus of our opinion," said Harry Knapp, who acted as chairman of the censors in their convention, and who is also chairman of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, "is that the picture will prove a highly interesting entertainment when it is finally whipped into the more contracted shape required for public exhibition."

While various projects were discussed for co-operation between producer and censor, nothing definite can be said to have been accomplished. A meeting held at the invitation of the Brotherhood of Emanuel Presbyterian Church on Monday evening elicited some interesting remarks from the censors, laymen, clergy and the professionals of the screen.

Bert Lytell maintained that but three per cent of the pictures today were objectionable and as a result the honest producer with good intentions was therefore under a great handicap.

Benjamin B. Hampton gave a very thorough analysis of the motion picture field as respecting censorship and brought emphatically to the attention of the gathering that the cry for censorship of films did not come from the theatregoer but from people who really knew nothing definite about what was being shown on the screen. He gave the keynote of the meeting when he said "Here tonight in this church we are trying to find a method, system or plan by which the church, the oldest and most useful instrument of civilization can work effectively with motion pictures, the newest and most penetrating instrument of civilization. I believe we are privileged to attend a meeting that will set in motion a movement that will promptly spread from one end of America to the other.

William D. Taylor, Will Rogers and George Beban were other speakers.

The second meeting of the censors with the film people was at a luncheon given Tuesday by the members of the Producers' Association at which there was an informal discussion of what should not go into films. General Manager Irving Thalberg, of Universal City, acted as chairman of the meeting and the censors and producers asked and answered pertinent questions.

On Wednesday afternoon another informal meeting was held at which Harry L. Knapp acted as chairman and the producers and other representatives present asked the censors to make statements of what was not wanted in films.

The remarks of the various censors brought out that scenes showing exaggerated sex appeal, those based on commercial vice, illicit love affairs, which show vice attractive and virtue odious, bedroom and bath scenes, unnecessary prolongation of passionate love and others which teach methods of crime are not desired and are to be tabooed by censors. The censors also pointed out that stories which ridicule public officers, army, navy or governmental authority are not wanted.

J. Parker Reid offered a suggestion that an advisory committee be formed to clarify the situation by passing on continuity before the pictures are produced. Such a board he pointed out would make it possible to get the approval of scenes and plot before production, thus proving a method of saving for the conscientious producer.

The entertainment features of the trip included a barbecue at the famous Malibu Ranch at Santa Monica Beach, where a real old-fashioned California feast was provided by the manager of the Beverly Hills Hotel, Stanly Anderson; a trip to Harry Carey's ranch in the San Francisquito Canyon, where elaborate moving pictures of the entire party were made; a dance at the famous Sunset Inn where Priscilla Dean was the hostess, and Eddie Polo, the famous strong man of the films, won the dancing cup awarded by the censors; and a trip to Catalina Islands, where they were the guests of William Wrigley, Jr.

The list of delegates of censors is as follows: Harry L. Knapp, J. A. Barrier, Penn.; Dr. George Heller, Md.; Mrs. J. M. Miller, Mrs. K. L. Short, Kans.; A. S. Hamilton, Miss Velma Hamill, Ontario; Walter Hepburn, James A. Smith, B. C.; Mrs. I. G. Burbeck, Alberta; Mrs. P. H. Eggert, Texas. Following local boards: Henry Goldman, Kansas City; John M. Casey, Boston; W. T. Willis, Chicago. National Board of Review; W. D. McGuire. The following were also in the party, but not censors: Mrs. Harry L. Knapp, Mrs. George Heller, Miss Miller, daughter of Kansas delegate; V. R. Gardick, Philadelphia mgr.; Mrs. Henry Goldman, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Berman and son.

New Theatres Raise Admission Tax Figures?

Myrtle Theatre,
Detroit, Mich.,
August 20, 1921.

Mr. William A. Johnston,
Motion Picture News,
New York City.
Dear Sir:

Replying to your editorial in the issue of August 13th on "Where's the Slump?" Acording to your figures (and those figures are undoubtedly correct) this hullabaloo about a slump is all nonsense. But if you will take into consideration some of the things behind these figures, the slump assumes a more definite form.

During the last twelve months many new theatres of large seating capacity have been completed. For instance, the Capitol in New York. If the receipts of the Capitol are $20,000 a week, the admission tax from this one theatre alone would be over $100,000 a year. If you will consider the tremendous amount in admission taxes being paid by the new palatial theatres which have been opened during the past year, the slump becomes readily apparent, for the admission tax was paid by a vastly greater number of theatres, which have a large seating capacity, charging high admission prices.

The cost of operating these new theatres requires vast sums of money, so it may be true that the sum total of admissions were greater up to May, 1921, than ever before, and at the same time most of these theatres may have operated at a loss.

Some producers and distributors after reading your editorial may come to the conclusion that there is no need of adjusting film rentals—that exhibitors can pay what they paid during the peak of 1920 for film rentals.

Please give my conclusions on this matter the publicity they deserve.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) J. E. Stocker.

Georgia Escapes Added Tax as Proposed Bill Fails

In a most dramatic rally, and by an extremely narrow margin, the five per cent amusement tax passed by the Georgia State Senate by a vote of 30 to 13, on August 8th, failed to pass in the general session August 11th, the house and Senate adopting the report of the conference committee, striking out the five per cent amusement tax, and passing the tax of $2,500 on Atlanta's annual week of Grand Opera.

A somewhat similar bill introduced in the Texas Legislature last week by Representative Melson calls for an additional tax on the box-office of amusements. A quarterly occupation tax of one per cent would be levied on each admission ticket to motion picture theatres, opera, concerts, circuses, ball games and practically all other forms of amusement.

COOKING UP AN AD CAMPAIGN

MET Tony Sarg few weeks ago. Started discussing the Fall advertising campaign on Tony Sarg's Almanac. "I don't know what to advertise," he said with a laugh. "Picture is sold for all the territory; leading exhibitors in every key city have booked it, and already they are writing us letters telling how pleased they are. Men like Reisenfeld, Saenger, Partington, Buhler——"

"Say," we countered, "There's an advertising campaign right there. Remember your London Sketch caricatures of famous personages that gained international notice? Y'know, the kind of study you get five hundred and a thousand dollars for from the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines?

"Why not do something like that for the picture business? Bring the smaller exhibitors face to face with the big key city fellows who like the Almanac so much. Lots of picture folk would like to see what these prominent exhibitors really look like—not the way they appear in the stilted, cut and dried half-tone cuts. Give us a series of cartoon studies of Reisenfeld, Partington and the rest. C'mon be a good fellow!"

Sure enough—he's going to do it. Herbert M. Dawley and Tony Sarg, creators of the Almanac, journeyed right off to Nantucket, summer home of the artist, and the photographer snapped them as they read The News for inspiration, got to work on the preliminary sketches, and then down to real labor.

Next week the series starts in The News. It's advertising—but it isn't. Of course, it's exclusive in The News—and, of course, you'll watch for it. Because a Tony Sarg cartoon series isn't an every day event.

No. Ohio Exhibitors Hold Annual Meeting

The Northern Ohio Exhibitors League held its annual election of officers last week at the League headquarters in Cleveland, with the following results: H. H. Lustig was reappointed president for the third consecutive term. Abe Kramer, vice-president; G. Brown, secretary; B. Z. Lavine, treasurer. The executive board membership, in addition to the unexpired terms of W. J. Slimm, D. Schumann, Walter Horsey and Moe Horwitz, also includes the newly appointed members, C. W. Masterman, manager of the Heights theatre, Cleveland; Frank Gross, Cleveland exhibitor, and Mr. Smith, Toledo exhibitor. A. M. P. A. to Wage Free Screen War

"WE have been dragged against our wishes into politics, and now by the eternal gods we will fight our way out."

In this way, J. W. O'Mahoney, advertising director for Educational Films, announced to representatives of the press on Wednesday afternoon the launching of a campaign by the A. M. P. A. to secure the repeal of the censorship law in the state of New York. A "Freedom of the Screen Committee," of which Mr. O'Mahoney is the chairman, has been formed to lead in the fight. This committee is composed of the trade-paper editors and A. M. P. A. members associated with leading producer, distributor, and exhibitor organizations in the industry.

An executive-committeeman will take charge of the local campaign in every Assembly district of the state. Speakers, slides, posters, press notices, stories—all directed towards the task of winning a repeal of the state censorship law—will be placed at the service of the industry and every department in it.

"As citizens and taxpayers," declared Mr. O'Mahoney, "we will address questionnaires to every candidate for the New York Assembly this fall and will ask each one, irrespective of his political affiliation, to state plainly his stand on censorship. To those who declare in favor of a repeal of the censorship statute we will lend every lawful support irrespective of the candidate's political ties. With regards to those who declare for state censorship, we will use every legitimate means in our power to bring about their defeat.

"The A. M. P. A.," declared Mr. O'Mahoney, "is a strictly neutral organization, not associated financially with any other association in the industry and yet representative in its membership of every element in the industry. The A. M. P. A. represents the greatest aggregation of advertising and publicity experts and public speakers in the country. We are at the service of the entire industry and only await the call of whoever wishes to make use of our services in combatting this un-American censorship.. This industry has studiously avoided politics up to the present. The politicians have foisted censorship on us, and I sincerely believe their real motive was to throttle the screen and make it a vehicle of political propaganda. We have been dragged against our wishes into politics and now by the eternal gods we will fight our way out."

Charles O'Reilly, president of the M. P. T. O. of New York State, in a letter to Mr. O'Mahoney, expressed his hearty approval of the A. M. P. A.'s campaign and said the matter would be shortly submitted for the endorsement of the executive committee of his organization. A letter from the National Association's headquarters warmly commended the plan also.

Mr. O'Mahoney said the Committee was a permanent one and that later the fight against censorship and similar movements would be extended to other states besides New York.

Referendum on Censorship in Massachusetts

Petitions signed by twenty-five thousand certified voters of Massachusetts were filed with the Secretary of State in Boston, Tuesday, August 23, requesting a referendum on the question of film censorship in that state. This automatically nullifies the Massachusetts censorship law until the voters at the November election in 1922 decide whether or not they want screen censorship. Otherwise the film censorship law would have become operative in Massachusetts January 1, 1922. Under the Massachusetts law, fifteen thousand signatures to the referendum would have insured the question of screen censorship being passed upon by ballot.

It is the first time in the history of the picture industry that the voters of any state have been given the opportunity to pass upon the question of legalized screen control.

The petitions were gathered under the direction of Judge J. Albert Brackett of Boston, representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The film exchange managers of Boston aided Judge Brackett in this work. The Allied Theatres of Massachusetts also cooperated with the National Association in securing the signatures of voters.

W. A. True, committeeman from Hartford, Conn., next presented two cases for Mr. Zukor's immediate attention. The first concerns Maurice Pouzzner, operator of the Gem Theatre at Willimantic, Conn., who has been a steady customer of Paramount. Last year, according to Mr. True, Black took over the Loomer Opera House in Willimantic. To date, however, Mr. Black has not used this house, declared Mr. True. Black's lease on the Opera House expires November 15th, added Mr. True, and now Pouzzner fears that Black may renew his lease and eventually deprive him of the Paramount service.

The second case presented by Mr. True involves Mr. Zukermann of Norwich, Conn. Mr. Zukermann runs the Breed Theatre and the Majestic Roof Garden in that town. He also has been using Paramount service for some time. At the present time, declared Mr. True, the Strand Theatre in Norwich, owned by Mr. Davison, is open for sale, and Mr. Black recently began negotiations for the taking over of this house. In the event of Black securing control of the Strand, continued Mr. True, Mr. Zuckermann expects that he will be deprived of the Paramount service.

Mr. Zukor promised immediate action in both cases.

Missouri-Kansas Exhibitors to Meet Sept. 12

The date for the joint convention of the exhibitors of Kansas and Missouri has been set for September 12 and 13. It will be held at the Hotel Baltimore in Kansas City, Mo. Governor Henry J. Allen, of Kansas; Governor Arthur M. Hyde, of Missouri; Attorney General Hopkins of Kansas; Senators Capper and Curtis of Kansas, and Senator Reed of Missouri will be guests at the convention, and each is expected to talk on blue laws and the proposed taxation.

The committee consisting of R. G. Liggett, R. R. Biechele and M. Van Praag, of Kansas; and A. M. Eisner, C. H. Burkey and L. Goldman, of Missouri, have arranged an elaborate entertainment program. This is the first time the exhibitors of these two states have met jointly.

Rickard's Fight Pictures Prohibited in Chicago

Chief of Police Fitzmorris, of Chicago, who also is ex-officio head of the city's moving picture board, has announced that any attempt on the part of Tex Rickard or any other person to show the moving pictures of the Dempsy-Carpentier bout at a public exhibition in Chicago will be stopped by the police.

Mr. Rickard brought the Dempsey-Carpentier fight film to Chicago last week and showed it to disabled soldiers at some of the local hospitals, for which he was held to the United States Grand Jury under ten thousand dollar bonds.

"Our policy is not to permit the showing of pictures which depict unlawful acts," said the Chief. The Dempsey-Carpentier fight would have been unlawful in Illinois. Consequently no permit for these pictures will be issued by the censorship board.

In Canada the fight pictures were shown at Fort William, Ontario, despite the fact that they had been condemned by the Ontario Board of Censors. It was explained by the Board to the reformers that the extreme sections of the province were allowed to be governed by the rulings of the Manitoba Board of Censors, because of their great distance from Toronto. The Manitoba Board had passed the feature. The picture was also approved by the Quebec Board and was shown in Hull, Quebec.

Music and The Theatre

"Fall and Winter Music Questions"

By Charles D. Isaacson

THE main question I could propound is this:

Are you ready for your big year —ready in a musical way?

Just what does this mean? Just what does this cover?

Let me survey the situation with the manager or the musical director.

First of all, in the case of the manager —Have you the right musical director?

Do you believe implicitly in him? Do you feel that confidence which permits you to go about your other business with satisfaction?

(If you are not satisfied with your musical director, settle the question at once. Either permit the man to prove his worth, remove your prejudices, perhaps you're wrong, perhaps you're doing him, yourself and your public an injustice. But if you cannot be satisfied, well, get a man you believe to be good. The musical director is the starting point, the pivotal centre of your music. Whether it's a one-man orchestra or a huge organization and ensemble, it's exactly the same principle. In selecting a musical director get a real musician—a man who can play the best music—opera, good solos—a man who knows the finest things of the standards of all time. Don't just pick a jazz-ragtime-vaudeville man. For, while the musical director must be able to perform the popular hits and catch the jazz spirit at times, nevertheless, it is impossible to succeed with a man whose level of attainment is cheap stuff. Where will he be when it comes to performing what is essential in your show where good art is demanded? Your musical director, then, must be a good musician who has no false dignity concerning what he must play. He must be quick to see the need for familiar music at the right occasion. He must be adaptable and he must have a sense of humor. Principally, he must be aware of the "alphabet of musical meanings"—knowing how to pick his own music to a picture by its plain, unmistakable descriptive meanings.)

If you have an orchestra, is it too ambitious in its number of members (size of personnel is a thing so many yearn for, to "put on airs," and in many that I have seen I have made up my mind that I could clip one-third of the men and be nearer to the number justified by other conditions. On the other hand, have you enough musicians? Are you saving on musicians through losing good will among your customers? That is one of the biggest mistakes I have observed in all this musical discussion. So many managers think it is just as good to have one lonely player, or three or six, when the addition of others to the ensemble would exert a vital change in the whole atmosphere of the show. Please do not imagine that I believe the one-man orchestra doesn't belong! Indeed, there are some houses where one good organist or pianist is better fitted than other places with their five-piece bands. The point is to know whether you're right in having a large or small group and whether you have all good, loyal, intelligent, artistic players, with your interests at heart.

Question: Have you put your organ in good shape? Does it "speak" promptly enough, or is it too slow in answering the keyboard?

Is there anything wrong in the acoustics of your house and can anything be done to improve that without too much expense?

Is your musical library sufficiently stocked? Have you the standard works covering all ideas, moods, stories? Are you fixed for the late popular hits? Is your library well indexed according to its descriptive, emotional mood aspects? Is it easy to get at? Are you acquainted with it so you can pick just the best part for every scene?

Question: Are you paying the music tax? If not, have you made sure you're not going to fall into the trap of using some of this taxable music and so being heavily fined?

Have you joined the Association of Motion Picture Musical Interests and so added your name to this important force for better picture music and conditions?

Have you looked into local union conditions and prevented in advance any mid-season upsets?

(In case of trouble with arbitrary union chiefs, investigate what happened to the powerful New York City local—which was fired from the national federation because of its high-handed methods. The union cannot be unfair with you, and most of the executives in the musical federation do mean, I honestly believe, to do the right thing.)

Are you looking into the new type of music cue sheets? Have you investigated the synchronized music idea?

What have you done to line up cooperation among your local music teachers, schools, conservatories, etc.? Have you planned any special music events for prestige?

Are you going to use solos, duets, trios, etc.? Have you spoken with the better known agencies now booking and routing this sort of necessity? Have you investigated the folks who are winning popularity in this growing field of usefulness? Isn't there some valuable local talent waiting for the asking?

Can you use some ballet numbers?

What are you doing to satisfy the growing craving for opera selections, very fine, popular classics?

What are you planning in the way of special publicity for the newspaper music critics? Are you getting your share? What are you doing to take advantage of the call for music news in the picture houses.

If I succeed through the questions indicated above in making my readers do some thinking which will put new life into the music of the coming season, I will be well pleased.

Now—if you have any questions to fire at me, do not forget that that is what I am here for—to be of service to you in any musical matter.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

So rapidly is the Chicago theatre being pushed to completion that Balaban & Katz were able to move their office from the State-Lake Building to their new palatial house last week and from now on their headquarters will be on State street over the foyer of "The Chicago." The lower of the two floors above the foyer will be occupied by the executive branch of Balaban & Katz's corporation and the top floor will be used for the purpose of shaping presentation numbers and arranging programs for all the B. & K. theatres including the Chicago, Tivoli, Riviera and Central Park.

W. W. Brumberg, First National salesman, carries a Dempsey wallop in his right hand as a couple of hold-ups found one night last week when they attempted to drag him into a dark doorway on Wabash avenue between Harrison and Seventh. One of the crooks seized him by the collar and tie from the front and the other grasped him from behind, but left Brumberg's right arm loose and the film man swung on the jaw of the man in front, knocking out that individual. His other assailant took to his heels, running north on Wabash as Mr. Brumberg sprinted rapidly south in search of a policeman. Brumberg has been kept busy receiving congratulations of film row on his helping to reduce crime in Chicago.

Manager I. L. Lesserman, of Universal, has sold his home at 6020 Vernon avenue, in which he has lived for the past ten years, and purchased a handsome house at 5626 South Park avenue, which he will occupy with his family in the future.

Henry Ellman has left for California on a three weeks' trip during which he will combine business and pleasure.

John Allen has sold his Lyric Theatre to Sam Klamka, who will run the house on the same policies which made it a paying proposition for Mr. Allen.

Manager Silverman, of Select Pictures Corporation's Chicago branch, announces that Lee Woodyatt, a veteran of the local organization, has been promoted to the position of sales manager. Mr. Woodyatt has been connected with Select's Chicago organization since its inception. Prior to that he was a popular motion picture exhibitor at Rock Island. He has one of the widest acquaintances of any picture man and enjoys a great popularity among exhibitors of Illinois who will be glad to hear of his advancement. C. H. Miller has been added to Select's Chicago sales staff and will cover the northside territory.

C. A. Barber, of the Barber-Sturn Studios, producers of a special news weekly for the Circle and other Indianapolis theatres, was a visitor to Chicago this week.

Douglas D. Rothacker is spending two weeks in Missouri in the interests of the Rothacker practical picture division. Capt. Walter Wanderwell, who is on the last lap of his "seven times around the world" journey, came to Chicago last week and was at the Rothacker Chicago laboratory with pictures which he has taken along the way. He and his party are making the trip by auto and steamship and are making appearances at motion picture and vaudeville houses in connection with the films he has taken.

District Manager Stern, of Universal, is back at the Chicago headquarters after a vacation spent at Detroit and Mt. Clemens, Michigan.

Country Sales Manager Eichenlaub, of First National, has added four men to his staff within the last few days. They are E. I. Saiter, recently connected with Metro, who will cover the southwest part of Illinois; J. M. Howland, another salesman well known in the Chicago territory, who recently covered city territory for Favorite Players, who will work the central part of the state for First National; H. W. Fisher, who has been associated with the Lynch Enterprises for some time, who will cover Illinois; and S. Andrews, who comes from St. Louis, where he was connected with Associated Producers, to travel the southern Illinois territory. W. H. Tracy, another of Mr Eichenlaub's salesmen, is back from a three weeks' vacation, and the entire force is busy on the campaign for Fall pictures.

Three Australian exhibitors were in Chicago this week and made Universal's local exchange their headquarters, as they are both users of Universal pictures. The visitors were Messrs. Quaile of Sydney and Thorp and Chislow. They report that Mary Miles Minter is Australia's favorite film actress, although many other of the American stars are well liked. Hobart Henley, a veteran Universal director, was another visitor at the Chicago exchange this week. Mr. Henley is on his way to take charge of one of Universal companies.

O. F. Spahr, of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, is taking a weeks' vacation fishing in northern Wisconsin and Michigan and expects to land some muskelonges before returning, Mr. Spahr is looking forward to excellent business this Fall and Winter and is getting himself in first-class physical condition for the big selling campaign he plans to put on.

H. W. Given has been appointed district manager for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at Chicago, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Joseph Gilday, and it is said has the distinction of being the youngest district manager in the country. Mr. Given, who has arrived from Pittsburgh, where he was manager of that branch, to take up his new duties, although a young man, has been connected with the industry for thirteen years, gaining his first film experience in Philadelphia with Lubin. He became a member of the Paramount organization last year in Cleveland and was promoted from a salesman there to manager at Pittsburgh. His fine personality and ability will make him a valued member of the Chicago film colony.

"The Affair of Anatol," which opened at Ascher's Roosevelt, in the heart of the Chicago loop, last week, has proven the greatest box office success of any picture ever shown at that house, sixty-six thousand paid admissions being the record for the first week's run, although the house is not of great seating capacity, with the prospect that the second week will equal and possibly surpass the first. In the opinion of Ascher Brothers this feature with its brilliant array of popular stars lives up to everything that the Paramount organization said in praise of it, and it is a sure fire box office attraction.

A number of managers associated with Ascher Brothers organization recently have been shifted. The location of some of the managers is as follows: Ralph Wettstein, who is looking after the Merrill at Milwaukee; John Quigley, manager of the Capitol, Cincinnati; Dave Rice, who will take charge of the West Englewood; Joe Koppel, manager of the Kenwood; Nat Rottenberg going to the Rosewood; Harry Swan, the Peerless; Howard Donaldson, the Kalo, and Ed Mikoden, the Forest Park.

The first week of "The Golem" at Orchestra Hall showed the picture such a strong box office attraction that it will be retained at Orchestra Hall for two weeks more. According to Max Goldstine the best business of the Orchestra Hall season was done with "The Golem" and on Saturday night even this big hall was not large enough to hold the crowds anxious to see this feature and there was a big hold out.

Joe Hopp reports that the remodeling of the Majestic at Rock Island is progressing rapidly, and that the house will be ready to reopen on September 4th. A new policy is to be inaugurated this Fall and Winter. A two hour show will be given at the Majestic, one hour of pictures and one hour of tabloid musical act, a contract for Hyatt Time having been signed up.

Eddie Quinlan, formerly with Pathe, has joined the sales staff of Vitagraph's Chicago exchange and will cover northern Illinois. A new member of Manager Brimer's office staff will be Frank Williams, who will take charge of the booking department for Vitagraph.

This cut shows the stage setting and characters appearing in a prologue for "Wedding Bells" presented by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre

Artistic Prologue Number Staged at Brooklyn Strand

Things romantic, artistic and conventional in the matter of weddings was made into a composite stage effect by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman and his aides of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre in planning the prologue presented for "Wedding Bells."

Mr. Hyman sought to produce the effect of a modern delicately done wedding invitation. Much silver and white and pink was utilized both in scenic set and in the dressing of the singing and dancing principals, for soloists and dancers participated in the prologue.

Of course there was a pretty bride, a groom in silken knickerbockers, powdered wig and buckled slippers. When the curtains parted one imagined as the principals posed that there was before them a huge and delicately contrived engraved wedding bid. Suddenly there appeared a wedding bell veiled with orange blossom sprigs. Edgar Kiefer, baritone, sang "The Yeoman's Wedding" for this scene. The curtains lifted and revealed two tiny dancers, they might have been baby bridesmaids. These dancers interpreted "Gavotte Piquante" and "Polka."

Hamrick Secures Newspaper Cooperation at Seattle

John Hamrick, manager of the Blue Mouse theatre, Seattle, secured newspaper co-operation in his exploitation of "The Ten Dollar Raise," that was productive of excellent results.

The theatre offered prizes aggregating $50 for a competition confined exclusively to married women. "What I Would Do If My Husband Got a Ten Dollar Raise" was the basis of letters invited by newspaper. For the best letter a grand prize of $25 was offered, together with a second prize of $10, a third of $5, a fourth and fifth of $2.50 each and five of $1.00 each.

Titleless Picture Essays on "Old Swimmin' Hole"

As a means of attracting extra attention to "The Old Swimmin' Hole," Manager J. W. Goodspeed of the Isis theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich., offered several cash prizes and theatre tickets to the person who wrote the best essays on why or why not title-less pictures are best.

This gave Goodspeed an opportunity to advertise that "The Old Swimmin' Hole" marked a radical departure from the old school of motion picture making and put it up to his patrons' pride to tell just why the picture was different.

The essays attracted considerable attention, all of the prize-winning offerings being printed in one of the newspapers.

Robson Advertises in Italian Newspaper for "My Cousin"

Bill Robson, Pittsburgh Paramount exploiter, secured two pages of tie-up ads, as exploitation for "My Cousin," booked recently at the Olympic theatre, Pittsburgh, for an edition of the principal Italian newspaper in the Pittsburgh territory.

In addition to the newspaper ads, Robson secured three important downtown window displays on the picture and other advertising tie-ups.

The result of the exploitation on the Caruso picture was highly satisfactory.

Here is a lobby display on "The Heart of Maryland" used by the Royal theatre, New York

Lobby display for "Jim the Penman" by Frank Lacey, manager of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore.

Giant Fountain Pen Used in Lobby Display

A huge fountain pen—six feet in length—and a large cut-out of a man's hand grasping a pen and being grasped by another guiding hand were novel features of the lobby designed by Frank Lacey, manager of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., for the showing of "Jim, the Penman."

The great pen and the hand cut-out were suspended from either side of the Majestic marquee with no background other than provided by the ticket window and entrance doors, some 20 feet beyond. In other words, they were so conspicuous that while the usual cased-in-art cards and three-sheets were in evidence, the first glance at the lobby was on these two eccentric features. Both features were leads as to the play, yet each was a teaser in its own line and without telling the nature of the plot, invoked curiosity.

The expense of this lobby was practically nil. The huge pen was borrowed from a stationery company advertising a certain brand of fountain pen. The cut-out was made from 24-sheet. Yet the entire front was chuck full of personality, pep and suitability. It cost little money but it brought in much.

Creamer Builds Another Lobby Display Novelty

For "Through the Back Door," playing recently at the Orpheum theatre, Atchison, Kansas, John W. Creamer, projectionist and exploitation man for the Orpheum, arranged an attractive lobby display from mounted cut-outs. From a six sheet Mr. Creamer obtained a large head of Mary. Dark green paint with a brush wrought an effect that resembled a lily. Lettering on beaver board was set out from the picture about a foot. Behind the lettering, a number of red lights and a five hundred watt nitrogen flasher was located. The effect was a red flood on the picture of Miss Pickford which was killed by the brilliant white of the nitrogen light when the flasher was on.

Eden Musee in Lobby Wins for Dean Film

O. L. Meister of the Whitehouse theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., gained a novel effect for his lobby display on "Outside the Law" recently by transforming his front into a sort of Eden Musee. He used four wax figures.

Two of them he dressed as policemen and stood them up at the edge of the pavement with traffic standards calling attention to "Outside the Law."

Another of the dummies was dressed as a Chinaman and mounted over the entrance, surrounded by Chinese lanterns, to carry the Chinatown atmosphere of the picture. Grotesque Chinese masks also were used.

The other wax dummy was dressed in convict garb and put in a cage at one side of the lobby.

The lobby also was well decorated with oil paintings, lobby display cards and posters. The combined effect attracted widespread attention, reports Meister, who admits unusual business during the hot weather run of the picture.

Atlantic City Exploitation Campaign Gets Results

For the premiere showing of "Why Girls Leave Home" at the Bijou theatre, Atlantic City, a most thorough exploitation campaign was executed. Jitneys in town carried a painted banner with the caption, "Why Do Girls Leave Home?" buttons with the title of the picture on one side were distributed to waiters in hotels and restaurants of the city; twenty-five boys gave out circus heralds; a tie-up was made for a window display with a lingerie shop; the homes were canvassed and milk drivers and delivery boys hung teaser cards on door knobs.

Harris Borrows Idea from County Fair History

Will D. Harris, manager of the Grand theatre, Columbus, O., borrowed a page from the exploitation book of the secretaries of fairs when he mailed reading notices on "Over the Hill," booked for the Grand for the same week as that scheduled for the annual Ohio State Fair, to the several hundred editors of newspapers located in the territory from which the fair draws, together with a letter inclosing passes for the show and a nicely worded request for publication for his notice.

The letter told the editors about the booking for fair week, stated that the picture had enjoyed a long run in New York and further impressed the readers that it was an unusual attraction.

Eisner Adapts "Wax Figure Man" Idea

Business had been slow in Kansas City, so A. M. Eisner, owner of the Palace theatre, and secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Missouri, decided that something had to be done to bring the public out of its apparent stupor.

He finally hit upon a plan. A home talent actor and impersonator "extraordinaire" was obtained. His duties for the week were to imitate a wax figure, "automatically" walking about in front of the theatre, stepping directly in front of crowds and otherwise forcing attraction upon himself. Simple as the scheme was, it worked, and worked well.

Cooperative Advertising Helps "Deception" at El Paso

J. M. Edgar, manager of the Palace theatre, El Paso, Texas, secured a page of co-operative advertising from the merchants of El Paso to exploit "Deception" when it played the Palace.

Each merchant's allotment of space was captioned: "There is no Deception in the policy of business with the public."

Goldman Produces Another Novelty Film

The Missouri State Fair celebrating the centennial of Missouri's entrance into the United States has attracted state-wide attention and is a subject of discussion among all residents of the commonwealth. The fact that this event is of such importance gave Managing Director William Goldman of the Missouri theatre the idea of privately filming the various pageants and occurrences of interest and displaying them on his own screen for the delectation of St. Louisans who were unable to get away even for a day to make the trip to Sedalia where the Fair is in progress.

With the aid of the Missouri photographers a journey was made to the Fair grounds for three days when all the opening ceremonies and pageantry celebrations took place. More than 2,000 feet of film was exposed resulting in a memorial picture. The finished picture was shown at the Missouri theatre next day attracting the largest crowds in the history of the summer months.

This was in addition to the regular program which consisted of presentations, comedy, weekly events, and the feature—Wealth.

Big Publicity Secured for Few Free Tickets

One hundred and forty free tickets, good only on the first day of the showing, gained two full pages of advertising for the Signa theatre, of Lima, Ohio, on its showing of "I Am Guilty."

The advertising manager of the Lima News and Times-Democrat was interested in the proposition of soliciting advertising based upon the title of the picture from the merchants of the city. Each advertisement was to contain a misspelled word and the theatre offered free tickets for the readers of the paper who first brought a list of the corrected spellings to the office of the newspaper.

Two full pages were run on the Sunday preceding the opening of the picture. Publicity stills were used in nearly each one of the advertisements as illustrations. Readers of the paper were notified that the first twenty who appeared at the newspaper office on Monday morning, with a copy of the advertisement on which each of the misspelled words were marked would receive two tickets to the Sigma. The next one hundred would each receive one ticket.

Ferriss Puts New Trimmings on Old Exploitation Stunt

An old stunt built on 1921 lines proved an excellent business-getter for the New Palace theatre of St. Paul. The stunt was a baby show which coupled with a new idea set a record in publicity circles.

The New Palace theatre was on the front page of the St. Paul Daily News for twenty consecutive days as a result of tying up the baby show with the newspaper. In addition to this publicity which could not be purchased on the front page the newspaper gave the theatre two large Sunday layouts and two pages of advertising.

Careful investigation showed that six out of every ten local pictures brought to the newspaper for publication are of babies. It was decided that a movie test would prove most popular on the theory that a mother always wants to get her child in pictures and especially in the "movies."

Arrangements were made with a local film company to shoot the first 100 babies that entered. One hour after the doors of the theatre opened more than 1,000 mothers and babies were crowded into the lobby.

A hurried consultation between the theatre manager, the newspaper editor and Finkelstein and Ruben, publicity men, resulted in the announcements that 250 babies would be photographed.

The lobby of the New Palace theatre was turned into a motion picture studio. Thousands blocked the traffic on Seventh street watching the camera man at work.

The following week the complete reel of babies was shown on the screen at the New Palace theatre.

The test brought out 33,187 votes in the week during which the pictures showed.

B. C. Ferriss, publicity director of the St. Paul houses of Finkelstein and Ruben, worked out the idea of a baby show with Howard Kahn, editor of the Daily News.

Robson Using Dolls as Exploitation Mediums

Wm. N. Robson, exploitation representative for Famous Players-Lasky Corp. at Pittsburgh, has been using a stunt with dolls which is comparatively inexpensive and very practical in so far as its exploitation value is concerned.

For twenty dollars he states he secures a dozen dolls from a novelty dealer. The kind that are used at bazaars and carnivals. They are very attractive, have silk dresses, human hair wigs with hair nets, and all the trimmings which catch the feminine eye of all ages.

The dolls are arranged attractively in the lobby for several days before the event and are a never failing source of attraction for people who pass the theatre.

Then he gets a gross of gas balloons and enough cards printed to attach one card to each balloon.

The card states that it is good for admission for a certain performance. The cards are good for admission to the theatre. A number of dolls used in the display are also given away.

A Novel Publicity Campaign

Branford Theatre, Newark, Ties Up With Dempsey-Carpentier Bout for "Scrap Iron"

THE Branford theatre, Newark, pulled one of the cleverest bits of showmanship that has been done in years for the week of July 2nd. With the entire world fight mad over the Carpentier-Dempsey bout and Newark being within three miles of the actual scene of the fight, D. J. Shepherd, Managing Director, booked "Scrap Iron" for the week. Then a novel exploitation campaign was planned. Three hundred cards 30 x 42 made up from reproductions of a still showing a fight scene from the picture, a picture of Carpentier, the letter which the latter sent to Ray congratulating him on the feature, and an English translation of same, were placed in the most conspicious windows of Newark.

A smaller and more dignified card was made up with a pose of Ray and Carpentier and the letter in the center with the reading "Charles Ray was appearing in Scrap Iron," and in one of the corners in small letters "Courtesy of the Branford theatre." These were placed in all the large department stores and in other places where it has never been possible to get anything in their windows. Sets of boxing gloves were placed with each card—and were announced as the official size glove to be used in the Carpentier-Dempsey bout. To further this exploitation a copy from the above card was made and 100,000 throw-aways were printed and at 2:30 p. m., on the day of the fight an airplane left Newark with these copies. While flying directly over the fight arena they were released. Several of the New York special editions mentioned it in their fight notes which was an unlimited publicity at a low cost. No matter where these one sheet cards were placed they attracted large crowds at all times during the day. Several laughs were added to the feature by the manner of presentation.

In reviewing the picture, Production Manager A. Gordon Reid noticed that in the second round the crowd at the fight all stood up thereby hiding a view from the audience of the ring action so one of the ushers were planted in the center of the house, and as this scene was flashed on the screen with no music played during the fighting scene, the usher yelled "Sit down, Sit down will you?" In the climax where Ray knocks out Battling Burke, as the referee is tolling off the fatal ten, the drummer used a canary whistle. The answer of this campaign, although an expensive one, brought the desired results to the Branford and the capacity business for the week was enjoyed.

Mis-spelled Word Stunt Used at Marion

An ingenious adaptation of the mis-spelled word test to moving picture exploitation is afforded by the stunt recently put over by Verner Hicks, of the Family theatre, Marion, Ill., in his exploitation of "Reputation."

Hicks bought four full pages from the Marion Daily Republican and then divided the space among the merchants of the town. He had no trouble in getting them to come in with him on the plan.

On each day for the four days immediately preceding the showing of "Reputation," he used a page ad made up of merchant ads built around the word REPUTATION. His own ad on the page was a description of the test. In some of the ads words had been intentionally misspelled. Each reader who sent in the correct word received a pass to the showing.

The newspaper co-operated wholeheartedly with Hicks in putting this stunt over. Front page spread stories were used during the four days and much publicity given to the prize winners and to the picture.

This stunt was put over by Hicks without any cost to himself, except the time involved. The advertising space leased to the various merchants paid for the space devoted in the ad pages to Hicks' own ad concerning "Reputation."

Teaser Signs Advertising Picture Made Permanent

The city fathers of Robinson, Ill., thought so much of teaser "What's Your Hurry?" signs which J. C. Hewitt, manager of the Strand theatre, Robinson, had induced them to allow to be placed on boulevard light bases that they requested him to allow the advertising to remain after the showing was over.

The signs now serve as an admonition to motorists to go slow when in the city.

San Diego Theatre Presents Atmospheric Prologue

"Dream Street" was presented at the Plaza theatre, Santa Diego, Cal., with a prologue that found marked favor with the theatre's audience. The number was staged under the direction of Russell H. Rogers, manager, and Charles W. Crouch, of the Plaza staff.

The scene for the prologue was a street in London's famous Limehouse district. At one side of the stage beneath a picturesque old lamp post sat an aged Chinese merchant who puffed at a long pipe. On the opposite side of the stage was the street fiddler who drew forth his message of evil from his old violin.

In the midst of the musical score a local dancer impersonating "Gypsy Fair" of the picture entered, carrying a basket of flowers and attired as Carol Dempster in the feature.

At the close of the dance the lights were dimmed and the titles screened.

Ottawa Theatre Produces Home Talent Picture

Loew's Ottawa theatre has been busy with a moving picture producing stunt which has been engineered by Manager W. F. Brooker. The picture was taken on the stage and in the lobby of the theatre and the members of the cast were patrons of the house, having been selected from a great crowd of applicants. After the completion of the scenes, the audience was given a further chance to name the title for the picture.

Manager Brooker advertised the stunt extensively in the newspapers, in store windows, on the street cars and on the billboards. It was also described in the printed program of the house and announcements were displayed in a window of a store which is a part of the Loew building. It had the effect of arousing wide interest and of stimulating attendance.

Uses Dog-Catcher's Wagon as Street Ballyhoo

Of all the myriad exploitation that has blossomed around "Peck's Bad Boy," Stan Brown's contributions during the run of the picture at the New Palace, Superior, Wis., comes pretty near winning the blue ribbon.

Stan opened his campaign by making special window displays, in every store in the block where his house is located. These included cutouts of Jackie, with topical verse applying to the store where the display appeared, giving the appearance of a special ad gotten up by the store itself. For instance, in a bakery, he used this one:

Peck's Bad Boy was a regular pest;
To eat Ma's doughnuts he tried his best.
But they made him sick and that made him mind—
They weren't the ——— Bakery kind.

The opening day of his three-day run he used a street ballyhoo, made up of a mule and wagon, with banners and six sheets mounted on the latter. A bunch of carrots dangling from a long pole out of Maud's reach got a laugh. Each day he altered the material on the banners and says he had the natives standing around watching for the parade every day.

On the last day of his run he pulled the pippin of his repertoire, discarding the mule and wagon in favor of the local dog catcher's van. This, filled with mutts, had banners on the cage reading:

"See Jackie Coogan turn the dogs loose in 'Peck's Bad Boy.'"

Stan's lobby display consisted of a cutout from the six sheet showing Jackie teasing the woman of the grocery store by snitching her purse, the cutouts being mounted and set against a grocery background.

"Love, Hate and a Woman" was directed by Charles T. Horan, and produced by J. G. Pictures Corporation.

Announcement of this forthcoming series is another indication of the greatly enlarged scope of Arrow activities, and but one of a list of coming announcements which, it is said, will stir the trade. Arrow plans are already far advanced on a number of other attractive features which will be unfolded in due time.

A special advertising campaign based on the increased activities of Arrow Film Corporation is being conducted in this and other trade papers. Response to the first announcement has been almost without precedent, and Dr. Shallenberger's large office force has been taxed with the correspondence from independent exchange men and exhibitors.

Two Reel "Real Romances"

Thornton Baston to Screen Episodes of Real People of the East

AMONG the newest things in films is the idea behind the present activities of J. Thornton Baston, player-director, popularly familiar through his successes in the current Pearl White Picture, "Virgin Paradise," also in "The Tiger's Cub," "The White Moll," "The Mountain Woman" and other productions.

The novelty of the Baston departure, according to its exploiter, is divided between the idea behind his material and the new manner of his products' marketing.

Simply, the Baston plan, now in work, aims at offering exhibitors throughout the country two reel romances based upon actual occurrences and involving real people, principally of the past, with the locales in each case the actual places that figured in the actual life dramas.

The picturesque periods in the lives of noted men and women of early America are thus reduced to film material, and the particular parts of the country, and for that matter locations in cities, are capitalized inasmuch as the subjects chosen for the first 52 of the Baston "Real Romances" have particular interest for certain neighborhoods or communities of the country. The Baston plan is cashing this interest of communities by specially exploiting in the included sections the "Romances" related to that particular section, city or state.

The love affair of Abraham Lincoln and Ann Rutledge, for instance, is located in the very section in Illinois where this period of Lincoln's young manhood was passed.

Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, San Francisco and New Orleans are among cities whose still standing picturesque locations will figure in "Real Romances" of their regions, and be exploited by Mr. Baston in the same lively manner.

The studio work related to the different subjects will be confined to screen workshops most contiguous to the localities being screened.

Mr. Baston's present workshop is the Biograph, where the Poe "Real Romance" will be staged in its interiors.

Another Foreign Sale on "Tarzan" Serial

This block of foreign territory has been secured by the Heminger Film Company, with headquarters in Berlin, Germany. The negotiations for the sale were handled by Louies Weiss, acting in behalf of the Tarzan organization.

Results from Screen-in-August Campaign

Even the originator of the "Screen in August" campaign is surprised at the manner in the private showing of pictures to exchange men and exhibitors throughout the country has stimulated business, according to Franklyn E. Backer who urged the campaign as an adjunct to "Independent's Month."

"The result of taking advantage of the month of August to acquaint as many as possible of the people interested in independent productions with the high class of pictures now available in both exchanges and exhibitors is not only surprisingly good in my own case," said Mr. Backer, "but independent exchange men from many parts of the country have informed me that, as a result of keeping their projection rooms busy, they look for exceptionally good business, not only for the month of September, but also for many weeks thereafter."

Strong Supporting Cast in "School Days"

When "School Days," made by Warner Bros. with Wesley Barry in the leading role, is released for exhibition there will be found a supporting cast of an unusually high calibre. Jerome Patrick who plays a prominent role in "School Days" is now rehearsing for the leading role in "The Nightcap," a new play which opens in New York during the month of August. Jack Gailsworthy, who plays the juvenile lead in "School Days," is to star in "Honey Dew," a musical play which opens in New York next season.

Frank Conlon, who portrays an important role in "School Days," has already made his mark as a comedian in numerous legitimate attractions. Other members of the cast are, Margaret Seddon, George Lesse, Frank Gilmore, Arlene Blackburn, Arnold Lucy, Jack Chapin and Mabel Sherman.

Independent Special Announced

"Heart of the North" for September, States Joe Brandt

AS a big special feature for Independence Month, "The Heart of the North," the super-special production of the Canadian Northwest produced by George H. Davis and Joe Brandt, in conjunction with Harry Revier, directed the production, is to be released in the State Right Market for Independence Month. The announcement of the decision to State Right this feature for September, comes from the New York offices of Joe Brandt at No. 1600 Broadway, following numerous conference by telephone and wire between Mr. Brandt in New York and Dr. Davis in San Francisco. As a result, full speed has been put on the final editing of the feature, and it is announced as complete and ready for booking.

The announcement is of special interest in that "Heart of the North" is the first big special feature production of Quality Film Productions, Inc., the new company formed with Joe Brandt as President and George H. Davis as Treasurer, for the making of a limited number of big productions, and is said to be a proof of big things to be expected from this company.

It is the opinion of Mr. Brandt and Mr. Davis that "The Heart of the North" will prove an even greater box-office attraction than "Isobel" which was released by Mr. Davis and has been cleaning up for exhibitors in exclusive first-run houses throughout the country.

Roy Stewart and Louise Lovely appearing in "The Heart of the North," produced by Joe Brandt and George H. Davis for States Rights distribution

Roy Stewart is the featured player, playing a dual role that of "Bad" Maupome, outlaw of the Canadian Northwest, and John Whitley of the Canadian Northwest Royal Mounted. The roles are said to require the finest shadings of differentiation, both parts being played by Mr. Stewart in many scenes in identical costumes, and each being made distinct by acting and power of expression alone.

Louise Lovely is the girl.

Harry Revier, who directed the production, is himself a French Canadian who has lived in the places where the locale of "The Heart of the North" is laid, and Mr. Brandt announces that he has, for that reason, been able to give the picture an especially fine picturization. This is Mr. Revier's first production since "The Son of Tarzan," which has been such a tremendous success everywhere. The story is by Edward V. Dowling, responsible for the scenarios of many successful features.

"While we intended to hold this picture for later release," says Joe Brandt, "we have decided to cancel our former plans and release it at once because we believe that now, with everyone giving of his best to make Independence Month a huge success, we could not, in all fairness, hold back this picture, and we believe that now is the right time for its release, while exhibitors everywhere can cash in on it."

Proof of the wisdom of this decision comes by wire from San Francisco that without a single line of advertising or exploitation, purely on the merits of the picture itself, the feature was taken over for that territory by All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco. A telegram of congratulation has been received by Mr. Brandt from Louis Hyman, General Manager of All Star.

Announce Equity Purchasers

Corrects Error in Regard to "Black Panther's Cub"

THRU error, it was announced in a recent issue of the film trade publications that "The Black Panther's Cub" would be handled in several far western states thru the Federated Film Exchanges. The facts in the case are these: The states of Washington, Oregon, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Colorado, Wyoming and New Mexico have been purchased and will be released as follows:

In the states of Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho, exhibitors will be able to secure bookings on "The Black Panther's Cub" thru the Greater Features, Inc., of Seattle. In the state of Utah, exhibitors will be able to book thru the Greater Features, Inc., of Salt Lake City. In Colorado, Wyoming and New Mexico, "The Black Panther's Cub" will be handled by the Lannon-Sheffield Exchanges of Denver.

J. T. Sheffield, who negotiated the deal for "The Black Panther's Cub" for these various territories, is now convinced that exhibitors throughout the country read the film trade papers, for altho no announcement was made of the purchase and distribution arrangements other than thru the nationally circulating film trade papers, the replies and requests for bookings on "The Black Panther's Cub" proved to him and to his associates beyond the shadow of a doubt that exhibitors leave no line unread in these publications.

Reports from the various cities now booking "The Black Panther's Cub" prove that the worst part of the depression is over and that business is looking up again to the huge satisfaction of exchangemen and especially exhibitors, many of whom have learned the very valuable lesson of going after business that heretofore has just naturally come by itself.

"This past hard spot," says Mr. Sheffield, "has proven a blessing in disguise to many theatre owners, for it has shown them that exploitation gets business irrespective of conditions and that with the prosperous era we are coming to more exhibitors will do better and bigger exploitation with splendid results to themselves and to the general improvement of the whole industry.

"It has also taught producers that the public wants better pictures, bigger pictures, produced more economically so that all hands down the line can make their legitimate profits without cutting down their show or jeopardizing their regular patronage on which the majority of the houses throughout the country depend.

"In my selection of Equity's 'Black Panther's Cub' we are starting our exhibitors off with a bang for the Autumn season, for here is a picture that contains every element that an experienced showman recognizes as a sterling box office winner, carrying a brilliant cast as it does headed by the ever popular Florence Reed and supported by such Broadway talent as Norman Trevor, Tyrone Power, Henry Stephenson, Earl Foxe, Philip Bartholomae, Mlle Dazie, Paula Shay and many others."

Bookings Piling Up for Reelcraft Product

R. C. Cropper's declaration in the trade press that Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, of which he is president, would be well represented on the screens of the country during "Independence Month," is borne out this week in the record number of bookings which the company has obtained since the announcement of its intensive sales drive for bookings for the tenth calendar month was made public almost a fortnight ago.

The company's thirty-two exchanges, scattered in almost every important exchange center in the country, have been exceedingly busy on the sales drive which was begun under Mr. Cropper's personal supervision three weeks ago. Bookings on the series of Mirth, Aladdin and Sun-Lite Comedies have been piling up so thick and fast that in many instances additional prints of the subjects in question have been forwarded to branch offices.

Reelcraft's large sales force have for three solid weeks combed almost every exhibiting section of the country. Exhibitors who never before booked the Reelcraft product are now listed among the company's accounts.

Young Picture Under Way

Equity Star Completes First Half of Elaborate Production

WORD comes through Equity Pictures Corporation from the Facific coast studios of Harry Garson that the picture now in process of production will be Clara Kimball Young's best to date. The first two reels and a half have been completed, cut and assembled.

Rather than risk the big court room scenes being spoiled by lighting effects so difficult to secure in public buildings, Harry Garson built the entire court room intact, an exact replica of one of the finest court rooms in America. On this set some of the biggest scenes of the story occur and the lavishness of the set will not be considered extravagant when the beauty of the set is seen on the screen.

Big scenes have also occured in a newspaper office and the offices of the Los Angeles Examiner will furnish the background, with all the speed and excitement of the metropolitan dailies.

Supporting Miss Young are such brilliant performers as Lowell Sherman, whose work as the heavy in D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East" was of the finest the screen had seen in many months. As the featured player opposite Miss Young, Mr. Sherman will have splendid opportunities to do some excellent acting.

With William D. Carleton, Edward Kimball, and other chosen players including little Jean Carpenter whose work in Mary Pickford's "Through the Back Door" elicited such high praise from critics, press and public, the cast of this new picture is above the average. The story from the pen of Sada Cowan deals with the rise and fall of a brilliant young attorney, badly handicapped by a scapegoat wife.

Urban Prepares Catalogue

200 Urban Popular Classics, Excluding Movie Chats, Are Listed

CHARLES URBAN is now preparing a new catalogue listing 200 of the Urban Popular Classics, exclusive of the Charles Urban's Movie Chats. These catalogues will be ready for circulation among the exhibitors in about two weeks. They illustrate excellently the wide diversification of material in the Urban collection.

In the list are included Kineto Reviews, The Animal Kingdom Series, the Urban Science Series, The La Fontaine Fables, The Four Seasons, The Great American Authors, The "Roving Thomas" Series, and many other groups. All of the 200 subjects listed are in one-reel, averaging 950 feet.

Every reel devotes itself to consideration of a single subject, thus differing from the Movie Chats which treat of anywhere from three to twenty subjects in the reel. These 200 Urban Popular Classics mark the first completed round of "The Living Book of Knowledge," which is to be the World's Encyclopedia. The Encyclopedia will contain at a minimum 1,000 reels.

The catalogue will need a good deal of study to reveal all the striking material it contains. There are groups within groups that are gems in themselves. For instance in the list of travel subjects there are five complete devoted to the City of London; a complete visualization of the social and commercial life of the great city. Other world-cities are similarly pictured.

The United States Navy is the subject of five reels also; a complete story of the navy.

All of the subjects already listed and ready for exhibition are complete in themselves and designed for separate release with one exception. This exception is "The Four Seasons."

Will Undertake Handling of Every Detail Requisite in Making of Film

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the news of the incorporation for $250,000 of the Tilford Cinema Corporation comes the announcement from the offices of the concern at No. 165 West 31st street, New York, that the organization, under its expanded programme, will undertake the handling of everything that goes into the making of a picture.

"Having passed the experimental stage by proving to producers that we can provide the sets, furnishings and properties for the making of better pictures at a saving of fully 30 per cent my associates and myself have determined to widen the scope of our endeavors," was the statement made by Walter Ford Tilford, president of the new corporation. If the picture producer so desires we will not only furnish sets, locations, decorations and properties but will also provide casts, direction and camera work."

Mr. Tilford's associates in the new enterprise are experts in their respective lines. Mr. Tilford himself broke into the game early as an operator and later became an exhibitor. On the production end he has been associated in the past with Vitagraph and the Famous Players-Lasky organizations. He had charge of the decorations in such pictures as "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "On with the Dance," and "The Amateur Wife."

Thomas Wilson Switzler, treasurer and general manager of the new corporation, is another of the staff who was formerly connected with the Famous Players-Lasky studios as purchasing agent. An architect by profession Wiard B. Ihnen, the secretary, has had a world of experience in the designing of sets for motion pictures. Thurston H. Holmdale, an artist of note, heads the department of art and scenic effects.

In charge of construction for the Tilford Organization is Thomas B. Sherman, who has had an extensive experience as a supervising carpenter in the majority of the Eastern Studios.

Stephen Seymour, who supervises decorations and properties, was for many years in the service of Metro, Goldwyn and Famous Players, both at the Eastern and Coast studios. Others of the Tilford organization are Walter E. Keller, an architectural draftsman of long experience, who works as assistant to Mr. Ihnen in the creation of sets; Edward J. Tasker, purchasing agent; and John T. Lascha, in charge of transportation.

Warner Sees Bright Future

Pioneer Independent Producer Says the Pendulum is Swinging

HARRY M. WARNER, one of the pioneers of the industry, as an independent producer and distributor, is keenly optimistic of the forthcoming season, despite the constant wail of business depression, and feels that the month of September—Independent Month—will bring to light the many meritorious offerings that are available for exhibitors in the independent field.

"The constant flow of cries bemoaning the ruinous condition and the ultimate extinction of our industry, coming as they do from people who swallow hearsay by the mouthful, have proven a bane not only to motion pictures but also to other commercial enterprises. These cries of course are unfounded, and it is up to the independents to turn the trend of present conditions the other way. While it is true that most of the producers have curtailed expenses by eliminating the waste in their personnel and producing fewer and better productions, the month of September, delegated as 'Independent Month' by the convention of the M. P. T. O. A. in Minneapolis, will prove beyond a doubt that the independent market is full of the best offerings that have ever been placed before exhibitors and through them to the public. Furthermore, the business pendulum is swinging toward the optimistic viewpoint, and the forthcoming season will prove to be the best season the industry has known in several years.

"This opinion is based on the current news expressed by the voluminous advertising and publicity now gaining full sway not only in the motion picture trade journals, but in every publication and newspaper throughout the country. As far as our organization is concerned, we have now under way twelve big productions, five of which have already been completed, and we are negotiating to handle scores of other meritorious offerings suitable for the independent market. 'Why Girls Leave Home' within a very short period has proven to be one of the biggest and best bets that has yet been thrown on the independent market.

"'Give the public better pictures' has never been more realized than at the present time. Independent Month will reveal the harvest that is in store for exhibitors who are catering to the public by offering clean, wholesome, entertaining productions. Let's all put our shoulder to the wheel and keep swinging the pendulum toward the era of success, happiness, and prosperity!"

"The Atheist" Held Over at Cumberland, Md.

"The Atheist," the initial release of the United States Moving Pictures Corporation, which had its premiere at the Maryland theatre, Cumberland, Md., on Wednesday and Thursday, August 17 and 18, respectively created so much enthusiasm among the photoplaygoers of Cumberland that the picture was played the two succeeding days, and has been booked for a return date early in September.

No picture that has ever played in Cumberland before has created as much enthusiasm or received a warmer reception than did "The Atheist," according to Fred Mellinger, of Mellinger Bros., who own the Maryland theatre.

"Snapshots" Wins Booking

Federated Screen Snapshots Are Booked for Three Weeks on B'way

WHAT is considered a great achievement for the short reel release, independently produced, is in the fact that one issue of Federated Screen Snapshots—release No. 6—has been booked solid for three consecutive weeks on Broadway, beginning Sunday August 6th, through the weeks of the 6th, 13th, and 20th. This booking is made even greater in importance by reason of the fact that the reel is playing a "repeat" booking at the Rivoli theatre during the current week, continuing for a second week on the program with "Experience," and, for the coming week will, in all probability be booked by Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of this theatre, at either the Rialto or the Criterion theatres.

Special scenes taken exclusively for Federated Screen Snapshots No. 6, showing Sigrid Holmquist, "the Swedish Mary Pickford," in an aeroplane, and later playing with her pets, were included on the Rivoli program the week of August 6th. The reel contains a choice of many other "snapshots" of interest, among them such head-liners as Mae Murray and her husband-director Robert Z. Leonard; Ralph Graves, of Griffith's "Dream Street"; J. Warren Kerrigan; Betty Blythe, Billy Quirk, Wesley Barry, and Mary Miles Minter. For the third week of its booking the reel will probably be transferred to the Rialto or the Criterion theatres.

Jack Cohn, of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, who, with Louis Lewyn is producing this single reel "fan news reel," says that while he is especially delighted with this booking from a personal point of view, it is of even greater importance in that it is another step forward for the short independent subject. Mr. Cohn is of the opinion that such bookings for independent releases will not be considered phenomenal in the near future, since all signs point to the coming power of the Independent field.

Arrow Reports Busy Days

Buyers Continue to Flood N. Y. Offices, as Business Livens Up

THE bustling activity and the flood of film buyers from all over the country that can be seen at the Arrow Film Corporation offices these days, should be a sign not only to the independent market, but to the industry at large, that the big boom is on.

The report from W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, this week, shows two big record buys for the independent field. One is the closing of a contract with the Standard Film exchange of Pittsburgh through A. A. and W. J. Weiland, for distribution rights on the following features for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia: "Bachelor Apartments"; "The Daughter of the Don; "The Man Who Trifled"; "Love's Protege"; "Luxury"; "The Way Women Love"; "The Deceiver"; "The Stranger in Canyon Valley"; "The Star Reporter"; "Headin' North"; the Ann Little serial, "The Blue Fox" and Jack Hoxie's four latest Western feature productions: "Cupid's Brand"; "Devil Dog Dawson"; "The Broken Spur" and "Hills of Hate." The other is a big Canadian purchase through George W. Graham, of the Graham Productions, Ltd. of Winnipeg, Canada. This deal includes such features as "The Golden Trail"; the Hank Mann Comedies and the first series of Sport Pictorials which will be distributed in Western Canada by the Graham Productions.

Among the State rights buyers visiting Arrow during the past week were Tony Luchese of the De Luxe Film Co. of Philadelphia, who closed one of the biggest comedy deals ever made in the East, contracting for the 52 comedies which Arrow is announcing; Joe Fox of the Phoenix Film Corporation, Kansas City; Herman Rifkin of Boston; E. C. Garner of the Reliance exchange, Washington, D. C.; Bob Lynch of the Metro exchange, Philadelphia; M. Lessy of Screen-Art Pictures, Philadelphia, and A. J. Sherman of the Square Deal exchange, Philadelphia.

The alterations now being made at the Arrow offices will serve to enlarge the quarters of the advertising and publicity department and the accounting and executive offices. These improvements are being made to provide more room and facilities for meeting the demand of increased business.

Arrow Film Announces First Comedies

THE Arrow Film Corporation, following close on the announcement last week of their plans for a 52-comedy program for the independent market, name the first four releases for September as follows: "His Hansom Butler," the first of the 14 Broadway Comedies featuring Eddie Barry, Harry Cribben, and Helen Darling; "The Trouble Doctor," opening the series of Arrow Speed Comedies, featuring Neely Edwards; "Uneasy Terms," the first of the Cruelywed Comedy series, and "Idle Workers," of the Arrow Mirthquake Comedies, featuring Bobby Dunn.

Miss Bedford has been promoted to stardom as a reward for the particularly excellent work she has done in recent Fox releases and will henceforth be seen in Twentieth Century Pictures, release dates of which will be shortly announced

Novelties to Publicize "Tarzan" Serial

In addition to a number of regulation advertising suppplies which has been prepared to assist the buyers and exhibitors in exploiting "Adventures of Tarzan," the new serial starring Elmo Lincoln, several novelties have also been made up for this purpose. A unique series of animal drawings, one for each episode, has been executed. These drawings consist of a series of numbered dots, which when traced out by pencil, reveal one of the big scenes in each of the chapters of the serial.

A complete novelette entitled "Adventures of Tarzan," has also been written by Bert Ennis. This novelette gives the story of the serial in brief fiction and is illustrated with star poses of Elmo Lincoln and Louise Lorraine. It will be printed in two colors and made up for distribution by the exhibitor to his patrons during the showing of the concluding chapter of the serial. A variety of miniature animals of the jungle, made up in rubber and carrying a "squeek" when pressed, will also be available.

"Girl from God's Country" at Clune's

WILLIAM H. CLUNE'S Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, announces a new policy of extended runs beginning Saturday, September 3, when it will hold the world premiere presentation of Nell Shipman in "The Girl From God's Country," which will play a minimum engagement of four weeks. Miss Shipman is the author, star and director of this romantic melodrama of the great outdoors, the direction being in association with Bert Van Tuyle.

"The Girl From God's Country" is released throughout the world by the F. B. Warren Corporation and Mr. Clune and his General Manager, Theodore Newman, have signed a contract for the exclusive first run for extended engagements on all of the productions to be released during the coming season through the Warren organization.

Increase in Pathe Bookings

Home Office Reports Short Subjects and Serials to Be in Big Demand

PATHE reports that Independence Month is giving a strong additional impetus to bookings from its short-subject and serial list and that the list is so large and varied that several exhibitors in the same zone are able to enrich their programmes from it. As a matter of fact, there have been no restrictions on runs for some time on Pathe News, on Aesop's Film Fables, produced by Fables Pictures, Inc. and on Topics of the Day, produced by Timely Films, Inc.," declares the Pathe report. The advent of Independence Month has brought about an extra volume of orders for all of these subjects it is declared.

There are also considerable bookings for the Harold Lloyd one-reeler comedy re-issues, ten in number, being released weekly according to the statement. In this connection, there seems to be significance in the fact that the Gaylord Lloyd comedy series of one-reelers, made somewhat on the lines of these re-issues of his celebrated brother's highly effective short comedies, are being heavily booked throughout the country. The same good fortune is being shared by pictures in the Tom Santschi, "The Adventures of Bill and Bob," and the Holman Day series, says Pathe.

Right on the eve of Independence Month the Pathe announcement of the forthcoming release of a series of three Major Jack Allen Wild Animal Pictures, produced by Adventure Films, Inc., is bringing generous response from exhibitors, it is stated. The first of these, "Netting the Leopard," is scheduled for release on September 25th.

Two weeks time has been held open by Mr. Barbee for the initial engagement of this picture, and it then will be released on Sunday, September 4, for simultaneous showing over the entire Lubliner & Trinz circuit, the Ascher Bros. circuit, the Andrew Karzas circuit on the south side and the Schoenstadt circuit. Issues Broadside to Exhibs

Robertson-Cole Makes New Effort for Independence Month Campaign

AN elaborate broadside to back up its campaign for Independent Pictures Month has been issued by R-C Pictures Corporation and has gone into the mail for every exhibitor of motion pictures in the United States. A statement from the R-C headquarters has the following to say about the broadside just issued:

"This broadside carries a list of timely bookings for quick returns to exhibitors in September-Independence Month; reproductions of the free accessories and advertising aids that are issued with bookings for "Book-A-Week" and Independence Month; reproductions of a number of comments on specific R-C Pictures by big and successful exhibitors; and synopsis and stories of a large number of R-C productions and releases.

"The broadside is illustrated with half-tones of the various stars and directors, and carries the message that R-C Pictures Corporation is independent because it is not an exhibitor; it owns no motion picture theater; it controls no motion picture theater; it has no stock in any exhibiting concern; and it competes with no exhibitor in any part of the world. There is also a list of the branch exchanges with the names of the executives in charge, and their addresses."

The production includes scenes in the ice-fields of northwestern Alaska, a storm scene on the San Francisco Bay, the spectacular destruction of a steam yacht by fire, and the San Quentin penitentiary in California.

Semon on Front Page of Coast Newspapers

Larry Semon, Vitagraph comedian, broke on to the first page of Pacific coast newspapers last week by turning out with his entire producing company and fighting a tremendous fire which is still reported to be sweeping parts of California forest land.

In an eight column head on its first page the Los Angeles Evening Herald of Friday, August 12th, calls attention to the exploit of Larry Semon and the other motion picture men, and goes on to say as follows:

"Headed by Larry Semon, Vitagraph comedy star, and his director, Norman Taurog, a company of 75 Los Angeles motion picture men and women abandoned their work and joined a contingent of 500 men to combat the worst fire in the history of the Sequoia National forest today after the first force of fire fighters had been driven back two miles by the fierce heat of the burning timber."

Selznick Units Very Busy

No Intermissions Between Productions for Tearle and O'Brien

HAVING declared that "Forty from Selznick" shall mean nothing less than complete fulfillment of a promise to exhibitors, Lewis J. Selznick is making advance preparation for the completion, in ample time, of all productions he has lately catalogued in his trade paper announcement. While Myron Selznick, Vice President in charge of production is away on a trans-continental trip with Sam E. Morris, vice president and general manager in charge of distribution, there is no cessation of studio for the present, Selznick attractions activities in Fort Lee, N. J., where, for the present Selznick attractions continue to be produced.

Owen Moore soon begins on his Henry A. Lehrman comedy; Elaine Hammerstein is taking a fortnight's vacation previous to pitching into her future activities, while Conway Tearle and Eugene O'Brien are busy with actual production. At least two companies are always busy.

On August 20 Conway Tearle finished "A Wide Open Town" (in which Faire Binney acted as his leading lady while giving all of the performances required of her in "The Teaser" at the Playhouse, New York) and started, on Monday, August 22, another Ralph Ince production with only one Sunday's rest between pictures.

"The Referee," based on a story recently concluded in the Red Book, is the new Tearle picture which Ralph Ince is directing. As its title indicates the prize ring will contribute a dominant element to the story.

Eugene O'Brien, under direction of Robert Ellis, finished the production of "Chivalrous Charley" on Tuesday, August 23, and at once began under direction of Alan Crosland, the screening of "A Prophet's Paradise." Elaine Hammerstein has her next work cut out for her in "Why Announce Your Marriage" production to begin as soon as Alan Crosland finishes the O'Brien picture and is at liberty to direct Miss Hammerstein.

Clifton Announces Plans

Elmer Clifton Starts Production of Story of New England Whalers

THE plans of Elmer Clifton, the motion picture director for nine years intimately associated with David W. Griffith, have reached the point of announcement. Mr. Clifton has started work upon a big film spectacle of the sea, revolving around the thrilling and adventurous career of the whaler.

Mr. Clifton has been at work for several weeks at New Bedford, Mass., with a staff of technical aids, preparing for the super-feature. The cast, which, it is said, will include some of the biggest names in the cinema world, is already largely selected. Mr. Clifton chose New Bedford as the picturesque background for his production because that New England seaport was the home of the old time whaling industry.

Mr. Clifton seems to be capturing his whaling romance just in time, for the number of whaling ships making New Bedford as a home port has dwindled from 126 to ten, the abundance of natural oil having gradually wiped out the industry.

Mr. Clifton is chartering a high power schooner, which will be under the command of Captain James A. Tilton, a veteran whaler, and manned by a picked crew of eighteen, enough to outfit three whale boats. A diligent search for whales will be made and the schooner will sweep the Atlantic as far south as Cape Hatteras. Three cameramen will record the thrills of the first cry of "There she blows!" the lowering of the whale boats, and the actual life and death combat with the leviathan of the deep.

"U" Leases B'way House

Central Theatre to Be Used for Universal's First-Run Showings

"NO WOMAN KNOWS," Tod Browning's Universal-Jewel production of Edna Ferber's famous novel "Fanny Herself," is to have a Broadway run, beginning September 4th, in the Central theatre, Broadway and Forty-ninth street. The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has leased the Central thereby assuring Universal super-production of a Broadway presentation.

Universal thus assures a Broadway run, not only for "No Woman Knows" but also for "Foolish Wives," the million-and-a-half-dollar von Stroheim production. It is expected that this picture will establish new records for picture success in New York. Until such time as "Foolish Wives" shall be ready for the screen, "No Woman Knows" will be the attraction at the Central.

In taking over the Central, Universal announces a unique and novel policy for the operation of that house. Besides being a Broadway first run house for Universal, the theatre also will be considered as a presentation example for all Universal exhibitors.

Each picture that plays the Broadway house will be supplied with exploitation and a presentation arranged and prepared by experts of the Universal Exploitation Department, so devised that the same effects can be adapted to the uses of every exhibitor who books the pictures.

The latest and most up-to-date moving picture theatre equipment is being installed in the Central and every possible move is being made to make the theatre a model of its kind. The pictures will be accompanied by appropriate orchestral and organ music, but there will be no attempt to feature the musical part of the program.

Fox's September Releases

Pearl White in "Virgin Paradise" and "Connecticut Yankee" on List

FOX FILM CORPORATION releases for September will consist of two more of the twelve big specials planned for launching on Broadway before going to exhibitors, two feature productions, two Twentieth Century pictures, one Clyde Cook special comedy, one Al St. John comedy, two Sunshine Comedies and four Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons.

The first of the specials among the September releases is "A Virgin Paradise," written by Hiram Percy Maxim, the famous inventor, and directed by J. Searle Dawley. The leading role is played by Pearl White. The other special for September release is "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," film version of the Mark Twain comedy classic.

"The Night Horsemen," starring Tom Mix, is a stirring tale of the West in which the wanderlust of the fast riding and hard fighting hero is dramatically set forth. The story is from Max Brand's novel "Wild Geese," and is a sequel of the great Mix success "The Untamed."

In "The Primal Law" Dustin Farnum is seen in the role of a most engaging character—a rancher, genial and kindly, but dangerous in a fight, especially where the interests of his little pal, Bobbie, are attacked. Bernard Durning directed the production.

"What Love Will Do" is the title of a picture in which Edna Murphy and Johnnie Walker are co-starred. The story is by Jack Strumwasser. William K. Howard is the director Eileen Percy stars in "Little Miss Hawkshaw," a romantic picture drama with prologue, on original lines. Carl Harbaugh directed.

Clyde Cook's special comedy for September is "The Toreador." The Al St. John comedy is "Small Town Stuff." "One Moment Please" and "The Book Agent" are the Sunshine comedies.

Mutt and Jeff will be presented in the following: "The Stampede," "The Tong Sandwich," "Shadowed" and "Turkish Bath."

Minter in "Ann Annington"

Gaston Glass, Fred Goodwins and Helen Durbar Appear in Support

WHEN Edgar Jepson wrote his now famous novel, "Ann Annington," he probably didn't realize that it would score a hit as a stage play. But Lechmere Worrall dramatized the story under the title of "Ann," and score a hit it did. Now Douglas Doty has again adapted it; for Realart as a picture for Mary Miles Minter and for the third time the public will be able to enjoy this comedy.

Doty has preserved every chance for Miss Minter to display her piquant manner in this delightful picture. In it she essays the role of Ann Annington, a special writer for a society journal, and the fiancee of a wealthy idler.

Joseph Henabery directed "Her Winning Way" and when it is shown that he also did "Don't Call Me Little Girl" and "Moonlight and Honeysuckle," theatre patrons will eagerly look for this.

A cast composed of Gaston Glass, Fred Goodwins, Helen Dunbar, Grace Morse, John Elliott, Omar Whitehead and Carrie Clark Ward make up the remainder of the fun-makers.

Richard L. Johnston assisted Mr. Henabery and Faxon Dean did the photography, all under the supervision of Elmer Harris.

Tony Sarg Will Design Paramount Posters

PARAMOUNT has secured the exclusive services of Tony Sarg, world-famaus illustrator and cartoonist to design posters of Paramount feature comedies. The arrangement with Mr. Sarg was made by J. A. Thorn, manager of the Poster department, who recently made a ten-strike in the field of outdoor advertising by signing up Henry Clive to make posters for Paramount dramatic productions.

The many-sided genius of Tony Sarg is perhaps best known to readers of American magazines through his delightfully humorous illustrations, magazine covers and political cartoons.

Mr. Sarg is well-known both in the legitimate theatre and on the screen as the creator of the artistic marionettes which have delighted the grown people as well as the children of New York for several seasons. More recently he has widely extended his audience with a series of shadowgraph comedies for the screen, entitled "Tony Sarg's Almanac."

Kinograms Claim Beat on Caruso Views

Through exceptionally efficient and speedy work, Educational's Kinograms news reel has again made what is claimed to be a big "beat," presenting to the American public pictures of the Caruso funeral days ahead of other news reels, it is stated.

By making every minute count as they worked on the pictures, Kinograms' representative in Italy managed to get prints of their pictures onto the President Wilson. The President Wilson reached New York twelve hours ahead of the vessel carrying prints for the other American news reels, according to Educational.

By rushing the prints to the Associated Screen News laboratory, and there doing some more speedy work, the producers of Kinograms were able to get the pictures into the next reel due for release.

Keaton on His Third for First Nat'l Release

Buster Keaton is one of the busiest motion picture stars in Hollywood. Only recently did the frozen-faced comedian complete "The Playhouse" for Joseph M. Schenck, to be released through Associated First National and now he has finished "The Village Blacksmith." Incidentally Keaton is hard at work on a new comedy for First National release.

"The Playhouse" has been previewed and acclaimed another Keaton "button-buster." "The Village Blacksmith" was written and directed by Buster Keaton and Mal St. Clair, who alternates with Eddie Cline in the handling of the megaphone for the star. Virginia Fox plays opposite Keaton.

Paramount in Publisher Tie-Up

WALTER P. LINDLAR, assistant director of exploitation for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has effected tie-ups with leading book publishers whereby their subjects put into pictures by Paramount may be more easily exploited in smaller towns. The chief feature of the arrangements is an agreement to ship books to small dealers on consignment, thereby decreasing the risks assumed by the bookseller in laying in a large supply.

The first tie-up was with Harper & Brothers, publishers of Gerald Du Maurier's "Peter Ibbetson," which Paramount will release outside of New York under the title "Forever." In New York, however, the original title will be maintained, and even in other localities "Peter Ibbetson" will appear in the billing almost as prominently as "Forever." Harper & Bros. have already agreed, it is stated, to co-operate with Fred V. Greene, Jr., the New York exploiteer for Paramount, when the picture appears at the Criterion, Rivoli, or Rialto Theatres.

The chief benefit will come to either the exploiteers or the exhibitors in other cities. Harper & Brothers, through Mr. Henry Hoynes, will consign books to dealers who will be able to return the unsold copies. Every available copy of Du Maurier's novel, issued for the first time some years ago, will be placed at the exhibitor's disposal, it is declared. Extra wrappers will also be prepared for window displays.

Mr. Lindlar's next step was to line-up Small, Maynard & Co., Boston, publishers of "The Sheik," one of the best sellers of the day. This picture is rapidly nearing completion and will be released by Paramount under the original title. The publishers have agreed to aid exploitation in out-of-town cities and in New York.

"This is in no sense a duplication of the Moving Picture Edition of books, such as some producers have been using," Mr. Lindlar said. "The Paramount Exploitation Department was merely trying to see how profitable they could make their tie-ups for the merchants who were game enough to venture their windows.

"We had great success with 'The Inside of the Cup,' which was issued many years before the picture. However, the surest proof of the possibilities is 'Sentimental Tommy.' Barrie is a classic and his books enjoy a certain steady sale but never have been part of everybody's conversation like the typical 'best seller.' Nearly every book-dealer has a stock of Barrie and welcomes the chance to 'break' a sale. He can't suddenly flood his windows with Barrie without an excuse. But he can boost his sales materially if he takes advantage of the run of the picture and makes an attractive window enhanced by stills from the picture.

"This is part of genuine exploitation service. Don't pull the wool over the other fellow's eyes. Come to him with a real business proposition. If he gets stuck he won't be antagonized against all further service to the theatre in particular and exploitation in general. The dealer ships the books back to the publisher and is out only a few dollars for transportation.

"The publishers I have met are extremely anxious for co-operative arrangements such as this. It costs them very little and the picture and the exploitation service really act as sales stimuli. We expect to follow The Shiek, Sentimental Tommy, Peter Ibbetson, with tie-ups with the publisher of Arthur Schnitzler's Anatol for The Affairs of Anatol, Get Rich Quick Wallingford, Cappy Ricks, and Miss Lulu Bett."

First-Run Bookings for Pioneer

FIRST run bookings on the new Pioneer releases are coming in at a fast pace, according to advices received from the home office of the Pioneer Film Corporation. The Pioneer statement declares exchange managers and salesmen are experiencing little or no difficulty in placing the Pioneer features in the largest first run houses because of the strength of the productions themselves and the fact that an array of stars has been assembled in practically every production.

"For instance, 'Indiscretion' has Florence Reed in the leading role," explains the Pioneer statement, "and supporting her are two film favorites, either one capable of carrying the feature himself and guaranteeing a capacity audience to every exhibitor. They are Lionel Atwill and Gareth Hughes. The former will be remembered for his work on Broadway starring in David Belasco's production 'Deburau,' while Gareth Hughes is a recognized film star and a favorite of millions of people. So far as Florence Reed is concerned, her work in 'Indiscretion' is said to be the best of her brilliant screen career and the indications are that this feature will play more theatres throughout the country than any production yet distributed by Pioneer's national distribution forces. In scores of instances theatres which were closed for the summer are opening up with 'Indiscretion.'

"'Beyond the Crossroads,' which, under all probability, will follow 'Indiscretion,' has Ora Carew as its star and, in this instance, Pioneer scores another success through the distribution of this feature which is a tense drama and which has been given master presentation.

"More than usual interest is being centered on the scheduled release of 'Oh, Mary, Be Careful!' in which production Madge Kennedy stars. So far as Miss Kennedy is concerned nothing need be said other than the fact that she appears in a role which delightfully suits her highly artistic talents and those who have seen the private screenings of the picture regard 'Oh, Mary, Be Careful!' as Miss Kennedy's greatest laughing vehicle.

"Another feature which has all the ear-marks of being a sensational hit, is 'The Forgotten Woman,' in which Pauline Stark is featured. This photoplay is a Sargent production and was made at a cost exceeding $250,000. It is a gripping drama in six reels with action of the kind that will delight and hold the interest of every class of audience. Preceding the release of 'The Forgotten Woman,' will be 'A Millionaire For a Day,' produced by Guy Empey and in which production he appears. 'A Millionaire For a Day' is a comedy drama and has been characterized by critics as Guy Empey's best work.

"The release of this picture is being waited for by exhibitors with marked interest."

Too Much Tinsel, Says Ince of Productions

PRODUCERS are providing too much tinsel and not enough truths in their productions, and authors are seeking after spectacular effects to clothe old themes instead of sticking to stories that arouse fundamental emotions; these, in the opinion of Thomas H. Ince, represent the gravest defects in the making of motion pictures at the present time. Mr. Ince gave expression to these thoughts during the course of a recent interview.

"The trouble with pictures," he said, "is too much elaboration, too much use of worn-out themes for stories, too much artificiality, too much extravagance, too much appeal to superficial emotions; and not enough simplicity, not enough truth, not enough sincerity, not enough recognition of the importance of simple things."

Mr. Ince also expressed the opinion that the present depression in production is merely temporary, but declared that the resumption of studio work will lead to different and less elaborate style of productions than heretofore.

Last of Present Kineto Series Released

"Let's See the Animals," one of the famous animal studies in the Kineto Review group of the Urban Popular Classics, released next week, marks the last release of the second series of Kineto Reviews. The third series follows immediately after.

Specimens of the wonderful collection in the Philadelphia Zoological Society are contained in this reel; its range is extraordinary. Pictures of one of the finest lions in America, of the Madagascar tree boa, the blue-tongued lizard, the coypu rat, the spoon-bill stork, the South African ostrich hens, the Zebu, which is of India's sacred cattle; the fallow deer, the American elk, the eagle, the bison, polar bears—these and many others.

Hodkinson Scents A Boom

Adds to Sales and Administrative Staffs, Preparing for Fall Rush

IN a statement issued during the week, W. W. Hodkinson declares that his organization despite the summer slump has experienced the biggest August business that it has ever known. This business followed in the wake of a 20 per cent increase in the sales forces of the Hodkinson organization. It is on the strength of the quick response to the sales-effort put forth that Mr. Hodkinson declares he bases his opinion that the summer slump is now passed and that the industry will find itself, within a fortnight, in the midst of one of the busiest autumn seasons it has ever experienced.

"Not only have we increased our sales force, but, in line with my declaration months ago, that the motion picture industry must attract bigger, better brains or else struggle along on an insecure foundation, I have added to the administrative end of our business two men who have been conspicuously successful in handling big executive problems in other fields of endeavor.

"One of them is our new vice-president and general manager, Mr. F. C. Munroe, an expert in corporate organization and a man with a record for getting things done. Mr. Munroe served for many years in an executive capacity with the New England Telephone Company, for which corporation he developed a very successful system of divisional organization.

"The other addition to our executive staff is Mr. Foster Gilroy who takes charge of our Promotion Department. Mr. Gilroy is a newspaper man of wide acquaintance, and brings to our already efficient advertising and publicity department a ripe experience in every avenue of exploitation. He was for some years promotion manager for the Frank A. Munsey Publications; handled the very successful promotion of the Old Colony Club; and was general manager and subsequently editor of "Puck," the oldest humorous journal in America.

"Out on the Coast, Mr. S. J. Vogel, one of the banner producers of the New York Life Insurance Company, and Mr. John H. Meehan formerly of the Paramount forces, have organized the firm of Vogel & Meehan to handle our product exclusively. Their progressive methods have firmly established our pictures in the Far West.

"The European distribution of Hodkinson releases is in the hands of Mr. Wm. C. Vogel, who established an international reputation in the handling of the Chaplin pictures abroad, Mr. Vogel is forming powerful contacts for our organization both in England and on the Continent."

"After Midnight" Set for September 20

Ralph Ince directed Conway Tearle in "After Midnight," and Zena Keefe is leading woman, thus making the latest offering in the Tearle series of Selznick pictures qualify, literally, as a three-star presentation. "After Midnight" will be released September 20th as the first offering in the series of six features starring Tearle in the promised "Forty from Selznick" during the ensuing year.

John Lynch furnished the story and scenario of "After Midnight," the feature being referred to in the first announcements as "Ye Shall Pay."

Complete Cast of "The Happy Ending"

Announcement from the West Coast is to the effect that with the securing of Kathleen Kirkham to play "the other woman," casting of "The Happy Ending," by Hector Turnbull has finally been completed. It is to be Realart's eleventh production of the current season.

May McAvoy is seen as the little drudge housekeeper of her two uncles, a carpenter and bootmaker, played by Charles Ogle and Guy Oliver respectively. These men are two of the cleverest and best-known character players in filmdom. Other players include Lincoln Stedman, Darrel Foss, Helen Dunbar and Josephine Crowell.

Paramount Specials in Record Openings

Sunday proved a record-breaking day for Paramount special productions in Chicago, where Cecil B. DeMille's "The Affairs of Anatol" opened at Ascher Bros. new Roosevelt Theatre, and "The Golem" at Orchestra Hall.

So great was the success scored by the twelve-star DeMille production at the Roosevelt that it prompted Max Asher to send the following wire to the home-office of Paramount:

"Heartiest congratulations and thanks for DeMille's wonderful picture, 'The Affairs of Aanatol.' Sunday opening at Roosevelt theatre exceeded all our expectations as theatre and lobby were crowded all day and evening. Consider this the greatest box-office attraction ever produced and cannot say too much in praise of it."

Following the opening of "The Golem" at Orchestra Hall, Manager Voegeli sent the following telegram:

"'The Golem' opened Sunday at Orchestra Hall to the biggest day this year. Exceeded only by 'Humoresque' last year. Indications point to a record run for this picture as crowds stood in line up to the last show."

Both productions are booked for indefinite engagements.

A. Beyfuss Announces Release

"Jungle Adventures" Scheduled for October

IN a recent interview Alexander Beyfuss stated, in connection with his new enterprise, "Exceptional is preparing to announce, not what it intends to do, but what it has already done."

That he meant this in every sense of the word is fully borne out by the statement now issued by the Exceptional Pictures Corporation from its headquarters at 1540 Broadway, New York City, which follows closely upon the recent announcement of the election of Mr. Beyfuss as Vice President and general manager of the organization.

Information is given out that two features are already completed, the first of which Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures" is scheduled for release in October. But what is even as important as the announcement of finished product is the fact that Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures" is booked for a pre-release showing at the Capitol Theatre, New York, where it will be the stellar attraction for the week commencing September 11th.

It will be recalled that Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures" was the feature which the Motion Picture Commission of New York State accorded the distinction of reviewing as their first official act, was in itself demonstrated that this new organization is clearly alive to every opportunity and prepared to avail itself of them.

The second feature announced as already completed is said to be a distinct novelty in the making of motion pictures and stars Charles "Chic" Sale, one of the youngest and foremost character actors on the American stage today, in his first effort before the camera. The title of this production is being withheld for the time being although it is stated that Mr. Sale plays seven distinct characters during the unfolding of the pictures, at no time using a double exposure with any two of the characters.

This unique offering will also have a pre-release showing in one of New York's big theatres, definite announcement of which is expected to be made within the next few weeks. The production is scheduled for general release in November.

In making this statement Mr. Beyfuss said: "It will be conceded that Exceptional Pictures Corporation has started auspiciously; it has delivered, in so doing, what it promised to do, because, instead of announcing the aims, desires and policies of what it intended to accomplish Exceptional very quietly did things, so that this statement becomes a question of facts and actual accomplishments.

"Two pictures are completed and ready for the market: the first Martin Johnson "Jungle Adventures" is to play at the world's largest theater, the Capitol; soon we will announce a similar accomplishment for the Chic Sale production.

"All this was done on merit alone, without even the aid of distribution affiliations. And, furthermore, no definite distributing arrangements are to be made until the productions have proven themselves real, exceptional box-office attractions. We are certain they will demonstrate their value before the public, just as certain as we were when their making was carefully planned that the first-run theatres would accept them as product of the calibre they require."

Ray Popular with Army and Navy Audiences

"What type of pictures do Uncle Sam's soldiers and sailors like best? Pictures that show life as it is really lived, that are virile, human, 'homey;' with a touch of adventure if it be not exaggerated; of mystery if the situations presented are logical; or comedy if the element of the ridiculous is not overdrawn. What is live, wholesome, probable, by its very nature carries an appeal to the healthy masculine man."

This conclusion has been reached by John C. Ragland, vice-president and general manager of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, after sifting a mass of information which he has been collecting recently. Mr. Ragland was assisted too, in arriving at this conclusion by the heavy and growing demands for Ray features for army and navy programs. Besides West Point, where the Ray pictures are ever popular, there have been repeated showings of this star's films in recent months, according to the Kane general manager, at Fort Crook, Neb.; Camp Eustis, Va.; Camp Meade, Md.; Fort Monroe, Va.; Fort Plattsburg, Va.; Fort Logan, Colo.; Camp Knox, Ky.; Fort McArthur, Cal.; and Camp Dix, N. J.

Eugene O'Brien Role a Marked Departure

"The new Eugene O'Brien release, set for distribution in October, will mark a decided departure from the current O'Brien offering, Is Life Worth Living?, and will, in fact, present this Selznick star in a style of photoplay entirely different from any in which he has heretofore appeared." This is the statement just issued from the Selznick headquarters. "Clay Dollars" is a rural comedy drama, written by Lewis Allen Browne, and directed by George Archainbaud.

Ruth Dwyer is the leading woman in "Clay Dolars." Florida Kingsley and Arthur Housman are also cast in important roles.

Wm. Nigh Works Rapidly on Warner Picture

William Nigh is breaking all previous time records in completing "Her Daughter-in-Law" which Warner Bros. are producing with Vera Gordon in the stellar role.

The picture has been in work at the Biograph studio for the past two weeks and aided by the cooperation of the Tilford Cinema Studios, who are executing the sets. Director Nigh has "Her Daughter-in-Law" more than two-thirds finished.

Paramount Films Begun

Wallace Reid, Thomas Meighan, and Jack Holt Vehicles Are Started

LAST week saw the start of several new Paramount pictures at the Lasky studio, and judging from present indications of production activities there will be at the high water mark for some time to come.

On Monday Wallace Reid began his new picture, "Rent Free," which Elmer Rice adapted from the story by Izola Forrester and Mann Page. This picture marks the first individual directorship of Howard Higgin, who for a long time was production manager for Cecil B. DeMille. Lila Lee is leading woman for Mr. Reid and the cast includes Henry Barrows, Gertrude Short, Lillian Leighton, Clarence Geldart, Claire McDowell and Lucien Littlefield. Frank E. Woods is supervising the production.

Jack Holt, Paramount's new star, also began Monday on "The Call of the North," by Stewart Edward White, the original novel being called "Conjuror's House." The book was dramatized under its present title and Robert Edeson appeared in it on the stage. Jack Cunningham has written the screen version, Joseph Henabery is directing and Rollin Sturgeon is supervising. The story deals with life in the Hudson Bay district and is filled with exciting action of the outdoor type which is so well suited to Holt's abilities.

Another to start work Monday was Thomas Meighan, who had just arrived in Hollywood from New York a day or two previously. His picture is George M. Cohan's romantic stage comedy, "A Prince There Was," the scenario being by Waldemar Young. Tom Foreman is again directing Mr. Meighan and Frank E. Woods is supervising the production. Lois Wilson is leading woman and the supporting cast includes Sylvia Ashton, Nigel Barrie, Charlotte Jackson, Arthur Hull, Guy Oliver and Fred Huntley.

New Scores for Fall Specials

Synchronized Music Scores Being Prepared for Coming Big Releases

WITH the announcement that D. W. Griffith's masterpiece "Way Down East" is to be released to exhibitor as a regular United Artists release, Synchronized Scenario Music Co. of Chicago announce that they will shortly have ready for distribution through their twenty-two branch exchanges synchronized music scores for this as well as many other big fall specials coming from other producers. Prominent among these will be scores for Paramount's "The Great Moment" Griffith's "Dream Street" and the fantastic importation "The Golem." "The Affairs of Anatol" another of Paramount's productions will be treated in especially fine style by the scoring staff of the Synchronized Company.

Synchronized Music Scores are rapidly taking their place on the programmes of many of the country's greatest motion picture theatres. It is, however, also gratifying to the company producing them to note that hundreds of the smaller theatres where only a piano or organ are employed to furnish the musical entertainment are likewise showing interest in these scores. A special piano or organ score is being made for every feature picture of worth being released by all the standard producers. From a musical standpoint, declares the Synchronized Co., this means a great deal to the small house that is without a musical library and therefore dependent upon the repertoire of a pianist or organist.

Hawks from Henning Berger's drama, "Syndafloden," acted on the speaking stage in almost every nation in the world. An adaptation of this play was produced in New York by Arthur Hopkins in 1917 under the name of "The Deluge." Director Frank Lloyd completed the photography on "The Sin Flood" this week and is now cutting and editing the film.

Helene Chadwick, Richard Dix, James Kirkwood, and Ralph Lewis appear in the cast.

Constance Talmadge Revival Due in Sept.

IN the pre-season announcement made by Lewis J. Selznick revivals of Norma and Constance Talmadge pictures (issued in the days when Selznick was making the Talmadge girls screen stars) are listed. There will be a dozen in all—six each for Norma and Constance—and the first of the series is "Scandal," set for distribution late in September.

This feature was made from Cosmos Hamilton's novel of the same title and was the first picture released by Selznick with Constance Talmadge the star. The original presentation has been edited and re-titled for the circulation of new prints.

Charles Giblyn directed the presentation. Harry C. Browne acted as Miss Talmadge's leading man and the support otherwise included J. Herbert Frank, Aimee Dalmores, Gladden James, William P. Carlton and Ida Darling.

Tenth Picture Starring "Brownie" Completed

The tenth picture featuring "Brownie," the Century wonder dog, has just been completed. The title is "Brownie's Little Venus." "Brownie" has appeared in comedies with Harry Sweet, Charles Dorety, Baby Peggy the talented little two-year-old comedienne, Bud Jamison, and many others. At present "Brownie" is working under the direction of Fred Fishback. All of the releases of the canine star are distributed by Universal Film.

The Century Comedies in which "Brownie" has been featured are as follows: "The Dog Doctor," "Fire Bugs," "His Puppy Love," "The Kid's Pal," "Playmates," "Pals," "Society Dogs," "Alfalfa Love," and "Golfing." Another player who has attracted favorable attention in these animal comedies is the versatile two-year-old comedienne, Baby Peggy Jean.

Busy Production Season Ahead

Every Camera at Universal City to Be Turning Soon

UNIVERSAL is starting the busiest production period in the company's career, reports from Universal City indicate. Irving G. Thalberg, general manager at the Universal studio plant has just outlined a schedule that will keep every outfit at Universal City busy.

Fifty-two special attractions and half a dozen super-features form the back bone of this production activity, it is stated.

Harry Carey will open the season with "Man to Man," a novel by Jackson Gregory, which is to be filmed as a Universal-Jewel. The continuity has been assigned to George O. Hull by Lucien Hubbard, scenario editor.

Simultaneously with the start of "Man to Man," Priscilla Dean will begin to work on "Wild Honey," a colorful drama of the African veldt from the famous novel by Cynthia Stockley. The story will be widely different in theme from "Reputation" and "Conflict," the star's recently completed Universal-Jewel productions, but it is expected to exceed in romantic appeal anything that the noted actress has done. Lucien Hubbard himself is writing the continuity.

Gladys Walton will begin the fall season with "The Guttersnipe" a story by Percival Wilde for which Wallace Clifton is writing the continuity. It is expected that Dallas Fitzgerald will direct it.

Miss du Pont's second starring vehicle will be "Ropes," to be filmed from Wilbur Daniel Steele's one-act play of that name, which appeared in Harper's Magazine. The star has just completed "The Rage of Paris," her first Universal starring vehicle, which is scheduled for early release.

After "Ropes" Miss du Pont will film "You Can't Live on Love," a clever comedy-drama by John B. Clymer for which George Hively is writing the screen version.

Frank Mayo has a vigorous sea story for his first post-vacation starring vehicle. It is called "Dr. Jim" and was written by Stuart Paton, the Universal director.

Following that he will probably star in "The Altar Stairs," a romance of the South Seas written by G. B Lancaster.

Marie Prevost will give the screen another speedy comedy-drama in "Kissed," a sparkling story by Arthur Sommers Roche which originally appeared in the Argosy Magazine, A. P. Younger is writing the screen version.

Herbert Rawlinson, who just finished his role in support of Priscilla Dean in "Conflict" will start his own Universal starring career with "The Black Bag" by Louis Joseph Vance. Then he will turn his attention to "The Substitute Millionaire," a story which was purchased from the estate of George Loane Tucker.

About that time Marie Prevost will be ready for another vehicle and she will begin work on "Princess Virtue," a delightful comedy-drama which Doris Schroeder is adapting to the screen. While filming is in progress on "Princess Virtue," Miss Schroeder will work on the continuity for "Sandman," a magazine story, which will be used by Gladys Walton for her forthcoming Universal release.

Hoot Gibson's recently completed story "Bransford of Rainbow Ridge" will be on the screen about the time he starts "Headin' West," an original story by Harmey Gates. Jack Ford, who directed the star in his recent successes, will probably continue in this capacity.

Optimism Growing In Mid-West

Ass'd Exhib Treasurer Sees Return to Normalcy on Way

MR. ROY CRAWFORD, who is treasurer of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., gives below his impression concerning the business aspect of the near future.

Mr. Crawford is a business man of long standing and has acquired an excellent knowledge of business conditions, especially in the Middle West. He is considered an authority on business in that section of the country and being known as exceedingly conservative in his statements, his impressions on the present business conditions are regarded as interesting and valuable.

"One of the outstanding facts apparent to anyone who is a close student of business conditions in that section of the country is the increased optimism and activity of business men," says Mr. Crawford, "which is conducive to certain return of normal conditions, and I wish to say that my observations are based on absolute facts and figures which are gleaned from certain banks and theatres in which I am interested.

"The depression in general business was felt not only in this country but all over the world, as any careful reader of newspapers will be ready to confirm, and other industries felt it much earlier and to a much greater extent than did the motion picture field.

"We all remember that motion picture theatres were crowded and exhibitors were making loads of money when other business men were complaining bitterly about what they called the 'buyers strike.' And many of them thought that bad times simply could not come into the moving picture business. But it came. And pretty strong at that, combined with premature and very hot weather. The result was inevitable. Many an exhibitor got nervous. And this nervousness communicated itself to the film salesman with the result that business was far from satisfactory.

"An excellent proof of the fact that in many cases it wasn't so much bad business conditions, but rather a form of psychosis which had fallen on the moving picture people, and with which the hot weather had a lot to do, is, that immediately the cool weather set in business took a tremendous jump. In fact, the change was surprising. As soon as the drop in temperature became universal in this country, activity increased to a very great extent.

"Associated Exhibitors, I am glad to say, did not suffer very much during the general depression, although the effects of the hot weather psychosis were noticeable to a certain degree. Yet our untiring Sales Force, combined with good product, withstood even bad business conditions, and our financial returns are the best proof of this assertion."

Mr. Crawford points out the adaptability of the current Associated Exhibitors' releases, including "The Rider of the King Log," Bryant Washburn's "The Road to London," and the Harold Lloyd comedies, to the summer season, and announces for the Fall and Winter schedule "Home Keeping Hearts," Lottie Pickford's "They Shall Pay," "The Family Closet," "Discontented Wives," and "Tropical Love."

Prints of New Goldwyn Films at Home-Office

Prints of the Goldwyn releases for the fall are being rapidly shipped to the twenty-two Goldwyn branch exchanges. Two more prints have been received from the studios at the home office, making twenty-three of the twenty-six of Goldwyn's fifth year productions announced for autumn releases. These will be in the exchanges within a brief time.

The two latest prints received are "The Man from Lost River," a Frank Lloyd production, written directly for the screen by Katharine Newlin Burt, author of "The Branding Iron" and "Snowblind," and Will Rogers' new starring vehicle, "A Poor Relation," adapted from Edward E. Kidder's comedy in which the late Sol Smith Russell appeared for so many years.

A Discussion on the Continuous Motion Picture Projector

A Paper by C. Francis Jenkins Before the S. M. P. E.

America's supremacy comes about by reason of her social-economic engines. She has given the world more mechanisms to do what had theretofore been done by hand, than all other countries combined; and because we are great folks to love our neighbors, some of our most brilliant efforts have been to facilitate intercourse, for intercourse means friendliness. So we have given the world instruments to promote sociability, the telegraph, the telephone, the typewriter, the talking machine, the typesetting machine, and now we add the motion-picture machine to hasten our means of knowing each other.

The motion picture, as applied to the picture theatre, is already the fifth largest industry. When to this is added the much wider field outside the theatre, it is not beyond the range of probability that motion pictures will become the largest single industry in the world. And this probability is strengthened by the fact that the motion picture film is standard the world over. Not only is it the only world standard, but it is unique in other ways. For example:

It is a curious anomaly that in the motion-picture projecting machine business, the usual rule of supply and demand does not hold good. One may buy anything else, a watch, an automobile, a house, paying as much or as little as one chooses, getting increased value with increased cost, but for a motion-picture projector one pays about the same price for all makes.

There is not today a picture equipment comparable with the magnificence of a great many of the theatres already built and many more projected. No matter how much the builder of a fine theatre may desire it, he cannot get a correspondingly fine picture equipment; it doesn't exist: the only machine available is the same cheap-priced, old style machine used in the little five-cent movie house.

The theatre owner may pay as much or as little as he likes for music and other accessories, but when it comes to the picture machine, that which produces the thing he sells to the public, he is limited to a very small choice, a choice in name mostly, for the three or four machines available all sell for about the same price.

The reason for this is that the old-style longitudinal projector has inherent limitations, and has been developed just about as far as it is possible to go. For added cost one gets more cast iron only, the quality of the picture on the screen is not noticeably different.

This inherent limitation is the intermittently moved film, for the same reason that reciprocation limits the use of the steam engine. One does not think of fractional steam motors, for example, though we all find daily use for small continuous rotation electric motors.

Of course, such reasoning applied to motion-picture machines leads us directly to a study of the continuous motion film projector, a subject from which motion-picture engineers shy, as scientists used to shy at the subject of flying machines. But that way is the road out of our projection difficulties, and any investigation and experimentation along that line is worth while and this is my warrant for presenting the following description of a new contribution to the subject.

Everyone readily admits the advantages to be gained by the employment of continuous instead of intermittently moved film. Striking advantages are immediately suggested: (1) Longer life for the film, consequently larger revenue from each print; (2) 100% increase in lighting efficiency; i.e., the same screen lighting with 50% of the present light source intensity; (3) a noiseless and much less complicated projecting machine; and, (4) almost unlimited speed (not for the projectionist, many of them need a speed-limiting brake), but continuous motion in a camera permits such speeds as open up possibilities for scientific research not available in any other way. Sharp, clear, discrete pictures at a rate of 50,000 per minute are possible with fast lenses and super-sensitive film now available if suitable film handling mechanism could be found. Such pictures subsequently projected at normal speed, say 1,000 pictures per minute, are destined to disclose many things impossible of discovery without such apparatus.

Many attempts to attain this ideal machine have appeared from time to time and hundreds of patents have been granted thereon, but most of them propose continuous motion of the film while employing intermittent or reciprocating mechanism. This is not, and cannot be the solution of the problem, for the parts moving intermittently are a greater handicap than the film, because they are many times heavier than that part of the film having step-by-step motion, and we are no better off than before, being still limited to the restricted speeds inherent in intermittent mechanisms.

In my initial work of thirty years ago, I employed both continuous and intermittent motion mechanisms. The intermittent first got general public acceptance because it was the easiest and cheapest made, and this and all subsequent mechanisms the world over are basicly alike in principle and curiously alike in construction, for example, all are built left-handed.

Of machines having continuous motion of both film and mechanism, the only example of my own ever attaining any considerable degree of speed and picture perfection employed continuously moving film and a plurality of lenses following each other in sequence and single line procession across a stationary shutter opening, which, as you will observe, is exactly the reverse of the intermittent mechanism in which the shutter is in continuous rotation while the lens and film are stationary at the instant of exposure.

But the cost of this large number of lenses and the difficulty of getting them matched gave the intermittent projector the long start it has maintained to this day, though an examination of the old apparatus in its various forms on exhibit in the U. S. National Museum where it was put some twenty-six years ago is interesting from other than an historical point of view. The number of different and unprofitable ways a basketball of expensive lenses can be put together again suggests the old proverb that " a fool and his money are soon parted."

Therefore, the contribution to the art which I shall describe herein is the result of experimentation with the object of producing a less expensive machine, while keeping in mind all the time, the absolute necessity of employing (1) standard film, (2) stock lenses and light sources; and (3) continuous motion of every part of both film and mechanism. As to the success attained I shall leave you to judge for yourself from your own observation of machine and screen picture.

This machine, considered first as a camera, is built on the principle that if a ray of light coming from a distant point could be bent just after passing through the lens so that it would impinge on the film at an initial position, that is, at the top of the aperture, and should then be caused to travel down one frame in exact synchronism with the movement of the film, our problem would be solved.

This bending of the ray of light just after passing through the lens can be accomplished by interposing a prism, say of 5 degree angle, with its base up (S, Fig. 1), which will project the ray to its initial position (a) at the top of the picture aperture; and finally with its base down (S, Fig. 1) to project the ray to its final position (b) at the bottom of the aperture, that is, the end of the downward travel of the film. Obviously at the moment the ray passes the middle of the aperture it is not bent at all, and, therefore, the " prism " cannot be a prism at this point but only a plain parallel-sided piece of glass.

The light ray acts as though it were hinged at the location of the prism. If, therefore, we could make a solid glass prism and endow it with the ability to automatically change the angle of its faces in synchronism with the movement of the film, the ray of light or the picture-carrying cone of light would follow the film, which is exactly the object we seek.

Such an assumption seems paradoxical, but it may be accomplished by employing a long strip of glass prism section with the base up at one end and base down at the other end and a gradually changing contour from end to end between these two extremes. (See Fig. 2.) If this strip of glass is passed across the path of the film, in the light cone and in synchronism with the travel of the film, the constantly running film will appear stationary on the screen when used as a projector.

But to make the continuous motion machine of these elements the strip of prismatic glass must be made into a ring (in the plane of its width) with the two ends abutting. When this is done, the contacting ends (R, Fig. 3) represent crossed prisms, one with the base (S) outward and the other with the base (S) toward the axis of rotation of this ring.

As a matter of convenience in fabrication, this ring prism is actually ground in the face of a disc of glass, as you will observe, for this then makes its own support on the rotating shaft, upon which it is mounted.

This ring is so geared to the film-feeding sprocket that it makes one revolution with the passage of each single frame across the aperture, and, of course, in exact synchronism therewith. The median line of the prismatic ring, the objective, the picture aperture, and the light source are all located in the axis of the cone of light, the prism being located at the point where the hinging or bending of the light cone is to be effected.

As explained above, the ring makes one complete revolution for the passing of each picture frame, and in synchronism therewith, each frame instantaneously dissolving into the next as the joint in the prism ring crosses the light cone, so that the picture on the screen is stationary, continuous in action and without interruption by shutter blades.

Observe that the machine employs standard film, stock objectives and condensers and the usual light source, all readily changeable as to size, focus, etc. However, as noted, it does not have the usual fifty-fifty rotating shutter necessary on the intermittent machine, and so the incandescent lamp may be expected to have still further usefulness for there is 100% increase in screen lighting efficiencies.

It is not my intention to suggest that the problem is solved to an extent precluding further improvement, but I do think any work along this line is worth while.

Dear Mr. Peterson:-

After due consideration and comparative tests, we have again decided that wherever perfect projection is to be maintained and flickerless pictures are the paramount issue, there is but one machine--POWER'S!!

As a consequence, you may place our order for two of the latest model Power's 6-B Machines equipped with Type "E" Lamphouse, together with a 50-50 Ampere Double Arc General Electric Motor Generator Set and one 12' x 16' Minusa Gold Fibre Screen for our new Parkway Theatre, which is now under construction.

Trusting that these machines and equipment will give the same satisfactory service as those machines and equipment recently purchased for our Columbia and Blue Bird Theatres, which, by the way, prompted this order, I am, with my very best wishes for your continued success,

Yours very truly,

Many Economies Claimed For New Theatre Seating System

Indicator Board Locates Vacant Seats for Patrons

Announcement that a device which will indicate the vacant seats in a theatre is to be put upon the market has greatly aroused the interest of moving picture exhibitors. A want, long felt by the house manager and the patrons alike, will be filled by this appliance, placed on the market by the Guerin Theatre Seating System.

This device consists of an indicator board which is located in an advantageous spot in the moving picture theatre, so that the incoming patron at a glance can ascertain just how many seats are vacant and in just which row of the house they are located. The indicator board is studded with small white spots so arranged as to be an exact reproduction of the seating arrangement. When a seat is vacant the "spot" appears lighted; when occupied, the "spot" appears dark. The spots have the same effect as single lights, although individual lights are not used.

Numerous advantages are claimed by the makers of the seating system. Saving in the number of ushers; saving in bookkeeping and management; increased box office returns due to better satisfied patrons, and the quicker handling of waiting crowd and the aiding of the manager in checking up on the box office, are points of vantage offered by the Guerin Theatre Seating System.

A large saving will be gained by the house owner at the start in the matter of ushers. With the new indicator board seating system the large staff of attendants, employed at considerable expense, will be limited. No ushers are required at all, although some of the larger houses may prefer to retain one or two, where previously twelve had been employed. The two will be able to handle the crowds a great deal more quickly than under the old expensive method.

In the eliminating of ushers it will follow that less office help will be needed, as a large staff of employees necessitates a great bulk of bookkeeping, time keeping and managerial work. The owner will be attracted by these two economic features.

At present the patron of the moving picture theatre is required to wait in turn and then accept the seat given them by the usher, while under the indicator board system the waiting is done away with. Immediately upon entering the theatre the patron gains a thorough knowledge of every vacant seat in the house by glancing at the indicator board, and will be able to select and occupy his seat without any waiting. Often patrons who have been standing in line are glad to get any seat in the house, taking the first ones the usher leads them to. On the other hand, most patrons have a decided preference in which section of the theatre they wish to sit, and failure to get a seat in this section leaves them discontented. This is especially true in the larger theatre. Selection of seats by the indicator board eliminates this. A glance tells where every empty seat is located and the patron merely has to choose the seats in the section that he desires.

Large numbers of patrons will be seen waiting in the backs of some theatres for long periods of time, while seats in different sections of the house are vacant. In the darkness of a moving picture theatre it is impossible for the usher to locate every vacant seat. These seats represent a great wastage to the owner every week.

One hundred per cent use of all the seats in the house is possible under the indicator board system, every seat unoccupied showing up at once to the incoming patron. The theatregoer will be attracted to the show house where he knows that a long, tedious waiting is avoided—where he knows that he can be seated at once.

One particular feature which this system presents is that no broken seat will be registered as vacant. In some theatres where seats have been broken rows upon rows of patrons will be discommoded all evening by people going to those seats, because they see that they are empty. Not only in this respect is a great service rendered the patron by the indicator board ,but the loss to the box office caused by broken seats is stopped at once. Immediately after the last show in the evening every seat registers as vacant on the board except those which are in a broken condition. The attention of the manager is called to these, so that the seat is repaired and may be used on the next day.

Besides all the economies claimed by the system, there is the added one of safety. In case of fire or panic, naturally, the persons nearest the aisles will get out the quickest, not stopping to raise their seats. Every second counts when the patron is nervous and excited and confusion is caused by those attempting to reach the aisle bumping into the lowered seats, hindering their passage. The Guerin system will prove a life-saver in this respect, as seats will automatically rise when vacated, leaving a clear passage to the aisle.

Winter Garden, Fla., will have an up to date house in the Kemp-Cary theatre

Winter Garden, Fla., Has Attractive House

Winter Garden, Fla., is justly proud of its latest theatre, the Kemp Carey, which upon its opening to the public showed that it is complete with all modern devices and equipment, and is a house which would do justice to any town much larger than Winter Garden.

The attractive theatre is built of Georgia red brick with a buff stucco front of Spanish design. It has a seating capacity of 500 people and embodies all the latest conveniences. E. C. Bray is the owner of the house and Mrs. E. C. Bray will act as the general manager.

E. H. Trimble of Orlando, Fla., was the architect, while McNeil-Davis were the builders.

British Engineer Explains Workings of Revolving Shutter

Claimed to Effect Wonderful Economies

By Sydney F. Walker, R. N., M. I. E. E.

Mr. Branson, of Cardiff, has introduced a revolving shutter constructed on entirely new lines, and he claims for it considerable economies in the matter of the current required for a picture at a certain distance and of a certain size. In one case reported from the Oddfellows Hall, Stamford, Lincs., the current required is stated to be only 25 amperes, and the management are apparently of opinion that if they could avoid mushrooms on the negative carbon of the arc lamp, they could do with 15 amperes. The size of the picture and the throw are not stated, but it will be everyone's experience that even 25 amperes is a very small current for almost any kind of picture. In another case, reported from Johannesburg, it is stated that there is a saving of from 25 to 30 per cent, as I understand the matter, in the current required.

The shutter consists of an outer containing ring of vulcanite, or vulcanized fibre, with a central disc of the same material for carrying the spindle upon which the shutter revolves, and to which the blades are attached. As usual, the blades are fixed between the central disc and the containing ring; but in place of being stamped out of one piece of metal, or other suitable material, the whole thing is built up. But the masking blade that cuts off the light rays from the screen while the picture is being changed, and the auxiliary blades, are quite different from the usual three-bladed, two-bladed, or single blade shutter.

The masking blade is made of what the inventor calls a transparent substance. He has asked me not to mention the substance he is now using, as he is hoping to be able to employ a fireproof substance. The substance he is using at present is very strong, does not easily break if exposed to a knock; but he wants to get beyond that.

As I understand the matter, the masking blade is not transparent; I should call it translucent—I explained the difference between transparent and translucent a few articles back. You can see through the masking blade, or portions of it—at any rate, not the whole of it, as I will explain later—just as you can see through a tinted window pane; but you do not get the same lighting effect. Objects viewed through, say, tinted glass are not so clear as when seen through clear glass. We may carry the matter further. A clean, clear glass window enables us to see objects outside the window or objects inside if we are outside and the inside is illuminated; but if the window glass is dirty, or steamy, or frosted, we cannot distinguish the objects on the other side of the glass so well as when the glass is clear and clean. As I shall presently explain, the inventor has deliberately employed what I prefer to call translucent material, in order that he may employ it for the masking blade.

The masking blade is shaped in the form of an oval, or, as mathematicians would call it, an ellipse, with a small piece attached to the lower side to enable it to be secured to the central disc.

The blade is divided into three sections, approximately equal in area; the portion on the right and left are merely flat on both sides, but the portion in the middle of the blade has raised bars on it on the side nearest the lens. The bars are of the same material as the remainder of the blade. Presumably the whole blade is made in one piece, probably moulded, the bars being formed at the same time as the oval and the piece for attaching it to the central disc, also the holes for the attaching screws. The bars are merely narrow portions of the material, slighty raised above the remainder. The inventor calls them undulations, but I should hardly describe them so. It is as though some very thin strips had been fixed to the surface of that portion of the masking blade, in certain positions; their use will be seen presently. The spaces between the bars are slightly below the surfaces of the portions of the blades on the right and left. The bars are sometimes across the blade from right to left, sometimes vertical, supposing the shutter to be in the position shown in the illustration, with the masking blade at the top, and sometimes at an angle with the vertical or the horizontal. They are parallel with each other, and with the direction in which the picture is moving at the moment. Thus, if the shutter is in such a position, when the picture is moving at its fastest rate, that it is at the side, the bars will be across the masking blade, parallel with the bottom of the attaching portion. If the masking blade is in the position shown in the drawing, relatively to the gate, the bars are fixed vertically; and if the masking blade is in any other position, at any angle between the two positions described above, the bars will be at such an angle that they are parallel to the gate—that is to say, to the direction in which the picture is moving.

Branson revolving shutter

The inventor of this shutter has studied the whole matter very carefully indeed, and his study has resulted in the above arrangement.

It will be remembered that when the picture moves—when a new picture replaces the one that has just been shown on the screen—the motion of the film downwards is slow at first, then the speed of motion increases rapidly, and then decreases again until the new picture is in place. This is due to the working of the Maltese cross, or its equivalent. When the pin on the disc enters the slot of the cross, it at first moves slowly; when the pin is fairly in the slot, what engineers call acceleration takes place, the pin moves faster and faster till it comes to the end of the slot; then what engineers call de-celeration follows—the pin moves fast for a short time, then slower and slower, till, finally, it moves out of the slot and is locked. During the first and last periods, those of comparatively slow motion, the two side portions of the masking blade are in operation. As one side of the blade enters the beam of light, it gradually absorbs a certain portion of the light rays—it does not cut them off altogether—and it colors the rays it allows to pass through with a blue tint. Similarly, when the rear portion of the blade is intercepting the light rays, the same thing takes place; the whole of the light rays are not allowed to pass on to the screen, but a large percentage are, and those are given a blue tint. During the period when the picture is moving fastest—that is to say, when the centre of the masking blade is cutting off the rays of light—the bars and the lower spaces between them, it is claimed, reflect the rays at right angles and practically disperse them, so that no light rays of any value are passing on to the screen during that period. It is claimed by the inventor that light is saved by this arrangement, and also that, as he expresses it, "flicker is attacked at its source." With the ordinary three-bladed shutter, it will be remembered, the light rays are completely cut off from the screen as soon as the whole of the blade is interposed across the beam of light; also, immediately the opaque shutter enters the beam of light, a portion of the rays are cut off. On the other hand, when the shutter blade emerges from the light beam, the rays of light are set free. A portion of the rays, of course, are set free first, as the body of the blade begins to move out of the beam, and finally all of the rays are set free. The inventor of the "transparent" shutter claims that the arrangement of the opaque shutter gives rise to very striking contrasts in the light rays from the screen entering the eyes of spectators, and that this is the primary cause of the sensation known as flicker. He claims, on the other hand, that with his shutter the light rays are cut off very gradually indeed; the shape of the blade ensures its entering the beam of light very gradually, and the translucent material of which it is composed ensures that only a portion of the light rays are absorbed until the picture is moving at its fastest rate, and then the middle of the masking blade comes into operation and deflects the whole of the rays. Again, as the blade moves forward after the middle portion has passed through the beam of light, more and more rays are set free, and finally the whole of the beam is available for the next picture.

The auxiliary blade is of a totally different pattern to the usual auxiliary blades. With the opaque shutter, the auxiliary blades are also apaque, and with three-bladed shutters, as commonly used, the auxiliaries are spaced at equal distances in arc, equal lengths of the circumference of the shutter, from the masking blade. In the "Transparent" shutter the auxiliary

Guerin Vacant-Seat Indicating Systems

WHAT IT IS: The Guerin Theatre Seating Systems are devices which indicate by means of an Indicator Board placed in an advantageous location, all of the vacant seats and the exact location of each. Seats are indicated on the board by small white "spots." When seat is vacant "spot" appears lit; when occupied, "spot" is dark. In this way, patrons and ushers can tell at a glance just how many seats are vacant, whether they are in twos, threes, etc., and in just which row located. (N. B.—Individual lights are not used, but these "spots" have same effect.)

WHAT IT WILL DO.

1. SAVE THOUSANDS YEARLY BY REDUCING NUMBER OF USHERS.
2. MEAN SAVING OF THOUSANDS YEARLY BY PROMPTLY FILLING SEATS.
3. WILL ELIMINATE MANY ANNOYANCES AND INCONVENIENCES NOW EXISTING.
4. SAVE TIME AND LABOR FOR THEATRES.
5. PATRONS WILL BE ABLE TO CHOOSE AND OCCUPY SEATS WITHOUT ASSISTANCE AND WITHOUT WAITING.
6. WILL FURNISH SUPER-SERVICE YET UNKNOWN IN THEATRES.
7. THEATRES USING THIS SYSTEM WILL RECEIVE PUBLIC APPROVAL AND THEIR PATRONAGE.
8. INCREASE BOX OFFICE RECEIPTS BY FROM $5,000 TO $20,000 YEARLY.
9. ENABLE APPROXIMATE CHECK ON BOX OFFICE AT ALL TIMES FOR THE OWNER.
10. SAFER THEATRES IN CASE OF FIRE OR PANIC.
11. PATRONS WILL NOT HAVE TO CONTINUALY WALK UP AND DOWN AISLES LOOKING FOR SEATS.

(Write for our descriptive free booklet, "Handling 1921 Crowds in a 1950 Way," outlining the above advantage in detail)

Live-Wire State Managers Wanted: For live, capable men, this is really a golden opportunity to get on the ground-floor of a proposition which two years hence will be a gigantic enterprise. This is an opportunity unparalleled in the amusement field. We want good, live wire, real producers in each state—men who can handle other men. This will be worth from $10,000 to $30,000 per year to those who qualify and are accepted. In writing for particulars, state sales experience, how long in amusement field and where, present business, territory desired, whether you are financially interested in theatres, and references. This will be treated absolutely confidential.

One Real Live Exhibitor Only!! THERE IS A BIG SCOOP awaiting the first theatre in each city or town to install this wonderful new system—when we begin installations. Every man, woman and child in your town who realizes what trouble and inconvenience they put up with now in trying to locate vacant seats, will go to this "first theatre" if only merely to see WHAT IT IS AND HOW IT WORKS! DO YOU REALIZE WHAT THIS MEANS FOR YOU? We have evolved a unique "option plan" which will be allowed to only ONE theatre in each town or city. This option will guarantee the particular house to be the first in its respective city to use this marvelous system, reap the golden harvest sure to follow. These options do not cost one cent, and will not be sold under any circumstances. These options place the theatre under no obligations whatever and the lucky ones will hang the S. R. Advantages of Vacuum Cleaning in Theatres Are Legion

An Article by G. E. Kent, of Kent Vacuum Cleaner Co.

The public expects a theatre to be attractive and safe. Cleanliness is an attribute to both these qualities. A clean theatre is a pleasure to the patrons, as well as a safeguard against contagion.

The public is more sensitive about sanitary conditions of public and semi-public buildings than ever before. Other things being equal, the theatre which is constantly cleaned by the best methods, and which make this fact known, will receive the best and largest patronage.

Aside from the sales value of a vacuum cleaned theatre, there are distinct economic advantages. One regards the cost of maintenance.

It has been said that in sweeping only one-half the dirt which the broom comes in contact with is actually gathered, and that the remainder floats through the air to settle down in some other place, to be again divided—(with the added accumulation)—into 50-50, and so on.

This dust, settling on the seats, furnishings, walls and decorations, brings around very much sooner than need be the time for reupholstering, refinishing and, most costly of all, redecorating. The saving of this cost alone will pay for all the vacuum cleaning that any theatre could possibly do.

Another economy is effected in the regular daily cleaning. Cleaning by vacuum reduces the time of broom cleaning by one-half. Additional time is saved because dusting is eliminated, and time saved is dollars saved.

A theatre has some specific cleaning problems which are met more satisfactorily by vacuum cleaning than by any other method. Large, powerful vacuum cleaners are now made which will actually eat dirt. They gulp it down. By reason of the air moving in large volume at high velocity, dirt which is from one to two inches away from the cleaning tool is sucked in. The dirt is drawn from around the legs or standards of the seats, from cracks and corners, and from the intricacies of the decorations. The stage floors, carpets, curtains and scenes, which must be kept free from dust because of frequent manipulation, can be well cleaned and kept clean.

There are two kinds of vacuum cleaners suitable for use in theatres which have proven their worth by thorough and economic work. They are the installed, or built-in, type and the portable type.

The installed cleaner is preferable, but must be put in, in most cases, at the time the theatre is constructed, as it is difficult to get piping in afterward, particularly if there is no basement under the entire theatre. But with a system of piping a powerful machine can be located at a central point, and out of the way, which will develop plenty of capacity for moving a large volume of air at high velocity. This is an absolute essential for rapid cleaning.

Large hose can be used, so that matches, gum wrappers, candy papers and the like can be removed as easily as a speck of dust. The dirt and debris is all drawn to a pan in the machine, from which it can be emptied without being scattered.

Such a plant can be obtained in sizes to take care of several operators working at the same time.

Those theatres which cannot put in the installed system have recourse to large, portable units which can be connected to the wiring. Machines of this kind have been developed and are in use for taking care of two operators at a time and are capable of excellent work.

Every theatre using vacuum cleaners should advertise that fact on their screen. It increases patronage.

Float of Winfield-Kerner Company used in big Elks' parade

Wenfield-Kerner Factory in Elks Parade

In the recent electrical parade given by producing companies and firms identified with the film industry in Los Angeles in honor of the 125,000 Elks who attended the annual convention there, one of the brightest spots was that of the Winfield-Kerner float which was illuminated by generator operated by the engine of the motor truck. This float was lighted by thirteen 50,000 candle power lamps, products of the Winfield-Kerner factory.

Practically every studio of Los Angeles was represented in the parade which constituted a very imposing array of floats, impossible in other cities except by use of trolley wires or lighting. The presence of the film industry in Los Angeles and the studios' equipment of generators mounted on trucks made possible an array of lighted floats. Arrangements for the electrical display were in charge of B. P. Fineman, vice-president of Ambassador Pictures Corp.; M. C. Levee, general manager of Robert Brunton Studios, and Clark Thomas, general manager of Thomas Ince Studio. The electrical arrangements were in charge of Harry Brown, superintendent of the electrical department of Universal City.

"Auto-Simplexes" Cherry Valley Theatre

That an automobile is a valuable asset to the equipment salesman in making sales is proven by the recent experience of Olan L. Hawk, who is touring the northeastern part of New York State in the interest of the Howells Cine Equipment Co., who have lately acquired this territory for the exclusive sale of the Simplex projectors and allied accessories.

Just a few days ago, Hawk drove his car up to the front of the Star theatre, Cherry Valley, N. Y., and interviewed Mrs. C. D. Winnie, the owner and manager of this cozy four-hundred-seat theatre. Their conversation finally drifted to improving the projection and Hawk suggested a Simplex projector which Mrs. Winnie agreed might help but wanted to be shown.

Not to be outdone, Hawk jumped into his car, stepped on the gas, said, "Excuse my dust," and headed for the home of the Simplex, where he obtained a Simplex projector, packed it into the car and returned to Cherry Valley a day later to make a demonstration that would verify his previous statements.

As to the outcome of the test, Hawk proudly shows Mrs. Winnie's check in full for the projector.

"Without my car, the demonstration would not have been possible without a lot of expense," said Hawk and added "If you've got the goods, why not show them?"

Illuminating Engineers' Convention in Sept.

The Fifteenth Annual Convention of the Illuminating Engineering Society will be held in Rochester, New York, September 26th to 29th, 1921. The Powers Hotel has been selected as convention headquarters.

The Committee on Papers is arranging a program which offers a wider variety of scientific and commercial interest, indicating that this convention will attain to the high technical standard established by previous conventions.

While technical consideration of lighting matters will as usual dominate the convention, some time is left for inspection of Rochester's interesting industries and for recreation and entertainment. Special provision is being made to make the visit of ladies enjoyable and interesting.

British Engineer Explains Shutter

blade is built up of several small blades, and the whole thing is fixed on the opposite side of the containing ring to the masking blade; it is attached to the central disc, and to the ring. At each end of the auxiliary blade is a small blade, made of the same material as the masking blade, but colored yellow; and between the two yellow blades are three vacant spaces, divided by opaque radial arms. The vacant spaces can be regulated by a screw attached to the central disc, so that more or less light can be allowed to pass through them according to the conditions under which the projector is working. If the atmosphere of the hall of the cinema is very smoky, for instance, the clear spaces are opened by the sliding bars behind them to their fullest extent; if, on the other hand, there is an excess of light, the spaces are closed up by the sliding bars, more or less, as may be required.

The inventor's idea in using the yellow blades is to combine the light rays passing through them, with the blue rays passing through the right or left hand portions of the masking blade, to make up as nearly as possible white light. As I understand the matter, the masking blade, when it comes into operation, first gives a blue tone to the light rays, gradually increasing the number of rays that are given the blue tint, and as it leaves the light beam the light rays are again given a blue tint, or, perhaps it would be more correct to say, the blue tint is retained until the light rays are clear of the masking blade, and then a minute fraction of a second afterwards they are given a yellow tint, practically super-posed upon the blue tint, white light it is claimed being the result.

The question of the best form and the best arrangement of the revolving shutter has been the subject of a considerable amount of discussion and experiment. I believe the crucial experiments that led to the adoption of the three-bladed shutter were made at Cornell University in America, and the two extra blades were added because it was found that the single blade gave rise to a painful flicker; the contrast between a full beam of light at one instant and no light at a very minute fraction of a second afterwards, and again full light at another minute fraction of a second later, was found to be painful to the eyes. Careful experiment showed that by cutting off the beam of light by additional blades at equal intervals the eye was more accustomed to the change, and the effect of flicker on the eyes was almost eliminated. As I remarked in an article a few weeks ago, flicker is not absolutely eliminated, but for a large number of pictures that are shown it is imperceptible. But, as everyone knows who has to use the projector, the addition of the auxiliary blade robs the screen of a certain portion of light; the light rays are cut off from the screen entirely while the blades are passing through the light beam, and with that cut off by the masking blade this means that 50 per cent. of the light is lost, or, in other words, the arc lamp or whatever the source of light may be has to furnish double the number of light rays or lumens that it would have to furnish if it were not for the action of the opaque masking and auxiliary blades of the shutter.

The inventor of the "transparent" shutter claims, and I think with justice, that his arrangement of shutter enables a projector to be worked with less current in the lamp, or less of whatever may be the substance that is burnt, acetylene gas or hydrogen gas, in any other kind of burner. I will put it this way: I think it must be self-evident that if the transparent shutter gives as good a picture in every way as the three-bladed opaque shutter, it must save a considerable amount of current, because so much more of the light rays from the objective lens system reach the screen; also it appears to me that the claim for reduced flicker is quite sound. It is quite true that with the opaque shutter the whole of the light rays are not cut off at once; it requires a certain definite time for the masking blade to pass through the beam of light; as it enters the beam it gradually cuts off the light rays; but in my opinion the manner of cutting off is made more sudden, much more brutal, if I may use the expression, than the gentle method, as it appears to me in which the "transparent" masking blade does the work. It appears to me also that the inventor's claim for his auxiliary blades is justified. His view is that different conditions of running the film through the gate, different rate, as well as different conditions of the atmosphere and different conditions of the source of light, can be met by the adjustment of the moveable blades described above.—The Cinema, England.

Dayton Theatre Model of Display Decorations

The utilization of all available space in theatre lobbies for the display of photographs is well carried out by the Auditorium theatre of Dayton, O. This house, which is operated by Ascher Bros., has a lobby which is rather small in comparison to the size of the remainder of the theatre, but the photograph displays are well brought out.

Always appreciating the importance of showing photos in their lobbies to the best possible advantage, the Ascher Bros. had cabinets installed which are hand carved and beautifully finished, and of such a high quality that they make a lasting impression on the passerby.

The photograph cabinets in the lobby, the frames around the columns, and also the ticket booth are hand carved, being the work of the Newman Manufacturing Co., of Cincinnati. The Ascher Bros. has received good returns from their high-class decorating and display frames of the lobby.

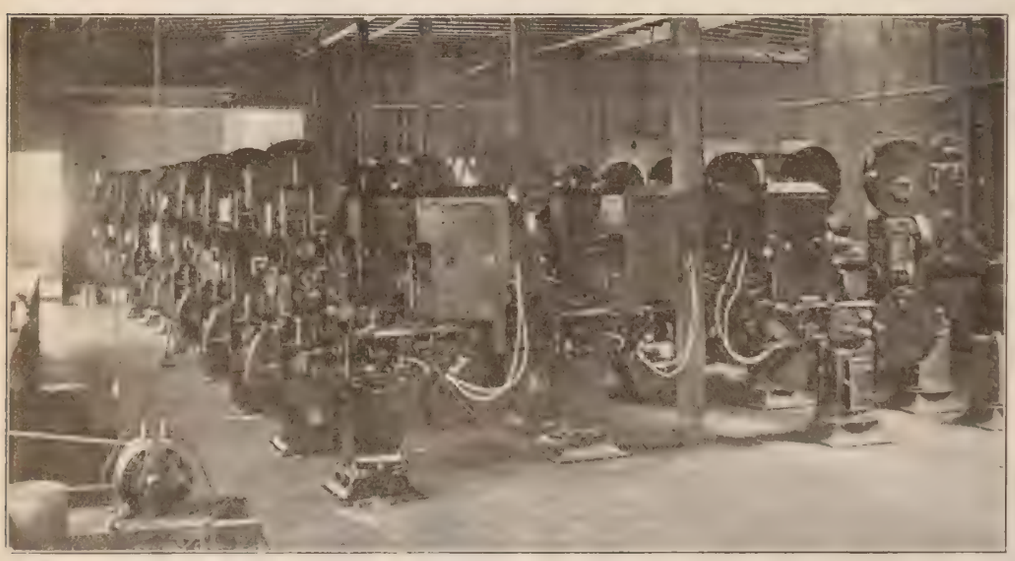
Install Projectors in Sun Theatre

A trio of new Motiograph projection machines with the most up-to-date improvements have been installed in the operating room of the Sun Theatre in Omaha.

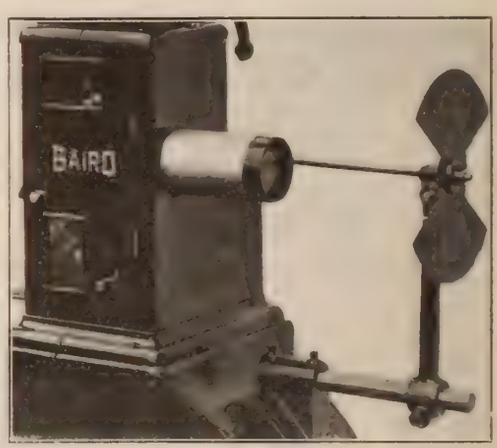
The other machines that have stood the wear and tear of five years have been transferred to the Muse Theatre, under the same management as the Sun.

The Motiograph machines are of the enclosed type with an automatic arc control and measure meter that registers the footage of the film.

"Installation of a complete outfit of Motiograph is in keeping with the policy of the Sun Theatre management to give its patrons the best there is in the amusement line," declared Harry Goldberg manager of the Sun.—KENNEBECK.



Battery of U. J. Proctor Automatic Projectors on the testing rack of the factory at Shelton, Conn. The testing room is in direct charge of B. A. Proctor, inventor and designer of the projector. He is assisted by a staff of skilled and experienced engineers specially trained in the construction, assembling and testing of projectors. Every machine is subjected to rigid tests, not only for finished mechanical and electrical construction, but also as a completed projector. A novel feature of the plant is that every part is made on the premises, even to the japanning and nickel plating



Simplicity and rigidity mark the new method of mounting the outbored bearing and the extended shutter shaft on the Baird projector. By this means a shutter shaft of any length can be used, enabling the projectionist to set the shutter where it will cut off the light ray at the smallest point

Howells Co. Have New Service Dept.

Announcement of the establishment of a new service to help out the projectionist whenever any difficulty is experienced with his equipment is made by the Howells Cine Equipment Co.

In creating this department the Howells Cine Equipment Co., have made arrangements with the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., which has a large warehouse and service station at 467 Tenth Avenue, New York City, to maintain a staff of engineers, who are specialists in looking after troubles on motor generators and switchboard equipment. The Howells Cine Equipment Co. have over one hundred of these equipments operating at Present in New York City, Brooklyn, Long Island, Jersey City and Newark.

The plan is to give service twenty-four hours a day for three hundred and sixty-five days of the year. When the projectionist does not understand the proper workings or should any difficulty arise at any time, an expert is immediately sent to the theatre and corrections made on the job, with no charge to the user of the Howell Westinghouse set. Ford cars are used by the emergency men.

"1921 Will Reward Fighters"

Recent reports from the Dwyer Bros. & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, belie the fact that business is bad for those who adopted for their standard the Chicago Tribune's slogan, "1921 Will Reward Fighters."

Realizing that one of the most important parts of a sales campaign is to have in stock for immediate delivery the goods one is selling, these enterprising distributors accordingly got in a large stock of projectors and started out after business, the effects of which resulted within a few weeks' time in the following Simplex installations, together with other equipment:

Liberty theatre, Dayton, Ky., two Regular Type Simplex; Midland Mining Company, Tribbey, Ky., one Mazda Type Simplex; Liberty theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, one Regular Type Simplex; Burnett theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, two Regular Type Simplex; K. of P. ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

KANSAS CITY

The Phoenix Film Company of Kansas City has started a legal battle against the Phoenix Production Company, St. Louis, claiming that the latter concern is infringing upon the title of the Kansas City company. Joe Fox, president of the Phoenix Film Company, has obtained Lawrence Goldman, counsel of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, as his attorney and Mr. Goldman is in St. Louis this week investigating the case.

At a meeting between the independent exchanges and a committee representing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, it was decided to send out a series of letters to all motion picture theatres, urging exhibitors to book only independent pictures during the month of September. It also was arranged whereby an Independent Day dinner would be given by the independent exchanges to the independent exhibitors at the Pekin Inn, Kansas City. Charles H. Burkey presided at the meeting.

Missouri exhibitors, through Lawrence Goldman, counsel of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, are gradually winning their points of contention in the controversy with revenue agents regarding the methods of collecting tax on admissions sold at the box office. The only vital point at issue now concerns the printing of the name of the theatre on the tickets, which Collector Buchanan, of the Kansas City district, has not entirely conceded. Mr. Goldman last week offered to start a friendly law suit, putting the matter up to any federal judge selected by Collector Buchanan, but Mr. Buchanan asserted that he did not believe such a step would be necessary as he hoped that matters would soon be adjusted and a formal ruling obtained through the department at Washington.

James M. White has been appointed assistant manager of the Kansas City Fox office. Mr. White formerly was in the contract department at the home office and assistant manager of the Fox exchange at Washington.

The new Strand theatre at Oxford, Kas., will formally open its doors to the public this month.

Preparations for the big joint convention of Missouri and Kansas exhibitors at the Hotel Baltimore in Kansas City, September 12 and 13, virtually are completed. A midnight banquet, speakers of national repute, special executive meetings and many other phases of vital importance await visiting exhibitors on these two days. Among the problems which will be taken up by men capable of discussing them are: admission tax, film rental tax, raw stock tariff, music tax, internal revenue matters, open shop, film market conditions, centralized distributors, equitable contracts, enforcement of the deposit law, blue laws, participation in politics, freedom of the screen, lowering of film rental and organization finance.

The formation of a new chain of theatres in Kansas and Oklahoma is now under way, according to I. H. Cooper of the Wichita theatre at Wichita, Kas. C. C. McCollister, Oklahoma City, and W. D. Jochems, Wichita, are associated with Mr. Cooper in the corporation which is being formed and which, it is said, hopes to interest eastern capital. The proposed deal includes the Criterion theatre, Oklahoma City, and the Star and Wichita theatres of Wichita, Kas.

The Princess theatre at Sterling, Kas., has been sold by J. C. Hosey to C. H. Teats.

CLEVELAND

Manager Huetzenmiller of the Virginia theatre, Cleveland, just got back from a nine-weeks motor trip to the coast. The trip included a tour of Yellowstone, a visit to the Grand Canon, and a climb up Pike's Peak. His wife and daughter accompanied him on the trip.

The Grand Opera House, Mansfield, opened this week after having been dead for several months. It is now under the management of Jack Greenbaum, former owner and manager of the Alhambra theatre of Cleveland. "Too Much Speed" with Wallie Reid was the first big feature attraction, to be succeeded in turn by only high class first run pictures.

Fred J. Scheuerman, assistant manager for Robertson-Cole, is going back to the local Select office as assistant manager, a position which he formerly occupied there.

Louis Loeb, one of the officials of Associated Producers has been in town visiting District Manager H. A. Bandy and local manager George W. Erdmann. Loeb is touring the Associated Producers' exchanges just to get personally acquainted with its members.

The Ohio Exchange for Educational Films has closed with the Cleveland ject releases ever concluded in this city. The Loew interests have signed up for Loew motion picture houses what is said to be the largest contract for short subthe entire output of Educational short subjects for the season of 1921-1922. Most of these pictures will be shown at the Stillman, State and Euclid. The first comedy of the new series, Lloyd Hamilton in "Robinson Crusoe, Jr.," was the opening comedy attraction at the Euclid this week. "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," featuring Johnny Hines, will have its first official presentation in the United States, following a try-out in Cincinnati, at the State theatre the week of August 27. Johnny Hines will be here in person for the occasion, and will take part in the entertainment during that week. Richard Thorpe, who plays second to Hines' leads, will also be in town.

The Lande Film Distributing Company, 301 Cleveland Film Exchange building, will henceforth distribute Reelcraft releases in Ohio and Kentucky.

CANADA

Following the re-opening of the Allen theatre in Kingston, Ontario, arrangements were made with the Kingston Daily Standard for a co-operative stunt in which a single pass to the theatre was given to every advertiser in the classified department of the newspaper. An advertisement of 25 words for three insertions cost 50 cents, for which a free ticket to the theatre was given at the newspaper office.

The latest moving picture theatre to be opened in Canada by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation of Toronto is the Capitol theatre of Victoria, B. C. This large new house is now practically finished but it is not scheduled to be opened until Labor Day, September 5.

James Davidson, formerly with Famous Players Film Service, Toronto, has arranged to join Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, to be office manager.

Manager N. K. Miller of Pantages theatre, Toronto, and Mrs. Miller recently spent a vacation at Elkhart, Indiana.

Announcement is made that the receipts at the Imperial theatre, Montreal, Quebec, for the one week's run of "The Battle of the Century," the Dempsey-Carpentier fight picture, amounted to $21,353. At the Canadian theatre, Quebec City, the receipts with the same attraction for one week amounted to $7,563. At the Royal theatre, St. John's, Quebec, a town with a population of 12,000, the feature drew receipts of $1,860 for four days.

OKLAHOMA CITY

A threatened strike of musicians at practically all theatres in Okalhoma City was averted when the executive committee of the Musicians' Union decided not to press their demand for higher wages than now paid.

The proposed scale of $50 per week for orchestra leaders and $38 for side men was to be increased to $56 per week for leaders and 48 for side men.

The Okalhoma City Theatre Managers have been unusually fair with their musicians, and several are paying more than the prescribed scale. With the trend of downward prices, it is not thought that an increase over the present scale will be demanded.

Nat Wolf, branch manager of the Educational Film Exchange, at Dallas, Texas, is in Oklahoma City to open an exchange for Oklahoma. The expansion is the inevitable outcome of the continual increase in Educational's business.

C. O. Fulgham will have charge of the Oklahoma City exchange, and says that he will make things hum, right off from the reel.

Misses Cutler and Jack, owners of the Odeon of Bartlesville, Okla., purchased last week the Gem theatre at Dewey, Okla.., and have taken charge.

Mrs. Gertrude Lee has purchased the Happy Hour theatre at Hominy, Okla., from W. G. Shinn and has taken charge.

Mack Tritch, manager for R. D. Lewis Exchange in Oklahoma City, has returned from a ten days' vacation spent in Colorado, and has already succeeded in making up for some of his time lost. He reports as having had a fine time.

Tal Richards, manager of the Independent Film Service Company at Oklahoma City, has gone over to Vitagraph as chief booker. His successor with Independent has not as yet been named.

C. W. Griffin, owner of the Midwest Film Exchange, has taken over active management of that concern, being assisted by his wife, who is performing the duties of cashier. Finley York, recently shipper, has been made booker.

Mr. Pittinger, former manager, has made other connections but with what concern has not yet been learned.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Shea's North Park theatre re-opened for the fall and winter season Sunday, August 21 with the same program as that presented at Shea's Hippodrome downtown. This new policy is expected to fill the neighborhood house at capacity at all performances. Julian Caster, formerly assistant conductor at Shea's Hippodrome, will direct the North Park orchestra this season. Art Amm continues as manager.

Richard C. Fox, Select manager, has engaged Mell R. Edwards and Otto Siegel as members of his sales staff. Mr. Edwards and Mr. Siegel are both well known in Buffalo and throughout the territory, both having been connected with several local exchanges.

John Sitterly, formerly manager of the Buffalo Dooley exchange and one of Buffalo's veteran film men, has been engaged by Fred M. Zimmerman to represent Nu-Art Pictures in the Syracuse territory. Mr. Zimmerman and Archie Moses, Robertson-Cole chief, have just returned from a motor tour through the Adirondacks, where both men lined up much business for the fall and winter.

Charles Faust, for almost three years a member of the Select sales force has accepted a similar position with Robertson-Cole. Ray Powers is now on the road for this company and is sending in a large number of contracts.

Fred M. Zimmerman of Nu-Art is building a new theatre on the site of the old Oliver theatre in North Tonawanda, N. Y. It will have a seating capacity of 1,000. Mr. Zimmerman is conducting a contest in Tonawanda to get a name for the house. It will open September 15.

Buffalo is to have a new Film Building. It will be located at 505-509 Pearl street. It will cost $250,000, be six stories high and house about 12 exchanges. The board of fire underwriters have approved the plans which call for many new safety appliances. The structure will be ready for occupancy next spring. The Great Lakes Realty Company is launching the proposition.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"Quo Vadis"

(Revival of George Kleine's Italian Spectacle—Released by F. B. Warren Corporation—Length, 8 Reels)

IT is eight years since "Quo Vadis" emigrated from Italy to startle American producers as a spectacle and to set new standards for admission and rental prices and to interest people in the motion picture who had never looked on the picture theatre except as a place where custard pies were used as properties for alleged comedies and where drama of a sort was dispensed via the white-washed wall.

"Quo Vadis" went the rounds of the picture houses, playing to a new clientele for the photoplay and bringing gross returns to its sponsor, George Kleine and to the exhibitors, that stood as a record, as film history is reckoned, for a long time.

Now in 1921 it is again presented, with new prints of course, art titles and a general refurbishing and polishing so far as it is possible to go, to improve the original offering.

"Quo Vadis" after nearly a decade on the shelf while the industry has been progressing is still a magnificent spectacle, in places, telling a rather episodic historical story of Rome in the days of Nero. In other parts, especially the early reels, it is old fashioned screen costume drama. However "Quo Vadis" is a production to be viewed not in the same manner as an ordinary drama of today. When it was previously presented exploitation was an unknown quantity and the art of getting people who were affiliated with churches into the picture theatre a rather hopeless job.

It is in exploitation and interesting those religiously inclined that "Quo Vadis" in 1921 has one strong appeal to the exhibitor. The picture should have the support of the churches and church people.

On the other hand it can be sold to the fan for the magnificent spectacle it is and it will get by with both classes. The former because of its religious story, the latter because of the size of the ensemble scenes, the big settings, etc.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"His Unlucky Berth"

(Star Comedy—Universal)

"HIS UNLUCKY BERTH" presents Bert Roach in the role of a Mr. Ka Flippe,' a summer resort masher, the object of whose initial flirtation proves to be a married woman with a very pugnacious husband. Ka Flippe is ordered by the husband to take the first train out of town. Ka Flippe complies, but happens to take a train which is also boarded by hubby and his wife. Most of the action which follows transpires in and about the sleeping car of the train. By untoward accidents, Ka Flippe is repeatedly placed in seemingly compromising situations, and most of his time is spent in dodging punishment at the hands of the enraged husband as a result of the complications.

While "His Unlucky Berth" is good for a number of laughs in consequence of the interplay of action carried on by the principals of the triangle, considerable curiosity is excited by a fourth player, a "mysterious person," who keeps walking to and fro from his own berth to a compartment at the end of the car. The mystery centers around the motive that prompts him to peep repeatedly through the key-hole of the compartment—an action which he always terminates just before another player enters the aisle of the sleeper. The effect becomes ludicrous. In the end the reason for the "mysterious person's" curiosity is shown to be a bottle of "hooch" resting on a table in the compartment. The principal roles are well played, with primary honors for acting, in our opinion, going to the "mysterious person," whose name is not listed. Length one reel.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Eat and Be Happy"

(Vanity Comedy-Educational)

THIS comedy is of the average variety with a few laughable situations appearing here and there to save it from destruction. In the first place the director or whoever is responsible for its production picked a rather weak story, with the result that the actors have very little to do but run about and engage in grimaces.

The story concerns the disobedient daughter who has a will of her own and is determined to marry the young man of her choice.

When she finds that her father is determined that "she shall not," the comedy begins its action and we find the players in many peculiar situations, some of which are good for laughs.

But when the young lady resorts to the starvation method in order to force "dad" to his senses and we see her lying on a couch, we prepare ourselves for the "big moments."

They do not arrive, however, and the comedy gradually dwindles to a rather slow finish.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Last Hops"

(Chester Outing-Educational)

AS far as scenic value is concerned this one-reeler can compare with the best of its class. The locale is laid in Montana and exploits the rugged scenery of that country in a way that will surely grip and excite those who have the opportunity to view it.

The leading actors are tourists who are engaged in the quest of the grasshopper. As the scenes flash before us we see the "anxious ones" on foot and on horse winding their way through valleys, fording rivers and climbing to dangerous heights.

Meanwhile many views of the animals who are natives to the country are pictured in amusing poses.

And then there is another sort of well-known grasshopper who occasionally appears before our eyes—the sheep of Montana. But bruin is the comedy king.

The final scenes show the grasshoppers up in the "far north" regions. But they crumble away as the tourists seize hold of them.

A good educational.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Both Barrels"

(Two-Reel Western—Universal)

"BOTH BARRELS" presents Jack Perrin in a typical Western screen vehicle. The story in the main is of the traditional sort built up around the sale of a worthless gold mine. There is the fast and straight-shooting hero; the girl who at the crucial moment rides recklessly to the Register's office to save the mine for the hero; the bad men, most of whom eventually "bite the dust" before the hero's deadly aim; and the "salted" mine which in the end is found to be a really valuable piece of property.

"Both Barrels" presents some fast action in parts. There are two realistic fist battles, in one of which the hero is pitted against two adversaries. The heroine, played by Magda Lane, rides horseback with vigor and dash. The chief merit of the picture lies in its action rather than its acting which at times becomes over-stressed. The types are good and the Western atmosphere well presented. Does your audience like a fast-moving Western, and is it willing to accept a story of the stereotyped order and to overlook a note or two of improbability? If so, then "Both Barrels" ought to register—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Snookey's Fresh Heir"

(Chester Comedy-Educational)

"SNOOKEY" isn't very funny in this two reeler—but who cares? It's the novelty with which he puts over situation after situation that interests. And he certainly does interest and is ably assisted by "his woman" and her kid, two very ambitious monkey actors.

It would be impossible to describe the story for there really isn't one. What there is is a combination of situations which follow in logical order and tell the tale of a good father and mother, who are anxious to please their offspring, who is of the rambunctious sort and always given to destruction.

When the overworked father finds that his "child" is exceeding all bounds and that his wife is unable to handle him, he decides to try his hand in a peaceable way and succeeds.

"Snookey" also shows that he is a good housekeeper when his wife is away, giving several exhibitions of washing the dishes, sweeping the floor, cooking the food, and heaven knows what.

Although "Snookey" and his assistants are rather short on comedy in this feature, there is plenty of interest injected by the monkey actors. —FRANK LEONARD.

"The Eden of the Pacific"

(Prizma Scenic)

THIS subject presents a collection of views in colors taken in the Hawaiian Islands. The early shots show the approach to the islands with the broad expanse of restless waters in the foreground, then the irregular coast-line and towering mountains in the background, and behind these the cloud-laden sky—the whole presenting a most pleasing picture and composite of harmonious colors. Next is given a close-up of Honolulu, interspersed with views of different buildings of official or historic import. The scenes that follow—those of the Kilauea, or burning mountain—are highly interesting. Shots of volcanic phenomena have been shown on the screen repeatedly and nearly always win attention, but when the element of color is added—as it is in this subject—the effect is startling. The closing scenes approach the spectacular; the scenes were taken as nightfall descended, the fire-streaked stream of flowing lava and tongues of flame darting here and there from the molten mass appearing in brilliant contrast against the growing darkness.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"DISRAELI"

(Distinctive Productions-United Artists)

Conclusive Proof That the Screen Is Progressing

GEORGE ARLISS' much-heralded screen production of "Disraeli," which, as a stage play, was his vehicle for a number of years, was everything that the premiere audience at the New York Strand expected. Mr. Arliss, a true student of his art, gives a performance which one has a right to expect from him, but dare not hope for from others less experienced or gifted. His pantomime is beautiful to watch; fascinating to follow. He gets the utmost out of every scene; he raises, by his powers, to a dramatic level bits of action, which might have been passed over except as leading to the climax.

"Disraeli" is just as high class a piece of work on the screen as it was on the stage. It is, without doubt, far different from ninety-nine per cent. of motion pictures. The story of the crowning achievement in the career of England's Prime Minister during the reign of Queen Victoria, is a simple one, lacking in the excitement, the action, the love interest and tensity common to the screen. The story, as is generally known, is built upon the intricacies of politics, as Disraeli maneuvers to obtain the Suez Canal for England, and thus assure that his sovereign will be Empress of India. Russia is plotting against him. The story serves chiefly to illustrate the character of Disraeli, the crafty, wily, Jewish diplomat, who outwits his enemies by daring a bluff. In with this tale of political intrigue runs two romances; one between two young people, while the other shows Disraeli's remarkable devotion to his wife.

Director Henry Kolker has first of all given infinite attention to detail in the story and as a result the Victorian atmosphere is perfect. And surely he deserves some of the credit for the fact that the several individual scenes stand out as cameo—clear pieces of drama. He has the credit of producing one of the highest class pictures that the screen has ever seen.

Mr. Arliss has a thorough knowledge of pantomime and the stress necessary to obtain the greatest screen value. His acting in "Disraeli" upholds the reputation he has already won. The picture will reach the public backed by the fame that attended the stage play, and the renown of Mr. Arliss. It should draw the higher educated populace because of the artistry of the production and the acting, but it is not entirely a "high-brow" picture. Only the action—or sex—hungry fans will fail to appreciate it. They may call it "talky," dull and lacking in a climatic thrill.

The cast is all to be commended. Mrs. George Arliss makes the character of Lady Beaconsfield truly sympathetic. Louise Huff and Reginald Denny are the youthful lovers.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A treat is in store for the patrons of the ———— theatre on ———— when George Arliss, recognized as one of America's foremost dramatic artists, will be seen in the noted stageplay, "Disraeli." This has been adapted to the screen and one of the most talked-of pictures of the year is the result. It is from the stage play by the noted English dramatist, Louis N. Parker, and is based on the life of the Hon. Benjamin Disraeli, M. P., the Prime Minister of England under Queen Victoria. The play was first produced for the stage in 1911 and became the starring vehicle for Mr. Arliss, in which he toured for six years.

Mr. Arliss occupies a position among the greatest actors of this or any generation. He has played in some of the biggest stage successes, and "Disraeli" itself, when produced in New York, was considered the best dramatic offering of the year. Mr. Arliss is at present playing on Broadway in "The Green Goddess." It was practically by popular demand that this play was made into a photodrama. Mr. Arliss received thousands of letters from the public, who look upon him as the leading exponent of high ideals of the stage, to screen this favorite play. The result is the picture which will enjoy a ———— run at the ———— theatre beginning ————. The screen adaption was made by Forrest Halsey and Henry Kolker, a master of screen technique, directed. Mr. Arliss is supported by a specially selected cast and the all around perfection of the picture from a historic standpoint is assured.

PROGRAM READER

"Disraeli," George Arliss' famous stage success, which has reached the screen with Mr. Arliss playing the same part which he made famous, will be one of the most talked of pictures which has ever been seen at the ———— theatre after it completes its ———— run, which begins ————. This picture, made by popular demand, because of the remarkable fame of the stage play, offers Mr. Arliss an opportunity to win as high a place in the hearts of the picture fans as he occupies with the followers of his work on the stage.

"Disraeli" is based on the life of Hon. Benjamin Disraeli, M. P., the Prime Minister of England during the reign of Queen Victoria. The facts of his life are woven into a romance which is thoroughly fascinating. There are two beautiful love stories running through the story. Louise Huff, well established in the affections of picture-goers, returns to the stage to play with Mr. Arliss and others in the cast are Mrs. George Arliss, Margaret Dale, Grace Griswold, Henry Carvill, Frank Lossee, Reginald Denny, E. J. Ratcliffe, and Noel Tearle.

"A GIRL'S DECISION"

(Rainbow Film Co.-State Rights)

A Western Drama That Looks Like a Good State Right Bet

THIS one looks like a state right money-maker. It has many of the elements which go to make up a good audience Western drama—a type of picture which is ever in demand. First of all it has considerable story. There is possibly too much plot, but just as it approaches the state of becoming unfathomable, a title or a bit of action clears the mind. It approaches the involved state, but never quite reaches it.

This is because there are two separate threads to the story, which are cleverly worked together. There is drama in the life of the dance hall girl as she struggled against the gossips who seek to destroy her happiness; and there is even sterner drama as the man pursues the gambler who has deceived and neglected the wife and child. There is no doubt but that the interest of the audience will be held throughout. The suspense is admirable.

Surrounding the drama are some cute children, and other assets such as a number of dance hall scenes, some desert exteriors, and a great many very well written titles. These aid the picture considerably.

In the principal roles are competent players. Helen Gibson is the girl, carrying off her part in fine fashion, without however, making it very distinctive. Edward Coxen is well cast and is a manly hero and Leo Maloney is a hard-fighting villain.

The story is laid in the West during the gold rush days, but it is not simply a plot built around a Western setting. The dance hall, the dishonest gambler, and the gun play, are not overworked. "Bruce McLeod" returns from the gold fields to find that his wife has run away with another man, taking the child with her. The dance hall girl adopts the youngster after the death of its mother. The climax is brought about when the child unwittingly reveals the identity of the man who has wronged its mother. There is one improbability when the father does not recognize his boy after only several months absence.

The picture ends with a fist fight in the dance hall, realistically staged. The hero is about to shoot his victim, when he would rather fight. The climax is the result. The effort is to bring in much which cannot be explained except by a terse subtitle. For instance, the girl's past is hinted at, but nothing much is told about it. Altogether the production would find favor as a Western drama. The details of direction are good.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

Cherie DuBois	Helen Gibson

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A gripping drama of the West is to be offered at the ———— theatre on ———— when "A Girl's Decision" will be the featured picture. This is a motion picture production in which the foremost emphasis has been laid in developing the story, rather than any spectacular scenes. While it is a story of the West, it is said that it is not the usual type of cowboy story, but rather is a gripping, tense story of life in a mining town during the gold rush days of the West.

Helen Gibson and Edward Coxen are the featured players. Both are screen artists with a wealth of experience. Miss Gibson plays the part of a dance hall girl who adopts an orphaned child. But the village gossips insist that she should not be allowed to raise the child because of her connection at the dance hall. The suspense in the story increases every minute, and a thrilling climax is enacted when the rugged miner and the gambler who has done him an injury meet in a terrific fist fight. This is said to be one of the most realistic and thrilling fights ever filmed by a motion picture camera.

"A Girl's Decision" brings to the screen all the romance and adventure of those days when the law of the strongest ruled the West. It is the kind of a picture every red-blooded American will enjoy seeing, for it illustrates the battle of the pioneers of the West against tremendous odds.

PROGRAM READER

Across the desert, blinded by the scorching sun, parched by an agonizing thirst, he stumbled to bring home to his wife and his little boy, the gold he had dug from the hills beyond. When he reached the waterhole—his salvation—and then the village where he had once made his home, he discovered that his wife and his boy had gone. Such is the opening of "A Girl's Decision," a gripping story of the West during the gold rush days, which will be shown at the ———— theatre on ————. In it are featured Helen Gibson and Edward Coxen, both screen players of experience and ability. It is the kind of a production you will not want to miss. Action and romance are admirably blended, and the story is one which rings true. Those romantic days of the pioneer West are brought to the screen with a realism which is not possible either on the stage or on the printed page. We see once more the struggles of the prospectors against the desert; the fight of the honest against the forces of lawlessness, and the battle of a man to defend the woman of his heart.

"A Girl's Decision" will be shown for ———— days beginning ————. It is expected to be one of the best liked and most enthusiastically received productions which has been shown at the ———— theatre for many a moon.

CATCH-LINES

Dying with thirst he lay on the desert with his water pouch crammed with gold. He would have exchanged all of the shiny metal for one thimbleful of water. Do not fail to see "A Girl's Decision," a picture of romance and adventure—action and thrills.

"THE FIGHTER"

(Selznick)

Conway Tearle Drama: Conventional But Filled With Suspense

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE has written stories far more human than this Conway Tearle vehicle. "The Fighter" is average melodrama which does not quite convince, but which is full of suspense and should hold the interest and prove enjoyable to an audience as an average program feature. It allows the star the part of a vigorous, self-made successful business man, a role well adapted to his personality, and it permits some physical action and a thrilling railroad wreck.

Tearle is cast as a railroad president who has made enemies among the exclusive set in which he moves. They ask his resignation as a member of the country club. But Caleb Conover (the star) is a fighter and there is not a chance of putting anything over on him. This, of course, makes his enemies even more bitter, and the powers of politics are about to pass a bill which will be detrimental to the interest of his railroad. His presence at the legislature, however, will insure the defeat of the bill. How or why this is so is never made quite clear. But Conover falls in love with his ward, and when she is injured in a canoe accident, is quite willing to let his business interests go to smash. No attempt is made to get a thrill out of this accident. Simply the empty canoe is shown going over the falls.

For a climax there is a railroad accident when the president makes a last minute dash to the Capitol to prevent the passage of the bill. The engine goes crashing through a bridge into a deep ravine. It is a life-sized thrill, but because it is simply a flash, there is no satisfactory explanation as to how the two occupants escaped death. While the suspense is heightened in this manner, it is done so by sacrificing probability. It is hard to conceive how any human could survive the wreck as pictured. Another example of this is when the heroine is declared to be dying, but recovers simply through the psychic powers of the man she loves.

Winifred Westover is the leading woman, and is thoroughly pleasing. Conway Tearle's admirers will be perfectly satisfied with the feature, for he is made a he-man, admirable in all respects. He is a more impressive type of screen hero. Director Kolker has made some artistic interior scenes and found some woodland exteriors which enhance the picture. Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Conway Tearle is the star of "The Fighter," which will be the feature attraction on ———— at the ———— theatre. Tearle, after several years' experience on the screen as leading man, was recently elevated to stardom, practically by popular demand. He has played in "The Road to Ambition" and "Bucking the Tiger" and "The Fighter" is his latest production.

With a personality that marks him as a man of great reserve power, Tearle is here given a specially written story by Albert Payson Terhune, which gives him a role very well suited to his abilities. He plays the part of Caleb Conover, who, it is explained, was a fighter and had always been a fighter. A self-made man, he is the head of a large railroad system, when he finds himself beset by enemies who are becoming jealous of his power. In this picture is seen one of the most spectacular railroad wrecks that has ever been filmed for the screen. A full sized railroad locomotive plunges through a bridge and into a deep chasm.

"The Fighter" was directed by Henry Kolker, one of the most experienced makers of motion pictures in America. Playing opposite the star is the Swedish beauty, Winifred Westover, who has been leading lady for William S. Hart, Buck Jones, and other well known stars. The picture will be shown for ———— days beginning ————.

PROGRAM READER

"Caleb Conover was a fighter. He had always been a fighter." Such was the character of the head of the Northeastern railroad—a self-made man. He had fought his way from engineer to president, and he did not stop fighting when the girl of his heart was involved. This role is played by Conway Tearle, one of the most virile stars of the screen, and certainly one of the most powerful personalities of picturedom, in his latest picture, "The Fighter," which will be offered at the ———— theatre on ———— as the featured picture.

"The Fighter" is adapted to the screen from a story by Albert Payson Terhune, one of the prolific and popular of screen and magazine writers. It is filled with action, thrills and romance, and in the picture is seen one of the most thrilling railroad wrecks ever filmed for the screen. Supporting the star is Winifred Westover, one of the best known of screen leading ladies, who, in her romantic role, is sure to please each and every fan. Other well known players are Arthur Houseman, Ernest Lawford, George Stewart, and Warren Cook.

No more thrilling scene has ever been filmed than the railroad wreck in "The Fighter." The picture itself is a fascinating one, with Conway Tearle in one of the greatest roles of his career. The story is by Albert Payson Terhune.

Albert Payson Terhune has afforded Conway Tearle one of the greatest roles of his career.

"BURN 'EM UP BARNES"

(Mastodon Films, Inc.)

Melodramatic Farce Furnishes Entertainment and Couple of Thrills

"BURN 'EM UP BARNES" is a very commendable example of what until recently has been a type of picture that only Doug Fairbanks seemed to have sense enough to produce, melodramatic farce, in which all sorts of hokum incident and stunts are sandwiched about a legitimately dramatic story if it had been so developed.

In the present instance the producers have selected a plot or perhaps an idea, having to do with a young live wire who decides to go out on his own after a quarrel with his rich pater and who in the course of experiences following consorts with a gang of tramps, takes up temporary residence in a small town where the right girl resides, captures a couple of bank robbers, wins an automobile race and a wife, all in the course of a couple of weeks. About this frame work, incident, some of which is frankly slap stick, has been evolved that will earn some laughs, be amusing and entertaining, and occasionally deliver a thrill.

Johnny Hines in the title role is a good type for the part and his supporting cast measures with that of any picture ever produced. Edmund Breese cast as one of the hobos contributes a great deal to the entertaining value of the feature. Others of the company are equally entitled to praise for their performance.

A few fans may find fault with some of the titles, especially in the earlier reels, where there is an evident attempt to be funny. Vaudeville style of dialogue is used frequently, that probably would go over on the stage, but in cold type, is productive of little real humor. However, these titles serve one good purpose if no other. They emphasize the fact that the production is not to be taken seriously. The photography is excellent and some very good scenic locations have been secured. A number of fine panoramic shots of an automobile race are in evidence.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Burn 'Em Up Barnes," a melodramatic farce with Johnny Hines in the title role and a supporting cast of unusual excellence, with such players as Edmund Breese, George Fawcett, Betty Carpenter, J. Barney Sherry, Julia Swayne Gordon and Matthew Betts playing important parts, is the principal film attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' showing beginning ————.

The story of the feature concerns a young live wire who cuts loose from father's bank roll and starts out on his own hook. Amazing things happen to "Burn 'Em Up." He is robbed of his car, clothes, and cash and forced to consort with a band of hobos. Later he takes up his residence in a small town where the right girl lives and in so doing foils a pair of bank robbers, wins an automobile race, and a wife.

"Burn 'Em Up Barnes" is a picture not to be taken seriously, but does provide plenty of real entertainment. The spectator may sit back in his seat and smile his enjoyment as reel after reel of fast action and good "hokum" stunts are unfolded. There is also a thrill or two thrown in for good measure. The picture was produced by Mastodon Film, Inc., and screens in six reels. The direction is by George Beranger and Johnny Hines.

Johnny Hines who has become a prime favorite in two reel comedies has been cast as the star in a six-reel feature production under the title of "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" and will be the principal attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' showing beginning.

In support of the star is a cast of unusual ability and reputation. George Fawcett and Edmund Breese have important parts and others who contribute to the entertainment values of the feature are Betty Carpenter, J. Barney Sherry, Mathew Betts and Julia Swayne Gordon.

"Burn 'Em Up Barnes" is a melodramatic farce in which all sorts of amusing incident is woven about a dramatic story concerning a young city chap who takes up his temporary residence in a small county town, there to capture a pair of bank robbers, save his sweetheart's brother from disgrace, win an automobile race and incidentally a wife.

The picture was directed by George Beranger and Johnny Hines and is screened in six reels. Mastodon Films, Inc., is the producer.

SUGGESTIONS

The unexcelled cast, the fact that this is the star's first multiple reel production, the title and the promise of a laugh fest, provide ample opportunity for exploitation. Tie-up with automobile firms for a ballyhoo lobby display and a street parade will be possible and effective. Quotations from some of the titles in your ads will read well.

"CAPPY RICKS"
(Paramount)

Good Audience Picture With Some Excellent Comedy Sequences

THREE reels or so of bang up action and incident, the characterizations of Charles Abbe as "Cappy" and Ivan Linow as "Ole Peterson," a tag of melodrama, which while theatrical carries a real audience punch, insures "Cappy Ricks" the right for a place among the better than average pictures.

It is possible, however, that the admirers of Peter B. Kyne's stories may be somewhat disappointed if they expect a tale, wherein "Matt" puts it over on "Cappy" and also in Thomas Meighan's interpretation of "Peasley." Mr. Meighan is too well groomed, too much the matinee hero type handles himself too gracefully and smiles too sweetly, to measure up to a man's idea of the big two fisted sailor which Mr. Kyne described. After a cruise around the Horn in a schooner, Mr. Meighan shows up at 'Frisco with a Broadway hair cut and everything to match. But this is a man's view of the matter and the woman's angle will probably be quite different.

This version of "Cappy Ricks," pretty much a new story so far as the original yarns are concerned, is a romance. The plot is slight. "Matt" protects "Florrie" from a couple of wharf rats who try to rob her, and it is love at first sight. The "Retriever" goes on a cruise to the South Seas where the captain of the vessel is killed. "Matt" takes command but "Cappy" sends "All Hands and Feet" to supersede him. "Matt" thrashes the big Swede (the fight isn't any too convincing) and brings the ship back to port. "Cappy" disapproves of the romance developing between his daughter and "Matt" and conspires to keep the lovers apart by going on a long cruise in his yacht. The yacht is wrecked in a storm. "Matt" and his pals go to the rescue in a tug and "Cappy" withdraws his objections to the match.

Agnes Ayers plays the role of "Florrie" and a large cast of good types has been secured in support of the star. The photography is good, the shipwreck scene convincing and the continuity evolved, while somewhat episodic in the center of the picture is excellent.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Cappy Ricks," adapted from the famous Saturday Evening Post stories by Peter B. Kyne with Thomas Meighan in the leading role, "Matt Peasley," is the feature attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days engagement beginning ————.

The "Cappy Ricks" stories of the sea have been found most excellent picture material and in the ppresent production Mr. Meighan has a vehicle which fits his personality like a glove. In his support is Agnes Ayers playing "Florris Ricks," Charles Abbe as "Cappy," John Sainpolis, Jack Dillon and others of equal reputation.

The story of "Cappy Ricks" concerns the cruise of one of Cappy's ships in which the captain is slain by savages and command falls on "Matt Peasley" as mate to bring the vessel back to port. A love story in which Cappy's daughter determines to marry Matt in spite of all parental objection furnishes the heart interest. There is a lot of melodramatic action in connection with the threatened foundering of another of the Ricks' ships that will please even the most hardened fan. The picture is screened in six reels. It was directed by Tom Forman from a scenario by Albert Shelby Le Vino and Waldemar Young. The name part is played by Charles Abbe who makes a most lovable character of the irrascible old ship master.

PROGRAM READER

"Cappy Ricks," famous in novel form, as Saturday Evening Post stories and on the stage, has been adapted to the screen with Thomas Meighan in the role of the the two-fisted "Matt Peasley" and Charles Abbe as the lovable old ship owner "Cappy Ricks."

The picture has been booked for the ———— for a ———— days engagement beginning ————. That it will prove one of the really big attractions of the season goes without saying. Thomas Meighan has been provided with a role that fits him as well as his long-remembered characterization in "The Miracle Man" and the story itself is a fault proof combination of action and incident backed by fine scenic backgrounds of the sea.

"Cappy Ricks" was directed by Tom Forman for Famous Players-Lasky Corp., and the scenario was written by Albert Shelby Le Vino and Waldemar Young. The feature is in six reels, every foot of which is action and incident.

You all remember that lovable old sea dog, "Cappy Ricks" and his two-fisted New England sailor son-in-law, "Matt Peasley." They are brought to life in this dramatic picture of the sea, ships and sailors.

"PLAY SQUARE"
(Fox)

Nothing to Make This More Than an Average Program Feature

"PLAY SQUARE" is an average program feature, able to hold the interest, but offering nothing exceptional from any standpoint. Johnnie Walker, he who performed the heroics in "Over the Hill," is co-starred with Edna Murphy, who did a smaller part in the same special production.

Basically the plot material is that of the crook who tries to reform, but whose pals do their utmost to bring him back to the safe-breaking business. They blackmail him, threatening to reveal his past. He, naturally, asserts his manhood in the nick of time, allowing Director Howard an opportunity to stage a beat-'em-up fist fight. This theme is coupled with the "old home" setting. Johnny is persuaded to give up the city and his evil ways and go back to Hicksville to become a poor but honest grocery clerk. There is considerable "mother" stuff.

Edna Murphy is the country sweetheart who looks very chic in gingham. In order to keep the secret of his shady past from his mother, Johnny consents to rob his employer, assisted by his pals who have pursued him. But after the safe is open, he undergoes a great revulsion. They trusted him to play square! So instead of handing over the wad of bills to his confederates, Johnny starts mixing things good and proper. It is a well screened climax. The man-hounding detective comes along, but is willing to believe that Johnny's reformation is sincere. So the villains go to jail, and Johnny's old mother need never know that her son once belonged to the order of safe-crackers and light-fingered gentry.

Edna Murphy is kept in the background, and it is Walker's picture. Things look fairly bright for this new star. Certainly "Over the Hill" and his work in it gave him a considerable boost upwards. His personality is pleasing and he is a good type of the manly, rustic youth. He and Miss Murphy need, however, pictures more distinctive than "Play Square" to push them up and across. It is all decidedly according to formula, not only in plot, which is easily excuseable, but in its development.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The two William Fox favorites, Johnnie Walker and Edna Murphy, are co-starred in "Play Square," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. These two stars, who were recently elevated to the ranks of favorites because of their excellent work in "Over the Hill," the screen masterpiece which ran for a solid year on Broadway, have a gripping drama of the underworld in which to impress their audiences.

"Play Square" is a story of a boy who leaves the home town and comes under the influence of evil companions in the city. Johnny Walker plays this role in an exceptional manner. Anyone who has seen "Over the Hill" will not want to miss this production. Walker is just as pleasing in "Play Square" as he was in the big special production.

Walker and Edna Murphy have been called "the perfect lovers of the screen." Both are clean-cut types of American youth, and in "Play Square" there is plenty of romance for them to impress their audiences. The story is from the pen of Jack Strumwasser, and W. K. Howard directed. Others in the supporting cast are Hayward Mack, Laura La Plant, Wilbur Higby, Harry Todd and Al Fremont. The picture will enjoy a run of ———— days beginning ————.

PROGRAM READER

Evil habits are not broken in a day. Johnny Carroll, having given up his evil ways when he used to relieve heavy-pursed gentry in the city, finds that his former companions in crime have pursued him even to his boyhood home in the country. But Johnny had sworn to "Play Square." The battle was a hard one, but in the end he came out the victor.

"Play Square" is the title of the feature picture which will run at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————. Johnny Walker and Edna Murphy are the featured players. Anyone who has seen "Over the Hill" will remember this combination of screen artists. Walker played the role of the son—"the black sheep"—in this screen masterpiece, which ran for a year in New York City, and thrilled and delighted all who saw it.

Walker and Edna Murphy have been called "the perfect lovers of the screen." "Play Square" is a clean entertaining romance of American life. It has no little action in the climax, and is the kind of picture which will be enjoyed equally by the romantic school girl and the red-blooded man.

CATCH LINES

The story of a boy who tried to live down the past—who resolved to "Play Square." He gave up the gay life in the City, to be satisfied in the small town of his childhood. But a ghost of the past came to mar the happiness. You will want to see "Play Square" at the ———— theatre.

Johnny Walker, the favorite of "Over the Hill" and Edna Murphy, a new star, submitted for your approval in a picture of action, suspense and mystery.

"THE HELL DIGGERS"
(Paramount)

Not Reid's Best, But a Satisfactory Offering Nevertheless

NOTWITHSTANDING that "The Hell Diggers" runs excessively to titles in order to tell a story that could not be related in action or incident, Wallace Reid's latest is far from being an uninteresting picture or one which will fail to find favor with audiences.

There are at least three reasons why this is true. To begin with Mr. Reid is sold so firmly with the fans after a year or better of sure fire pictures that even the most exacting will find ample excuses for him if he slips once in the while. Second, the plot and story development of "The Hell Diggers" is logical, well constructed drama, that builds sequence by sequence to a satisfactory climax, even if words are required for the process. Third, the last couple of reels of the picture are productive of plenty of action, a twist in plot development that carries suspense and some comedy.

Looking at the picture from strictly an audience angle, Wally Reid's audience, perhaps the greatest fault the production has is the fact that it is not a vehicle, provided a vehicle must be a story that gives the star all the opportunities for appearing continually in the limelight.

"The Hell Diggers" presents fully as good roles to Alexander Broun as "John Wade" and to Lucien Littlefield as "Silas Hoskins" as it does to the star. The story also is one where the feminine of the sex just naturally has no part in the tale related. By a dint of hard work Director Frank Urson has managed to get Lois Wilson as the sole woman in the cast, into a few scenes, but these are not important and only remind an audience that some time in the fifth reel the clutch will be forthcoming. However this also may prove a welcome change.

The story of "The Hell Diggers" is about some California farmers who band together to defeat a gold dredging corporation from turning their fertile valley into a pile of stones and in so doing secure the services of the dredging company's engineer in constructing a dredge that will resoil the land after the gold has been extracted. There is an unscruplous corporation superintendent who tries to win for his concern by unfair methods and the romance is between the engineer, Mr. Reid, and one of the farmer's daughters.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Wallace Reid, the virile Paramount star, will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— in his new production titled "The Hell Diggers." The name is one applied to dredgemen because of their work in dredging the land to bring the concealed gold to the surface. The story is built around a feud in which the farmers and a great dredging corporation are the antagonists. There is action, adventure and romance in abundance, and every scene packs a punch from start to finish. Wallace Reid has already appeared in some fast-moving screen dramas already, but in this picture as Teddy Darman, an operator of one of the hated "hell diggers," he outdoes all his former efforts. Teddy's sweetheart, Dora Wade, which is played by Lois Wilson, one of the best known leading women in shadowland, is the daughter of the farmers' leader. How Teddy in the end proves himself a friend and not a foe of his farmer adversaries and how he triumphs in love as well as business is going to furnish you with some of the most thrilling moments you have experienced in many a day. If you like to see Wally Reid in one of his smashing he-man roles you cannot afford to miss "The Hell Diggers."

PROGRAM READER

The romance that runs smooth seldom excites our interest or our sympathy beyond the ordinary. But where the principals of a love affair are separated by the bonds of allegiance to rival interests, the universal heart is awakened to observe just how love will surmount the barriers and win its objective. That's the situation in "The Hell Diggers," and with Wallace Reid and Lois Wilson in the lovers roles you will be treated to dramatic acting of an unusual order. Visualize the story of such a romance against the background of a gigantic commercial enterprise where adventure and intrigue of class against class run rife, and you will have the thrilling tale unfolded in the screening of "The Hell Diggers." "The Hell Diggers" will be shown at this theatre on ———— and ———— of the coming week. Star, cast, and story make this picture a rare treat from start to finish.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the star as one of the most virile stars of the screen, as an actor of fine dramatic talent, and as one who never hesitates to risk a hazard to put punch and vigor into his part. Mention his former successes, including "The Love Special" and "Too Much Speed." Give Lois Wilson a prominent place as the leading woman opposite the star. Be sure to describe the derivation of the word "Hell Digger" should you believe there may be any sense of indelicacy associated with the title. A "hell digger" is simply a name applied to a gold dredger, in the same way that a subway excavator is sometimes referred to as a "sand hog." That Wally's part here is different from his recent "auto racing" roles may also have an appeal for those who seek variety.

CATCH LINES

Wallace Reid in a smashing tale of the Gold Lands—that's why "The Hell Diggers" is a guarantee of an evening's rare entertainment.

Wally Reid in "The Hell Diggers." Not another auto story, but one with as much speed, and nerve, and punch as ever.

"THE MATCH BREAKER"
(Metro)

The Right Kind of Light Comedy Entertainment

HERE is an entertaining comedy, or farce-comedy—it could be called either—rich in audience values. It is well suited for Viola Dana, its star; is fast-moving and perfectly clean; and it has a good farce situation, well developed. There are a number of exteriors laid in a large summer resort, and the result is considerable finery and style which will appeal to a feminine audience.

The story concerns Jane Morgan, a chic, winsome young thing, who leaves home rather than marry a man considerably her senior, and looks about for a career for herself. She has been, in the past, the unwitting cause of several broken engagements, so she picks her vocation—she will be a match breaker. She agrees to save young and old from gold-digging adventuresses. An advertisement in the papers brings results. A young man employs her to vamp his father and thus save him from a pursuing widow. But the father also sees the advertisement, and hearing that his son is paying attention to a girl in the city, seeks the aid of Jane. So the girl has the job of saving her sweetheart from herself. The situation never becomes so complex as to be uncomprehensible.

This comedy leads up to a climax in which Jane saves the father from a badger game. The business methods of her heroine, which appear a bit shady during the course of the picture, are eventually cleared up, so that she is safe from the charge of taking money under false pretentions. The ending is happy. For broad comedy, the story is not at all far-fetched.

Viola Dana takes every opportunity to put the comedy situations across with a punch. The picture affords a role which allows her to be chic, original, vivacious, and vampy in an innocuous, pleasing sort of way. The supporting cast is well chosen and entirely capable. Jack Perrin is the leading man, and Edward Jobson is the gay old father, who comes near to falling a victim of a blackmailing scheme. Others in the cast are Julia Calhoun, Kate Toneray, Arthur Millette, and Wedgwood Nowell and Lenore Lynard as the two villains.

"The Match Breaker" is not the most rip-roaring bit of comedy ever made, but it is refreshing, entirely entertaining, and should prove anything but disappointment at the box office.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PROGRAM READER

Pretty Jane Morgan believes that whatsoever one is best able to do, that should be his or her lifework. So when Fate ordained that she should earn her own living she set about enumerating her accomplishments. She could dance, swim, play tennis, and drive a motor car, and—she had been the cause of four broken engagements in one season. Thereupon she picked her vocation. She would become a "match breaker." When a rich papa feared that his son would fall into the hands of some scheming fortune-hunter, Jane agreed to bring her eyes into play and relegate Miss Fortune Hunter into the background. Furthermore, it was understood that she was not to marry sonny herself.

There is no end of clean, wholesome comedy in "The Match-Breaker" as we watch petit Viola Dana set about earning a fortune by this unique career of hers. The picture will be shown at the ———— theatre on ————. Viola is there with all her charm and pep and prettiness. The role is one ideally suited to her, for it is easy to imagine her breaking hearts in real life. In the end of the picture she does not prove to be such a success as a match breaker, but as a sweetheart she is a thousand per cent.

This delightful little comedy will run for ———— days beginning ————. We do not think you will want to miss it. It has been considered, wherever played, to be one of the most entertaining comedies of the year.

CATCH LINES

See the picture of the girl who discovered a new vocation—an "expert match-breaker." Meaning, of course, that she saved a male victim from any scheming adventuress. But in the game of match-breaking there are dangers. One is liable to have one's own heart bruised. See Viola Dana in this charming comedy "The Match-breaker" at the ———— theatre.

"MAN AND WOMAN"
(Jans Productions, Inc.)

Orthodox Program Release on "Clothes-Make-Man" Theme

VIEWED as a program release, "Man and Woman" will pass muster, although it must be admitted that the story told is ultra convenient, not at all new in theme and that the acting and direction spends no time on detail and attempts to inject little incident that would make up for the plot shortcomings.

The theme of the picture is founded on the principle that "clothes makes the man." A number of beachcombers, all of whom have seen better days and one of whom has been a prominent engineer, a society girl, her father an engineering contractor, a bishop and an artist are the principal characters. The girl makes a bet with one of a party visiting at Tahiti that she can dress up a beachcomber and pass him off without detection as a gentleman.

She chooses the engineer who has formerly been employed by her father, leads the man to think that his former employer is again interested in him and then tells him the reason for her actions. The beachcomber, then a-la "Misleading Lady" fashion kidnaps the girl with the expressed intention of making her a beachcomber like himself. They fall in love with each other, father approves of the match and it is inferred that the man will get his old job back again. A preacher who had also back-slidden is regenerated and a girl who has been mothered by a magdaline hitches up with the artist.

The picture has been photographed amid some very attractive tropical settings and the one or two interiors used are satisfactory. The continuity, while running largely to words, is excellent. The cast is well balanced and has been carefully selected as to types. Joe King, as the beachcomber, has the best acting role. Diana Allen is a pretty but not especially versatile leading woman. The cast of principals is rather a long one and contains such names are Edwin C. Sturgis, Herbert Standing, G. H. Carlyle, John L. Shine and others of good acting reputation.

The feature was written and directed by Charles A. Logue. The production is by A. H. Fischer, Inc.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PROGRAM READER

"Man and Woman" an interesting and well produced picture on the theory "that clothes make the Man" is the feature attraction at the ———— theatre for a ————days showing beginning ————.

In the cast of characters are such well known and talented players as Joe King, Diana Allen, Edwin C. Sturgis, John L. Shine and others of equal professional reputation.

The feature is a story of what happened when a thoughtless society girl made friends with a beachcomber, just to prove her theory and win a bet that one of these derelicts, properly dressed and groomed, would pass at the Governor-general's fete day function as a gentleman. Many beautiful locations showing tropical scenes have been used as backgrounds in shooting the picture. Joe King recently featured with Pauline Stark in "Salvation Nell" and other big pictures has the principal male role while Diana Allen is the heroine. The production is in five reels. It was directed and written by Charles A. Logue.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A new picture with its scenes laid in the tropics and with many beautiful outdoor settings used as backgrounds is "Man and Woman" a five reel drama in which Joe King and Viola Allen have the leading roles and which is billed as the principal film attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days showing beginning ————.

"Man and Woman" is a story of a girl who in order to win a bet on the theory that clothes make the man, dresses up a beachcomber in conventional evening clothes and introduces him at a society function. She wins her bet but the result of her wager brings unexpected and surprising adventures and develops into a romance. The feature is a well produced, romantic drama in five reels written and directed by Charles A. Logue and sponsored by the Jans Productions.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the tropical scenes and the theme of the story. Make mention of the successful pictures in which Joe King has appeared especially, "Salvation Nell." For lobby display ideas borrow from such stunts as have been used for "The Idol Dancer," "The Love Flower," etc. Use scene stills in abundance and cuts showing some of the action of the picture in your display advertising.

CATCH LINES

The story of a girl who argued that clothes make the man; who bet that she could palm off a beachcomber as a gentleman; who accomplished her object only to have the tables turned and find herself in a fair way of becoming a beachcomber.

The girl was a society butterfly: the man a beachcomber: How each came a long way, one up and the other down is the plot on which this picture is founded.

"THERE ARE NO VILLAINS"
(Metro)

Perfectly Satisfactory Romantic-Crook Play with Viola Dana

VIOLA DANA turns into a detective—a secret service agent—in this picture, and in the course of it evolves into a highly efficient one. The feature is a good example of the "crook" picture which should fascinate an average audience. It is a Bayard Veiller production, and Mr. Veiller is well versed in the intricacies of crook-play construction. Here he has endeavored to mix to a greater degree romance with his crook interest. The result is interesting and propitious for the star.

Viola Dana is cast as a member of the secret service, who is assigned to run down some opium smugglers. She returns to the chief, apparently a failure, but begs for a second chance. She endeavors to obtain some evidence on Sala, the leader of the organization, through a young man whom she believes to be one of his tools. Here is where the romance starts. For, despite the fact that she discovers that the young man, who is Gaston Glass, is an opium peddler, she falls in love with him. Thereupon she reports to her chief that her mission was unsuccessful. But the chief realizes that romance has ruined his pretty lieutenant's usefulness as a detective, fires her, and puts a man on the case. Knowing that a wife cannot be forced to testify against her husband, the girl agrees to marry the supposed opium peddler at once. The chief tries to stop the wedding, but the clergyman is willing to complete the ceremony from the street, as the couple lean from the second story window.

Then comes the surprise. The young man is not a crook, but a member of the secret service also, connected with the Washington branch. Even those who are so movie-hardened as to believe that all screen leading men must eventually be heroic, will be fooled. If the explanation is not entirely comprehensive or satisfying it will not make very much difference. Just why two branches of the secret service would be in conflict, working on the same case, and why the hero did not bring the master mind to justice when he had the evidence. instead of waiting so long, are questions which will perplex the analytical. Without doubt, the audience is gulled. Probability is sacrificed for the sake of a final punch. For a picture audience, there is certainly no harm done.

The suspense is well kept up, and the star presents her usual personality. Gaston Glass is a capable leading man, and DeWitt Jennings is the cigar-chewing chief detective.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"There Are No Villains" is the title of the feature picture which will be shown at the ———— theatre on ————. It is described as a thrilling crook play starring the charming Metro star, Viola Dana. This actress needs no introduction to the patrons of the ———— theatre. She has been seen before in many of her delightful comedies and dramas and on each occasion has added largely to the number of her admirers.

"There Are No Villains" was directed by Bayard Veiller, the noted playwright author of "Within the Law," who is now a motion picture director. As a result of his direction "There Are No Villains" is a thoroughly gripping story of the underworld, dealing with the activities of opium smugglers. The star plays the part of a member of the secret service who is assigned to run down the evildoers. The suspense is never lacking and up to the final moment the story will hold the interest of any audience. It is full of surprises, and like so many of the pictures and plays with which Mr. Veiller is connected has a strange, unguessed ending.

The star is supported by Gaston Glass, who plays the part of one of the supposed opium smugglers. Others in the thoroughly capable cast include Edward Cecil, DeWitt Jennings and Fred Kelsey. "There Are No Villains" takes its title from the crook's philosophy which says, "there are no villains. Those of us who transgress are simply mortals who have been tempted beyond endurance."

The picture will be shown for ———— days beginning ————.

PROGRAM READER

"There Are No Villains," said the philosopher of the penitentiary, "those of us who transgress are simply tried beyond our endurance." The Secret Service, however, looks at results and not at motives. So when their dainty agent, Rosa Moreland, was sent to "get the dope" on the opium smugglers, she did not stop to analyze the reasons that made her victim fall. But then she fell in love—yes, in love with a villain. But in the end it developed that he was no villain at all.

The picture is entitled "There Are No Villains" and it is the latest Metro production starring pretty Viola Dana. Directed by Bayard Veiller, the noted author of "Within the Law," this feature picture is one filled with suspense and unusual surprises. It is a new type of picture for Miss Dana, who proves in it that she is perfectly able to handle a difficult and varied role. The picture is adapted from the story by Frank R. Adams and in the supporting cast are such favorites as Gaston Glass, Edward Cecil and DeWitt Jennings. The picture is a good example of the thrilling "crook" play, without, however, any of its objectionable features. It is considered one of the finest of Viola Dana's productions.

A story of the underworld and the girl detective who figured in the battle of wits. Viola Dana is the girl. 'Nuff said!

A LITTLE LIGHT ON THE HIGH INTENSITY SITUATION

Reports from all parts of the country have come to our attention that manufacturers' representatives, distributors, and dealers are claiming that is an exclusive feature of their machines, and that Simplex cannot supply this lamp to the trade.

THESE STATEMENTS ARE UNTRUE!!!

The facts are, that we have a contract with the General Electric Company for the above lamp for which we have been and are now taking orders, and we assure the trade that our deliveries will commence September 15th.

The General Electric Company specifies that this lamp is built to function at 55 volts and 75 amperes, and used under these conditions they guarantee to give 100% more light than any other arc.

THE SIMPLEX SELLS ON ITS OWN MERITS!!!

We do not intend to use the G. E. lamp as a bait to compel the purchase of an entire new projector. We sell the lamp and housing complete, or you can fit the lamp to your present type "S" housing.

WILL OTHER PROJECTOR BUILDERS DO THE SAME?

"FOOTLIGHTS" will be one of the memorable box-office sensations of the new season.

It is not only Miss Ferguson's greatest picture—it is one of the greatest pictures of all time.

The leading role is the most varied, the widest in range, ever conceived. And Miss Ferguson gives it a life and a reality that you never dreamed could be achieved on the screen.

The star wears thirty different gowns, each worth almost a thousand dollars. And there are dozens of elaborate sets.

To list the big emotional scenes, the stirring, surprising climaxes, would take an entire page.

There's only one way to realize how great "Footlights" is. That's to show it.

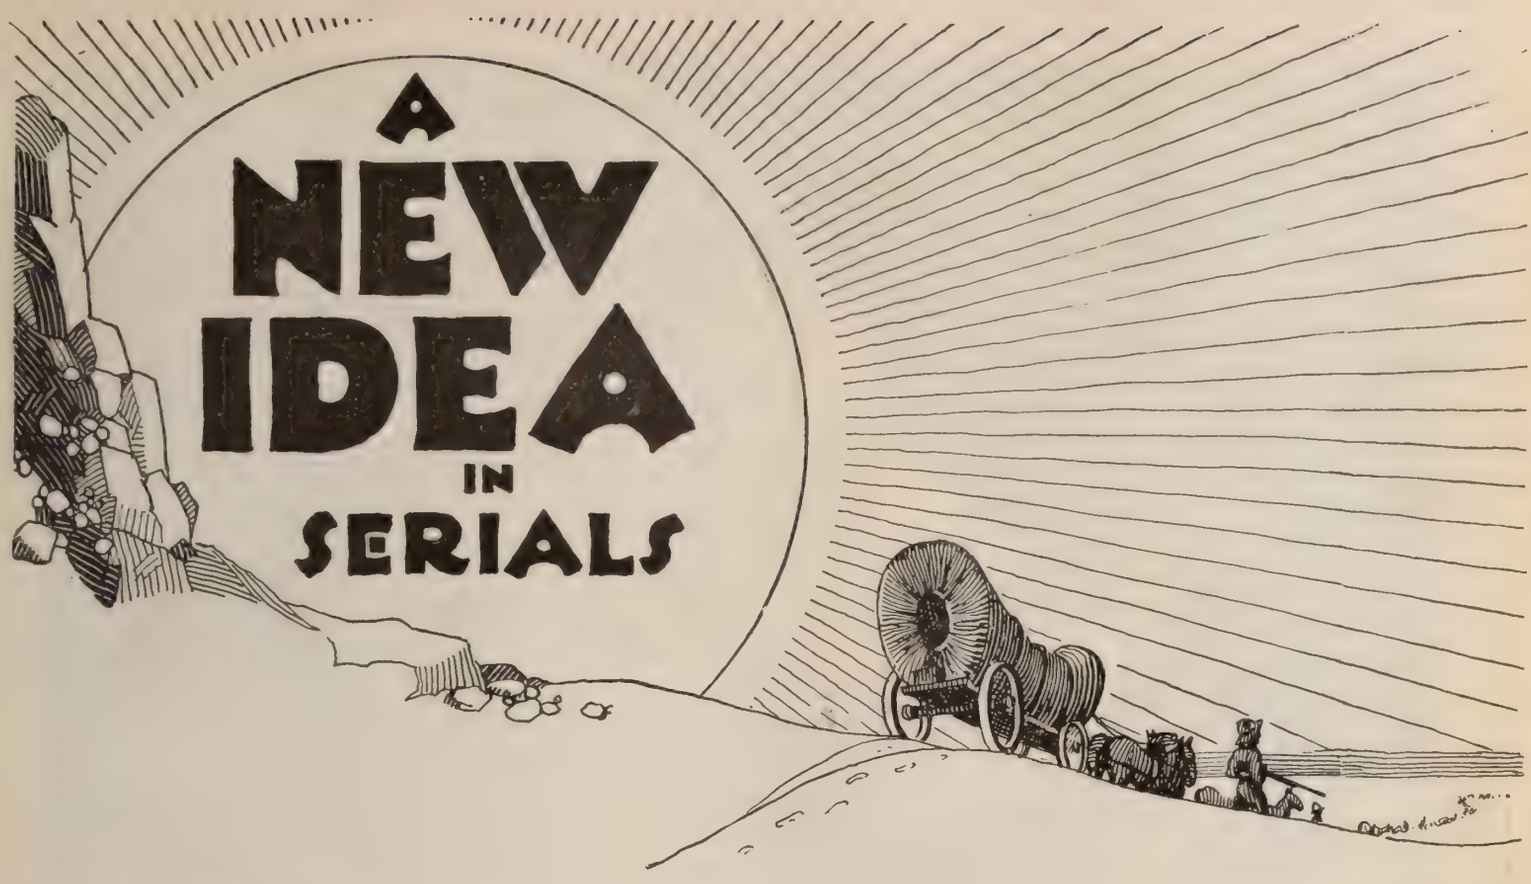
52 BIG LAUGHS A YEAR



No More Censor Troubles!

Late in September or early in October, Universal will release a new type of serial—" WINNERS OF THE WEST," directed by Edward Laemmle and starring ART ACORD.

This new type of serial is a dramatization of the stirring adventures of the famous trail-breaking expedition of Capt. (afterwards, General) John C. Fremont in 1848, following the discovery of gold in California—a huge adventure with which every school-child is familiar.

" WINNERS OF THE WEST " is dramatic—it is clean—it is wholesome—it is true history. It is exactly what every parent, every teacher, every censor has hoped the picture industry would provide for the entertainment of the young people who make up so large a part of serial audiences. And—make no mistake—it is a bigger thriller than any serial you have yet seen on the screen.

As usual, it remained for UNIVERSAL, with its finger on the pulse of the amusement loving public, to initiate this new type of serial and it offers it secure in the knowledge that UNIVERSAL'S RECORD in the past will prove a more-than-sufficient guarantee of your complete success in " WINNERS OF THE WEST."

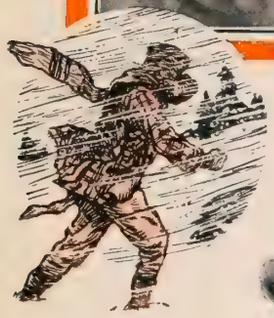
10 Mighty Thrills In



1 Nell Shipman, as Neeka, surrounded by and playing with the wild animals of the great Canadian Northwest—with bears, wildcats, mountain lions, deer, owls, skunks, raccoons. A magnificent appeal to adults and all children.

2 Nell Shipman, as Neeka, steering through jagged, rock-lined rapids in a one-ton log canoe to rescue an imperilled puppy.

3 Nell Shipman in the most amazing dual role with double exposures such as you never have seen—Neeka of the wilds and Marion, the cultured society girl.

4 A battle for life in a canoe on an ice cold lake.

5 Nell Shipman, as Neeka, crashing through the glass roof of an airplane factory after the most sensational ride ever taken at night in an airplane.

6 Nell Shipman, as Marion, in a desperate battle in an airplane depot to prevent the destruction of the car groomed to win the Trans-Pacific race.

7 Nell Shipman, as Neeka, in a gun duel in mid-air, dropping a thousand feet in a parachute from a speeding plane to recover an inventor's drawings from an aviator shot down to sea level.

8 A rescue of Neeka from the sea and a breath-taking climb up a rope ladder into an airplane driven by a blind aviator.

9 The return through a Canadian blizzard of snow-blinded Pierre LeMort, to find after a long flight that he was not a murderer.

10 A thrilling fight in a burning building with an earthquake toppling the buildings down upon the conspirators.

One Great Picture

Here is a prediction made in good faith to the exhibitors of America:

"The Girl from God's Country" is one of the biggest box-office record-smashing pictures released by any company in the past thirty-six months. It is the biggest picture of its type and style ever released in America.

Nell Shipman's previous "God's Country" productions each grossed far above the half-million mark.

No picture ever made topped the $500,000 level without being a tremendous box-office success for exhibitors.

"The Girl from God's Country" is the most daring and intense Nell Shipman Production ever made and exhibitors booking it now to start the fall season, will be bragging about its results twelve months from now.

Dramafilms presents

A WILL BRADLEY PRODUCTION

The short subject novelty sensation of the year-

Here is what the critics say about it

NEW YORK GLOBE: The featured film is the least important number of the Criterion bill this week. The real novelty is the Will Bradley fantasy, "Moongold," with the tragedy of Pierrot and Pierrette worked out against a velvety midnight setting.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE: The second novelty at the Criterion is a picture made by Dramafilms called "Moongold." It is the story of Pierrot and Pierrette directed by Will Bradley and it is an extremely beautful production with a cast including Lois Bartlett, H. Dudley Hawley, Syn de Conde, George Fawcett, Forrest Robinson and others.

NEW YORK MAIL: George Fawcett began the seventh week of a personal extended engagement at the Criterion Sunday in "Moongold." He has been playing there in the De Mille feature and now he is at his best in "Moongold," a most delightful picturization of the story of Pierrot and Pierrette.

NEW YORK SUN: Hugo Riesenfeld has surrounded his main feature with supplemental numbers of rare merit, chief of which is "Moongold," a film play by Will Bradley.

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS: "Moongold," a charmingly fantastical story, of one lorn Pierrot and Pierrette, enters its third week at the Criterion. It is a delicious conceit.

NEW YORK WORLD: "Moongold," a beautiful and romantic bit of screen fiction, is a supplemental part of Mr. Reisenfeld's Criterion bill this week. * * * An unique screen bill and the shorter numbers are the finest of their kind.

ZIT'S WEEKLY: "Moongold" is one of the artistic achievements of the year in motion pictures. Mr. Bradley is one of the first of the well-known artists to take up motion pictures, and, as might have been expected, has produced a picture of extreme beauty.

NEW YORK HERALD: Even more attractive than the Criterion feature is the auxiliary programme, with "Moongold," a charming story of Pierrot and Pierrette, offered by Dramafilms, with a picturesque new device, whereby the lighting is confined to characters and sets and the background remains dark, a system which might very well be applied to pictures where the background dwarfs the actors.

DANNY in WID'S: At Criterion. "Moongold." Sufficiently artistic to have been made anywhere. Has abundance of real artistry. Real beauty. Unusual. Shows what can be done with thought. Several magazines will play it up in a big way. Every director should see it to get an idea of what can be done with simple props and a black background. Better see it. Should be shown widely. To offset censorship talk.

Here is a production that has played America before—everywhere. The big cities for runs; smaller cities for extra days; little towns for double time.

It has been withdrawn from the market for years—and now reappears with added power and appeal, better, according to the trade press, than when first presented to America. Newly edited, new prints, new accessories.

A MESSAGE TO EVERY EXHIBITOR IN THE COUNTRY

During the past several months I have received many enquiries, letters and complaints from exhibitors to the effect that it has been impossible for them to secure my productions for their theatres because my product could only be placed in First National Franchise houses.

To offset this belief I herewith publish, for those who may be interested, an extract from my contract with the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc. (referred to in this contract as "EXHIBITOR"), pertaining to the booking of my productions, as follows:

"(a) The EXHIBITOR hereby agrees to submit to said NEILAN, for his approval, each booking contract with exhibitors in the United States of America and Canada obtained by said EXHIBITOR in respect of each of such photoplays, as well as all contracts relating to foreign countries, and unless NEILAN makes known to the EXHIBITOR his disapproval of any such contract in writing by mail or telegraph within twenty-four (24) hours following the delivery to NEILAN by the EXHIBITOR of a duplicate copy of the respective contract, such contract shall be deemed approved and shall be binding upon said NEILAN. A copy of each such contract shall be delivered to NEILAN promptly after execution.

(b) No exhibitions under the control of the EXHIBITOR shall be given of any photoplay produced by NEILAN without the previous consent in writing of NEILAN.

(c) No credit shall be extended to any exhibitor to whom a print of any such photoplays is rented without the written consent of NEILAN.

(d) NEILAN agrees to have and maintain a representative in the City of New York at all reasonable times for the purpose of passing upon, approving or disapproving of the aforesaid agreements"

With the exception of "Don't Ever Marry" and "Go and Get It," which I sold outright, the booking of my productions is absolutely under my control.

I am about to release "Bits of Life," to be followed by "Penrod" and two additional productions. All of these pictures will be finished and delivered to the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., by February 1, 1922 which completes my First National contract.

Every exhibitor interested in securing these productions is hereby invited to communicate with Marshall Neilan Productions, Capitol Theatre Building, Broadway and 51st Street, New York City.

It is my intention to force the fulfillment of the above contract to the letter.

Marshall Neilan

TREMENDOUS!

"The Fairbanks D'Artagnan is a vivid personality, which never lets up for a moment. This D'Aratgnan would sooner jump from the window, or plunge into a river, or slide down a balustrade, than enjoy the usual methods of motion. And as for fighting, the more the merrier! It is a case of wholesale dispatch every time there is a fight and D'Artagnan never gives his adversary a chance. It is a particularly long picture, but oddly enough it doesn't seem as protracted as many shorter films manage to do. Some of the photographs are excellent. Views of old Paris must have been carefully studied, and there is a ball room function that is wonderfully made."

Alan Dale, in the N. Y. American.

"It is an artistic achievement, a splendid interpretation of the Dumas masterpiece. . . Action is the keynote of the film. From the outset the picture is one of swift-moving thrill, with the naked steel constantly flashing. The atmosphere of Dumas' romance has been superbly transferred to the screen . . . The sets, without exception, are magnificent, vying with the finest ever projected on the screen."

N. Y. Evening Mail.

The newspaper reviews on "The Three Musketeers" are so extraordinary, so tremendously enthusiastic that we cannot possibly cover them in a single advertisement. Only a few are quoted from in this advertisement; additional reviews will be found in the current issues of Moving Picture World, Exhibitors Herald, Exhibitors Trade Review and Wid's Daily.

"And such a picture! Good news travels just as fast as bad news, so by this time it is probable that everyone knows that 'The Three Musketeers' is a thrilling, ripping, unadulterated success. If you didn't know who wrote it, you would insist that the author had Fairbanks in mind when he wrote the story. Surely no other actor on the screen could have done it. . . Although so much has been said of 'The Three Musketeers' in advance, we doubt that even the producers had any idea just how big a success it was going to be. Douglas, in his after curtain speech, said that he had no idea, and we, for one, believe him."

Harriette Underhill in the N. Y. Tribune.

"'The Three Musketeers' arrived at the Lyric Theatre last night and the films at last have their only possible D'Artagnan. As a matter of fact Douglas Fairbanks has been playing D'Artagnan through all these years on the screen, but he has worn a business suit instead of doublet and hose, and vanquished his thousands with his fists instead of with rapiers. Now he has fulfilled his destiny by leaping through the Dumas thriller in its original background, and there is no expressing his joy in the escapades or the consequent ecstasy of his hilarious audience."

Alison Smith in the N. Y. Globe.

If you are fortunate enough to secure a booking of

masterpiece

"WAY DOWN EAST"

bear in mind that you have a picture that has played to over four million dollars in one year at regular theatre prices.....

IT recently has been announced that the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation is to release a picture entitled, "O, Mary Be Careful," starring Madge Kennedy.

This picture was made by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in 1917, but release of the picture was withheld.

I am naturally desirous that my exhibitor-friends be informed of these facts.

The Highest Authority in the world, the Committee on Critique of the National Board of Review, said in its official report—

"This vivid, swift moving picture is the peer of Oriental dramas on the screen. It has the true atmosphere of an Arabian Nights' tale and must rank as one of the exceptional photoplays of the year. It has both dramatic intensity and comic relief of an unusual order. The acting of Pola Negri may be said to be the finest and most convincing of her career before the American public and the supporting cast is one of great ability."

We can recommend this as Norma Talmadge's greatest picture. This is also the unanimous opinion of New York Newspaper critics. The picture demonstrated its box office value at the New York Strand by playing to exceptional business during the hottest week of the summer. Channing Pollock, who wrote this gripping drama for the stage, confessed himself amazed at the force and truth with which the star and the director, Herbert Brenon, transformed it to the screen.

Motion Picture News

THE internal revenue receipts for the fiscal years of 1920 and 1921, just made public, give some interesting figures.

The admissions tax—of theatres, concerts, cabarets—reaches a total in 1921 of $89,725,805.92 and shows an increase of $13,005,250.49 for 1921 over 1920.

The five per cent rental tax on films jumps from $4,381,276.31 in 1920 to $6,008,108.18 in 1921, an increase of $1,626,831.87.

As against these increases, automobiles (including trucks, pleasure cars, motorcycles, tires and accessories) show a tax decrease of $28,477,031.65. The tax on candy decreased $2,705,555.36; on pianos, organs, etc., $2,056,190.38; on articles made of fur, $6,229,975.69; on jewelry, $1,559,701.18; on cigars $4,347,266.69; on cigarettes, $16,208,845.18.

The entire revenue decrease—in 1921 from 1920—was $812,579,486.07, in which the great item of course was the decrease in income and profit taxes of $731,143,846.16.

Apparently, then, in a year of generally declining revenues, motion pictures fared signally well, since the two taxes give a definite index of the gross business done by the exhibitor and distributor. Each of the so-called luxuries showed a decided decrease in gross sales; motion pictures alone show a healthy and well-sustained increase.

THESE revenue figures, however, only go as far as July 1st, 1921, since which time the picture theatres have had a slump so severe as to result in a 30% closing and a corresponding decrease in proceeds to the distributor so severe as to throw the industry for the months of July and August into a good deal of a panic.

That panic, happily, is over. Inasmuch as the figures for the first five months of 1921 (as we have previously pointed out) show a very healthy increase in the picture business we have every sound reason to believe that with the Summer slump about over, business will resume this Fall on a thriving basis.

These internal revenue figures are to be viewed in two ways.

Taken all in all, without analysis, they do indicate one thing, and that is a most important thing; they indicate that the public, while economizing in most things have not stopped buying amusement. The amusement tax, it is true, is levied on all amusements but it must be true that motion pictures, at once the cheapest and most popular amusement, have fared better than the others. People stopped buying luxuries in 1920 and still more in 1921; but the falling off in picture theatre attendance only came with the reactions of hot weather and daylight saving this Summer. It was seasonal only.

This is all mightily encouraging. We still have a sound and rising market—even at the present advanced admission prices. What more could be asked?

THE weakness of this industry, as indicated by the Summer's near-panic, is within and not without. Pictures are selling, but our economic machinery is wrong. We lack adequate capital and bank credit first of all. And we lose millions each year through over production and excessive duplication of distribution. We are approaching—as the next big era of this industry—centralized distribution. And centralized distribution will help greatly to bring in capital and bank credit.

And now for the second way of looking at these figures.

The tax experts at Washington will undoubtedly seize these figures—probably they already have—as proof that the industry thrived under its heavy war taxes, that pictures, unlike other extensively sold luxuries, went up instead of down during the war tax period up to July 1st, 1921.

But these figures, for this or any other such end are not to be taken, they must not be taken, without the most careful investigation and analysis. If the tax experts have the facilities they will find that the increase in picture theatre admissions has been largely confined, the past two years, to the big centers of population. The small towns were hurt by the war and they did not participate in its inflation period of high wages, high prices, etc. The small theatres still comprise about 80% of our gross number, and this large majority of picture houses is struggling along under a duplication of heavy taxes that will assuredly put many of them out of business.

Neither should these figures indicate that heavier rentals are advisable. What the rental system needs is a revision that will help the little theatre get better pictures at let-live prices plus exploitation help that will enable them to get the public in to see the better higher rental picture.

F. P.-Lasky Ships 800,000 Feet Abroad in 3 Days

The foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation advises that in the first three days of the week of August 22d its film shipments to foreign countries aggregated 800,000 feet. This is believed to establish a record for film shipments abroad. Another 200,000 feet were made ready for transportation, according to E. E. Shauer, manager of the foreign department, but had to be held over until space could be secured on the proper steamship lines.

Mr. Shauer declared that Famous Players-Lasky's foreign business for the first six months of 1921 shows considerable increase over the same period in 1920. Some countries, he declares, have practically equalled in the first six months their quotas for the entire year. A number of other countries have shown surprising increases in business. All this is taken to prove no slackening in the demand for high-grade films. The outlook for the American exporter is most promising, Mr. Shauer asserts, provided he can supply high-grade product and there are no drastic retaliatory measures on the part of foreign countries for the Fordney tariff now under discussion at Washington, D. C.

British Ass'n Protests Second-Hand Film Sales

A closer alliance between British and American film producers is presaged in letters that have been exchanged between William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Inc., and J. Brooke Wilkinson, secretary of the Incorporated Association of Kinematograph Manufacturers, Ltd., of London.

Mr. Wilkinson wrote Mr. Brady recently on behalf of his organization stating that second hand American films were being offered for sale in Great Britain, the showing of which would infringe upon the rights of British film interests. In his letter he suggested a working arrangement between the two associations in all such matters.

"Four Horsemen" Opens in Cleveland at $2 Top

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" opened at the Stillman theatre, Cleveland, Sunday, August 21, at $2.00 top price and is doing such excellent business that seats for the next two weeks are at a premium.

Word was received during the week that speculators have jumped into the field and are gathering up tickets and selling them at advanced prices. General Manager Jack Kuhn of the local Loew circuit is making every effort to put a stop to this practice, however.

This is the first time in Cleveland's history that a low-priced house has jumped four times its admission and met with popular support.

Danger of Musician Strike in Buffalo, N. Y.

There is a possibility of a musicians' strike in Buffalo as a result of the union flatly refusing to accept a 10 per cent decrease in wages September 1. A meeting of the union representatives and a committee from the Buffalo Theatre Managers' association met in the Hotel Iroquois last Saturday failed to bring about a settlement of the differences. It was originally intended to cut wages 25 per cent, but following several meetings this figure was cut to 10 per cent. The musicians, however, take the stand that they will accept no cut whatever. Both sides declare they have given their final word. The present contracts expire September 5. Exhibitors are ready for the battle should the strike come, they declare.

Selznick Secures Services of Swedish Star

Lewis J. Selznick has been successful in signing Sigrid Holmquist, the Swedish actress, who has been termed "the Swedish Mary Pickford," to play the principal supporting role opposite Eugene O'Brien in "Prophet's Paradise." According to reports, there was much rivalry among the producers to secure Miss Holmquist's services.

Loew-First National Suit in Cleveland Adjusted

As a result of an amicable settlement outside of court of the year-old controversy between the Loew interests in Cleveland and Associated First National Pictures, pictures made by Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Charles Ray and Charlie Chaplin for First National will be seen again in Cleveland houses, after an absence of over a year from the screens of that city.

The agreement terminates the long-contested lawsuit in which the local Loew interests claimed the right to the exhibition of these First National releases by reason of a contract entered into between them and the original First National Exhibitors' Association of Ohio. First National, on the other hand, claimed that the original contract was made void following its reorganization a year ago.

By the terms of the settlement the Loew houses in Cleveland will get certain First National releases; and the Metropolitan theatre, which also laid claim to First National releases by virtue of a contract closed with the reorganized First National, will get certain others of the First National pictures. Constance Talmadge's "Lessons in Love" opened at the Park theatre this week.

Charge Fairbanks Feature Violates Old Copyright

In the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, suit has been filed by the Triangle Film Corp., the Film Distributors League, Inc., and the Alexander Film Corp. against the Douglas Fairbanks Productions and the United Artists Corporation. The complainants are the owners and distributors of the Triangle feature, "D'Artagnan," over five hundred scenes of which are copyrighted. It is charged that this copyright has been violated in the exhibition of Fairbanks' "The Three Musketeers," and an injunction to stop the showing of this picture is asked.

According to the complainants, a compromise offer of $50,000 has been refused.

First Nat'l—Ass'd Pro. Deal to be Closed

ACCORDING to reports received from Chicago the closing of the expected deal between Associated Producers and Associated First National Pictures, Inc., imminent. A number of important franchise holders and directors represented First National at the meeting at the Hotel Congress in Chicago, and Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Al Lichtman, Oscar A. Price and E. M. Asher, of Associated producers, were in attendance. The deal provides that all First National product be distributed through First National. Mr. Lichtman will be in charge of the distribution.

THE ovation tendered by New York to Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks—visualized above—was not one whit more than these two players deserve. The respect and good will of the entire film industry should go with the ovation.

Why?

Here are our reasons, and, unconsciously, Miss Pickford herself summed them up before the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce:

"When coast folks started to talk depression," she said, "Douglas and I started to go ahead and make bigger and better pictures than ever." Take these words and add to them PERFORMANCE in the shape of two negatives produced at a cost of well over a million dollars.

We like Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks for their loyalty to their art. Loyalty that spurs them to unceasing work; loyalty that nerves them to do and dare in the advancement of their art—the motion picture. Studying and laboring while—and where—so many play. Two true artistes.

It is unusual for a player to address the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and leave the strong impression that Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks registered with the members of the organization headed by William Brandt. It is a pleasure to record the success that "The Three Musketeers" has scored in New York. Joseph Plunkett, who presented the picture, is quoted as saying that all performances to date have been sold out, and the advance sale has reached the ten thousand dollar figure. Film men are aware of the record breaking rentals that are being paid by exhibitors for the privilege of playing "The Three Musketeers." The metropolitan newspapers and trade critics never spoke so unanimously in praise.

"Depression?" Not when you use the words of Doug Fairbanks: "I spent $700,000 on 'The Three Musketeers,' knowing there was talk of business depression."

THE EDITOR

Screen Eulogized as Educational Medium

AT a banquet given by the Philadelphia exhibitors at Atlantic City last week, Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of the Brooklyn Plymouth Church and lecturer on visual education, gave expression to some striking utterances on the educational value of the motion-picture screen. In the following are submitted some excerpts from Dr. Hillis's address:

"Eighty-five per cent of all out knowledge comes through the eye, only nine per cent of known facts through the ear and six per cent through taste, smell, and touch."

"What the ear hears is like a visitor who stays, but for a moment; what the eye sees, the memory retains, and forever."

"It is now certain that school house, press and church have fallen so far behind the task in education, that we have twenty millions of people who must be informed. At this great crisis, we believe that the moving picture has been developed as an instrument of the new education in patriotism."

Dr. Hillis in describing a plan whereby the government would make films to be used in the study of scientific, industrial, and commercial questions declared:

"Some of us are now endeavoring to induce the government in Washington and the rulers of our States to help us in this movement to reach twenty-eight million children and youth in 300,000 school houses. And if the moving picture men of the country would throw open their buildings and give the use of their instruments on, say Monday afternoon, from four to six, and Friday afternoon, for forty weeks each year, we could bring in a new era of social prosperity, greatly increase the wage of the worker and the wealth of the nation, and stem the advance of unrest and discontent."

Dr. Hillis also discussed the menace of state socialism. In this connection he said:

"The title of Bellamy's Looking Backward, and of Marx's Das Capital, should have been, 'Let George do it.' And if the moving picture men of this country were to see to it that one half of their subjects were given to amusement and entertainment, and the other half to education in patriotism, and the elements that build life and enrich the state, they would confer an immeasurable gift upon their country! If children can understand the greater truths of God, duty and immortality, they are fully competent to understand these lesser truths of industry and intelligence, and loyalty, that increase the worker's wage and the nation's wealth."

"At this crisis for the nation the moving picture as an educator has entered the scene. Do not allow it to be debased. Lift up the standard! Teach the love of this country. Uphold the Constitution under which our people have made greater advance in happiness and prosperity than any race whatsoever."

Hodkinson to Operate Own Exchange System

After November 1st Will Discontinue Pathe Service and Distribute Own Releases

AFTER November 1st, the physical distribution of W. W. Hodkinson releases through Pathe exchanges will be discontinued, and all Hodkinson pictures following that date will be distributed through a system of independent Hodkinson branch exchanges to be set up immediately in twenty key cities throughout the country. The inauguration of the new exchange system by Hodkinson brings to a close a distributing arrangement between the Pathe and Hodkinson organizations which has continued for a period of three years.

In a letter to Paul Brunet, president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., Mr. Hodkinson explains that the growth of the Hodkinson business has made necessary the opening up of its own exchange system and expresses sincere appreciation for the efficient service and co-operation extended to his organization by the Pathe home office and field forces during the past three years. In his reply, Mr. Brunet thanks Mr. Hodkinson for his expression of appreciation of Pathe's service in the past and extends his best wishes for Hodkinson's continued success under the newly adopted system of distribution.

A statement issued from the Hodkinson headquarters, announcing the establishing of the new plan of distribution, reads in part as follows:

"Hodkinson exchange branches will be opened as rapidly as arrangements can be made in the following cities:

"New York, Pittsburgh, Boston, Chicago, Washington, Atlanta, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Denver, St. Louis, Los Angeles, Seattle, San Francisco, Philadelphia, Dallas, Kansas City, Detroit, Omaha, Buffalo, Minneapolis.

"All of them will be open and ready for business on November 1st, and P. N. Brinch, sales manager of the company is busily engaged in assembling the organization and perfecting the machinery which a change of so complete a nature entails.

"Possessed of its own exchange system, the Hodkinson Corporation will now be in a strongly intrenched strategic position in the motion picture world. A fortnight ago, Mr. Hodkinson announced the perfection of a Backbone Service Contract consisting of two features every month, including pictures by Benj. B. Hampton, Hugo Ballin, Irene Castle, Irvin V. Willat, Zane Grey, Winnipeg Productions, T. Hayes Hunter, Ward Lascelle, and other independent producers. This backbone service will form a groundwork on which the Hodkinson exchanges will begin immediate operations."

W. W. Hodkinson made the following statement concerning the severance of relations with Pathe and the inauguration of the new exchange system by his company:

"Nothing could have been more amicable than the severance of our relations with Pathe. The Pathe exchange has helped us over three years of formative growth, and without the whole-hearted co-operation of the Pathe staff, we would never have gained the position we occupy today.

"We simply have reached a point where our system of exchanges is imperative. The whole success of the principle of independent distribution depends upon the selective machinery we are now setting up, and only through the medium of our own system could we hope to give the exhibitor the degree of service to which I believe he is entitled.

"In times like these, the establishment of an entirely new exchange system is a stroke of big, broad undertaking, but we feel that we are fully justified in making the move in the light of the very considerable increases we have made in our business within recent weeks."

New Loew State Theatre in New York Opened Amid Great Enthusiasm

Is 104th of National Chain; Loew Doubtful if He Will Build Any More

MARCUS LOEW'S new State Theatre at Broadway and Forty-fifth Street, New York City, was opened Monday evening, August 29, amid scenes of jubilation that will live long in the memory of those who were fortunate enough to gain access to the interior of the magnificent amusement palace.

By the time the doors were opened to admit the ticket-holders a huge throng had gathered before the doors intent upon getting in. To reach the lobby in the swirling unwieldy crowd that jammed the entrances required some strenuous efforts, but on the whole the crowd was a good-natured one which was inclined to laugh rather than growl at the inconveniences entailed. Film cameras in front of the house kept clicking merrily as prominent figures of the stage and screen stepped from their cars in the ceaselessly flowing line of automobiles and entered the lobby, which together with the sidewalk fronting the entrance was brilliantly lighted by huge Sunlight arcs, some of which had been perched on top of the marquee overhanging the main entrance.

The formal opening of the latest addition to Loew's national chain brought together a highly representative gathering of the dramatic, vaudeville and motion picture divisions of the theatrical world. When Loew himself appeared on the stage accompanied by Flo Ziegfeld, Fannie Brice and Raymond Hitchcock, he was tendered an ovation. In the course of his address, he reviewed some of the striking points of his career as theatrical manager and paid glowing tribute to certain members of the industry who had extended him their help and co-operation in building up his chain of theatres.

The program was a combination of vaudeville and motion pictures, which will be the permanent policy of the new State. The Metro release, "A Trip to Paradise," starring Bert Lytell, was the feature motion picture offering. "Hard Luck," with Buster Keaton in the principal role, was also on the program. The vaudeville program included acts by Rosalie Harris and Pauline Santley, Harry Scranton and Ann Scranton, Lew Cooper, Meyers and Hanford, Doraldina in a few dance movements and Will Morrissey in a mind-reading act. Frank Fay proved one of the hits of the evening. After being invited on the stage from the audience by Nils Granlund, Frank amused the crowd for a few moments by humorous sallies at the Loew management. After informing the crowd of his unpreparedness to stage any formal performance and insisting upon the impromptu nature of his appearance before the house, a drop was raised disclosing that Frank had on hand the full contingent of Leroy Smith's Reisenweber orchestra which rendered some popular selections.

LOEW'S STATE THEATER is a tribute in concrete and steel to Marcus Loew the man. The million dollar theater and office building that stands "at the center of the world," visualizes the climax of a master showman's career.

It may seem out of place to term Marcus Loew a "showman." "Showman" he is not, in the sense of the spectacular flamboyant. "Showman" he is, in his uncanny ability to feel the public pulse, his sincere and unswerving efforts to satisfy the public's amusement desires, his firm holding to a standard that aims at mass patronage and his unparalleled success in attracting that mass patronage.

May the success of Marcus Loew the man always continue to bear comparison to the glories of Loew's State—the theatre. And no more could be said.

In addition to the regular vaudeville and motion picture program the numerous luminaries of the stage and screen, who were on hand, were called upon to ascend the stage for a brief moment or else stand up in their seats and bow their acknowledgments to the applause of the audience. De Wolf Hopper was on hand as representative of the Lamb's Club and made a few brief remarks apropos of the occasion. Norma Talmadge and her sister Constance came in for special notice and an especially vigorous round of clapping. Eugene O'Brien also was greeted enthusiastically by the gathering. Adele Rowland of the Selznick organization sang a few selections upon special request. Theda Bara was on hand and bowed her acknowledgments to the crowd's noisy reception. Mae Murray, June Caprice, Winifred Westover, Richard Barthelmess, Hope Hampton, Kenneth Harlan, Gloria Swanson, and even little Miriam Batista came in for their share of notice on the part of the huge audience. Other prominent members of the film industry who were on hand included Adolph Zukor, J. D. Williams, Conway Tearle, Herbert Brenon, Hiram Abrams, and Gabriel L. Hess.

The new State, which was built at a cost of one million dollars, is the 104th theatre placed in operation by Mr. Loew; and according to his own statement given in the course of an interview with a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, it will probably be his last theatre-building enterprise. The Loew circuit now extends across the American continent with many more houses in Canada. The average seating capacity of the Loew theatres is 2,000 while his largest theatre, the Metropolitan in Brooklyn, can accommodate more than 4,000 spectators.

In the course of an interview with a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS Mr. Loew declared:

"Recently the growth of the Loew circuit has been a little too rapid for the management to keep pace with it readily. We have now in operation 104 theatres, each of which needs constant attention. Accordingly, the matter of perfecting the theatres already built rather than the construction of new theatres will be looked after for some time to come. For the next six months we shall devote ourselves to the developing of the houses that we now have instead of building additional theatres.

"Indeed it is doubtful if I shall build any more theatres—a great many houses, including some of the best, are being offered to us ready-made. We are being asked to put our kind of entertainment into these theatres on a fifty per cent basis, and under the provisions being made we will be required to run no financial risks at all. So that will in all probability be our future method of procedure. The building of theatres is a difficult matter—it took two years, for example, to purchase all of the property on which the new State theatre has been built."

M. P. T. O. Issues Warning

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, following the receipt of a letter from Cauldwell H. Brown, a Zanesville, O., member, has issued a warning to exhibitors. Mr. Brown writes that in July a representative of the Elid Productions Company signed a contract with him for the production of 1000 feet of film to be taken on the stage of the theatre and also in various merchants' places of business. Two hundred and fifty dollars was collected from Mr. Brown, and $30 each from eight local merchants.

After four weeks the film was not delivered nor has any word been received from the Elid company, states Mr. Brown.

F. P.-Lasky Must Answer Trust Charge, Is Report

ACCORDING to reports received from Washington, D. C., The Federal Trade Commission has cited Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to answer complaints in alleged violation of the anti-trust laws.

It is also understood that the action was taken on the part of the commission after a long and careful investigation into the company's activities in the theater field, notably in New England and in the South.

New Territorial Divisions for State Right Sales Decided Upon by the I. P. D. A.

FOLLOWING a prolonged session of the newly formed Independent Producers and Distributors Association at a special meeting called to discuss the matter of proper territorial divisions in the matter of state rights sales, the following changes have been announced as being approved by the standardization committee and the board of directors of the association:

"The territory known as Greater New York shall be south of and east of and include the counties of Westchester, Ulster, Sullivan, Dutchess and Orange. Northern New York shall be all of New York State north and west of but not inclusive of Greater New York, Westchester, Ulster, Sullivan, Dutchess and Orange Counties. The territory of Eastern Pennsylvania is divided so as to take in Eastern Pennsylvania east of but not including the counties of Potter, Clinton, Mifflin, Huntington and Fulton, while Southern New Jersey is to consist of that part of the state south of and including Burlington, Ocean counties, the city of Trenton in Mercer County and also the state of Delaware.

"The territory known as Western Pennsylvania is designated as being west of and including the counties of Potter, Clinton, Mifflin, Huntington, Fulton. Those states formerly comprising what is known as the Washington territory have been changed so as to exclude the state of Delaware which is now apportioned off with Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

"Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois has been indexed as follows: Eastern Missouri to consist of that part of Missouri east of and including the counties of Scotland, Adair, Shelby, Randolph, Boone, Cole, Douglas, Miller, Pulaski, Laclede, Wright and Ozark, while Southern Illinois is that part of Illinois south of but not including the counties of Hancock, Brown, Cass, Sangamon, Macon, Platt, Champion and Vermillion.

"Western Missouri and Kansas has been apportioned as follows: Western Missouri is defined as that part of Missouri west of but not including the counties of Scotland, Adair, Shelby, Randolph, Boone, Cole, Miller, Pulaski, Laclede, Wright, Douglas and Ozark."

It is believed that the divisions, as they have just been decided upon, will settle definitely many controversies which have arisen in the past over boundary lines in the different states. All of the members of the association have been requested to abide by the new division as outlined herein.

Toronto Projectionists Not to Attempt Strike

"You can announce for me that the Toronto local does not settle matters by strikes or lockouts and that the Toronto operators will go back to their old scale of wages," declared Charles Dentelbeck, president of the Toronto Moving Picture Operators' Union, in answer to a question as to what action the projectionists would take in answer to the notification by local theatre managers that wages of employes would have to be reduced for the fall and winter season.

The Toronto projectionists have one of the strongest organizations in the union. The membership is practically 100 per cent and the honor roll of those who served in the war is very large. Officers of the Toronto local have always been willing to meet the managers on every question and good feeling has prevailed all sides.

Protests Increased Import Tariff

Paul H. Cromelin, President of Inter Ocean Film Corp., in the following letter sent to Secretary of Commerce Hoover, expresses his opinion with respect to the proposed tax increase on pictures coming into this country. His letter, under date of August 15, follows:

Dear Sir:

I notice by newspaper reports that a hearing has taken place with respect to the question of increased tariff on motion pictures entering this country, and would be glad to be informed as to whether there will be further hearings in respect to this matter and if any briefs or papers are filed with your department, copies of which are available, would be pleased to receive same.

The United States is and has for many years been an overwhelmingly export country as regards motion pictures.. We have sought to place the American motion picture in all foreign countries and to a large extent have been successful. There is no occasion for American producers of motion pictures to fear introduction into this country of those productions made abroad which may be suitable. The writer has had occasion to spend many years in foreign countries, particularly in England and Germany, and knows of his own personal knowledge that a very small percentage of the motion pictures made in those countries are suitable or would ever find a market here. Those outstanding productions which deserve to be shown here should be permitted to be distributed and can only result in the betterment of the business as a whole and will not hurt the American producer.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry representing approximately ninety (90%) per cent of the motion pictures produced in the United States is on record in a brief filed with the Committee on Ways and Means for and on behalf of the Association by Mr. Saul Rogers, in which it takes the positive stand that no duty is sought on motion pictures imported to this country. The Association believes that our government should be in possession of a weapon which could be used if necessary to retaliate if any foreign government discriminates against or places an embargo on American motion pictures and this broadly is the position of the industry. The agitation on the part of the Actors' Equity and certain other interests for a high tariff on motion pictures imported is not a movement on the part of American producers, distributors, or exhibitors of motion pictures.

The sale of the rights in foreign markets of American motion pictures represents approximately twenty-five to thirty per cent of the total returns from same. To secure this amount for rights and royalties is, broadly speaking, of far more importance to the American producers than the proposed protection. The American motion picture requires no protection and the producers and exporters who are seeking the development of foreign fields look to their representative in Congress and to you and your associates in the Department of Commerce to assist and aid them in the development and broadening of their export business.

A tariff of thirty per cent ad valorem based on American valuation as has been proposed and is now embodied in the Fordney Bill under consideration by the Senate Committee on Finance, will not prove revenue-producing, but on the other hand will become a barrier to the introduction into this country of such suitable motion pictures which our people are entitled to see. It is worse than folly to imagine that those responsible for the government of foreign countries will see such a thing done without promptly retaliating. As a matter of fact the very discussion of the subject and the knowledge that it is being considered is already proving detrimental to the export business of the American producers. Australia, which up until recently had a duty of four (4c.) cents per foot on motion pictures, and which depends to a large extent on the United States for its supply, has recently increased the duty by fifty (50%) per cent and added other very onerous conditions as regards censorship. If we want to see the business in this very important article of export killed in foreign countries by retaliatory action, high duties and impossible censorship conditions in all principal markets then we should go ahead and pass the Fordney Bill with its provisions regarding motion pictures as they are. If on the other hand our friends in Washington want to help the industry and help spread the story of the United States by the most potent means known and by the best medium of expression ever invented, then they will cut out the clauses relating to the duty on the importation of motion pictures and let the tariff remain as it is, a specific duty based on footage of a reasonable price per foot.

In conclusion, in order to illustrate how comparatively unimportant the foreign motion picture is as an article of import, and how an insignificant matter may be the means of stirring up a hornet's nest by retaliation, will you permit me to quote below the total value of these imports as indicated by the Monthly Summary of Foreign Commerce published by your department for the twelve months ending June, 1919, 1920 and 1921.

Year	Negatives	Positives
1919	$339,472	$101,171
1920	499,691	157,192
1921	734,920	306,986

The above memorandum relates specifically to finished motion pictures; not to raw stock (the sensitized but not exposed film used in making the finished picture), which for most excellent reasons should remain on the Free List but which presents an entirely different problem from that of taxing the finished pictures, positives or negatives, when imported into this country.

Allied Laboratories Ass'n Fires New Broadside Against Eastman

Despite Assurances Company Now Owns Laboratories, Is Charge

THE following statement from the Allied Laboratories Association, Inc., has been received. The Association again sets forth its principles for independence in the laboratory business and takes the Eastman Kodak Company to task for its alleged despotic attitude.

"In view of the belated admissions now made by the Eastman Kodak Company that it has acquired the G.M., Sen-Jacq, and Paragon Laboratories, and would operate them, we might well sit back and tell the industry 'We told you so.'

"But our fortunes, our futures, and the existence of the independent exhibitor, producer, and distributor are threatened, just as we said they would be, and a mere 'I told you so' policy at this time would avail us nothing. We mean to translate our feelings into action—action so strenuous that we will prove once more in this free country that a monopoly, no matter how greedy, cannot by unfair means drive us out of existence.

"We are discouraged, of course, to find now that the millions of dollars we have paid into the treasury of Eastman Kodak Company are to be hurled back at us in the form of three gigantic laboratories with a combined capacity for turning out more laboratory work than is necessary to keep the machinery of this industry turning.

"As late as May 12th, this year, a committee from this Association called on George Eastman, head of Eastman Kodak Company, in Rochester, New York, and asked him directly if he was in the laboratory business, or intended to engage in it. His reply was that the Eastman Kodak Company had no laboratory connections and had no intention of making any.

"Whether George Eastman intended to mislead us by that statement, in view of what has transpired since, we do not know. We do question his sincerity toward us, his customers, who have paid him millions of dollars—and we pass up to the entire industry for its consideration whether George Eastman, in control of these great laboratories, will abide by the promises now being made by his agents to producers with the same sincerity which marked his statement to us, that his company had no intention of making laboratory connections.

"His agents are promising reduced prices to our customers to get their business away and turn it into the Eastman Laboratories. We can arrange the matter of price in the routine business of the day, but what is worse and manifestly more unfair is that these same agents are offering to give our customers liberal credit.

"Since we have been doing business with the Eastman Kodak Company we have never been extended credit. We have paid for our raw stock cash in advance. This is a preference of the worst kind, and a preference which can only be granted with the consent of the Eastman Kodak Company.

"We are glad to see producers and distributors get their work done at a reasonable figure and we are pleased to see credit extended to them, but not as a temporary proposition to be paid up by them later with compound interest.

"Eastman Kodak Company now owns the three big laboratories with a capacity of more than the industry needs. Will they live up to the promises they have made when their monopoly on raw stock and laboratory business is so complete that there will be no independent laboratories to do business with, or will their promises meet the same fate as the George Eastman promise to us that their company had no intention of going into the laboratory business?

"Eastman Kodak Company says that it was forced to go into the laboratory business to protect its own interests. We would like to know wherein its interests have suffered. In 1915 the surplus of the Eastman Kodak Company was, approximately, $3,651,831, and in six years it jumped to approximately $50,000,000. Does this enormous surplus indicate any necessity for the protection of their interests?

"We have never in our careers attempted to endanger the interests of the Eastman Kodak Company; we have used Eastman stock almost exclusively. In our use of Eastman stock we have given it all the care and attention possible to insure the maintenance of its quality. It was not until Eastman Kodak Company's exclusive raw stock agent, Jules E. Brulatour, saw fit to engage in the laboratory business that we saw that our interests, not Eastman's interests, were being jeopardized, that we looked to other sources for a part of our raw stock supply. If any interest needed protection, ours did, and against no other giant than the Eastman Kodak Company itself.

"The bigger issue and the one vital to this industry, especially independent exhibitors, producers and distributors, whether or not the Eastman Kodak Company, aided by its astute smoke-screen thrower, Jules E. Brulatour, will set itself up as a Czar of the Motion Picture Industry.

"We know now, as we knew weeks ago, and so informed the industry, that if Eastman succeeds in its monopolistic aim the grip of the old Motion Picture Patents Company upon the industry will be as nothing compared to the autocratic stranglehold Eastman will have upon the industry.

"As far as the members of this Association are concerned, they will fight to a finish. We, of course, realize that the odds are against us, and the big question that will finally decide the issue is whether or not the producing, distributing, and exhibition branches of the motion picture industry, plus powerful public sentiment, will allow the Eastman Kodak Company to realize its dream of years—of trustifying the motion picture industry."

M. P. T. O. Argues Taxation with Senators

SYDNEY S. COHEN, national president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; National Counsel Senator James J. Walker; D. A. Harris, executive committee member from Pittsburgh, and Col. P. B. Varner, executive committee member from North Carolina, conferred on August 29 with members of the Senate Finance Committee regarding the Fordney Revenue Bill, insofar as it affects theatre taxation.

The M. P. T. O. representatives discussed at length with the Senators the five per cent rental tax, the seating tax, and the admission tax. Due to the fact that the remainder of the week was consumed by the Senate Finance Committee in considering the tariff bill, a final meeting will be necessary, the date to be decided upon at a conference to be held this coming week. At this conference there will be in attendance, in addition to those who attended the meeting of August 29, several state presidents and executive committees from the Western states.

While in Washington President Cohen and his colleagues gave some considerable attention to the copyright amendment as it affects the music tax situation.

National Association in Concerted Stand Against Film Tariff

Fight Going Forward Against Import Duty and For Reduction of Taxes

THE Fordney Tariff Bill, which includes in its provisions the establishment of a 30 per cent ad valorem duty on motion pictures from abroad, has passed the House of Representatives and is at present in the hands of the Senate Finance Committee. The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is making a concerted stand before the Senate Committee in an effort to bring about in the Senate a defeat of the provision relating to the 30 per cent tariff on imported motion pictures.

The campaign to secure the reduction of the multiplicity of taxes imposed on the industry is reported from the National Association's headquarters to be making most satisfactory progress. Saul E. Rogers, chairman of the Taxation Committee of the National Association, has brought the fight for the reduction of taxes to the Senate Finance Committee, and advices from the National Association declare that the members of the Senate Committee have been greatly impressed by the character of the arguments placed before them and the numerous appeals received in support of these contentions.

At a meeting on Thursday, August 25th, at the National Association's headquarters, New York, members of the producers, distributors and exporters' divisions of the National Association adopted a resolution vigorously protesting against the proposed 30 per cent ad valorem tariff measure as legislation unsolicited by the motion picture industry as a whole, and as unnecessary from the viewpoint of protection for the industry in America. Provision was also made at the meeting for the representation of the National Association and its stand before the Senate Finance Committee. The producing, distributing and exporter members of the National Association were called together by Mr. William A. Brady, president of the organization, for the purpose of thoroughly discussing the tariff question. The resolution adopted was:

"Resolved, That the National Association protests vigorously against the Fordney Tariff Bill as passed by the House of Representatives in so far as it provides for a 30 per cent ad valorem tariff on foreign motion picture films;

"That the film tariff provisions in the Bill were not solicited or instigated by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, or by any one acting in its behalf;

"That a tariff on foreign motion picture films is unnecessary as a protection measure, for the reason that the American product can successfully compete with foreign films both at home and abroad;

¶ The figures stands alone—unchanged.

"That the revenue derived from the proposed tariff measure would be insignificant, and

"That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry be represented before the Senate Finance Committee to protest against the Senate passing the measure and to advocate that no change be made in the existing tariff."

The companies voting in favor of having the National Association, as an organization, opposed to foreign tariff were: William A. Brady Picture Plays, Inc., Famous Players-Lasky Corp., Fox Film Corp., Goldwyn Pictures Corp., Metro Pictures Corp., Realart Pictures Corp., The Selznick Corp., Triangle Film Corp., Universal Film Mfg. Co., Associated First National Pictures, Inc., Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., R-C Pictures Corp., David P. Howells, Luporini Bros., Australasian Films, Ltd., Inter-Ocean Film Corp.

Among those who spoke in opposition to the proposed tariff and urged that the National Association, as an organization, oppose the measure were: Saul E. Rogers, Chairman, Committee on Taxation of the National Association; Paul H. Cromelin, President of the Inter-Ocean Film Corp.; E. H. Goldstein, Assistant to the President of the Universal Film Mfg. Co.; Gabriel L. Hess, General Counsel, Goldwyn Pictures Corp.; Chas. C. Pettijohn, representing The Selznick Corp.; R. S. Cole, President, R-C Pictures Corp.

The following committee was appointed to draft the resolution and to obtain for it the widest possible publicity both here and abroad: Saul E. Rogers, Gabriel L. Hess, Paul H. Cromelin, Ralph Kohn (Famous Players-Lasky Corp.), L. Auerbach (Export & Import Film Co., Inc.), R. S. Cole.

Copies of the resolution are being forwarded by Chairman Rogers to the members of the Senate Finance Committee, which now has before it the Fordney House Bill, containing the 30% ad valorem tariff clause.

In the discussion which preceded the adoption of the resolution Chairman Rogers of the Taxation Committee said that the adoption of a 30% ad valorem tariff based upon American valuation would not only exclude foreign films from the American markets, but would also close the foreign market to American producers, because of retaliatory measures which naturally would be taken by foreign countries.

Mr. Goldstein of Universal called attention to the fact that American film manufacturers must protect their markets both here and abroad and offered the resolution which was later elaborated by the committee appointed for that purpose.

C. C. Pettijohn told the meeting that two things only in connection with the tariff were being considered by the Senate Finance Committee—first, the protection of the industry; second, revenue to the Government.

R. S. Cole, in advocating action by the National Association, said: "We should not only go on record as against the tariff, but we should do all within our power to prevent such action by Congress."

Richard A. Rowland, President of Metro, said that if the proposed tariff were placed upon foreign films the American producer would be obliged to curtail the production cost, with the result that actors and directors would be obliged to work much more cheaply than at present.

President Brady declared that the Actors' Equity alone is responsible for the 30% ad valorem tax on foreign films being incorporated in the Revenue Bill passed by the House of Representatives.

The film industry's campaign for a reduction of its taxation burden is progressing favorably, according to reports received during the past few days by Saul E. Rogers, Chairman of the Taxation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The tax relief campaign has been systematized by a zoning of the country by Chairman Rogers. In those zones which include the home districts of members of the Senate Finance Committee representatives of the National Association have concentrated in arousing influential banking and business interests to the necessity for immediate relief of the picture industry from its excessive taxation burden.

M.P.T.O. Disclaims Any Connection with U. S. Action Against Famous

Not Party to Complaint Made by Federal Body; Will Probe Others Too

THE conference between Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and the Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was resumed on Wednesday of this week, August 31st, at the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters in New York. An announcement, which appeared in Wednesday morning's papers, told of an action about to be taken, according to the press accounts, by the Federal Trade Commission, against Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for alleged violation of the Federal anti-trust law. The publication of this story became the most important topic of Wednesday's session. In a formal statement issued by Senator James Walker, counsel for the M. P. T. O. of A., before Mr. Zukor and his counsel, E. J. Ludvigh, all connection with the contemplated action of the Federal Trade Commission was disclaimed for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Senator Walker declared in the presence of the Famous Players-Lasky officials that the M. P. T. O. of A. wished to go on record as having absolutely nothing to do with the action proposed by the Federal authorities.

The Senator declared further that it was not the intention of the M. P. T. O. of A. to single out the Famous Players-Lasky organization for prosecution in adjusting grievances made by independent theatre owners. He asserted that there are other companies in the industry which later are to be subjected to the same vigorous and careful investigation which has been inaugurated by the M. P. T. O. of A. with respect to the Famous Players-Lasky organization.

Alfred S. Black, who has been asked by Adolph Zukor to sit in at the conference until exhibitor grievances in New England are adjusted, sent word to the Famous Players-Lasky president that he could not be present at the meetings this week, but that he expected to be able to attend during the coming week. It was decided to hold a conference on Thursday of next week, at which Mr. Black will be present.

Mr. Zukor requested the Committee to modify the plan of making public the complaints lodged by exhibitors against his company in view of the action about to be taken by the Federal Trade Commission. It was pointed out that if the ordinary procedure of publishing in full individual exhibitor grievances were carried out as heretofore, the stories published might be taken advantage of to the embarrassment of the Famous Players-Lasky organization. It was accordingly decided to give publicity to only those cases in which Famous Players-Lasky and the Committee both agreed that unfairness had been practiced and adjustment was necessary. Other cases were decided to be withheld until they were settled.

The representatives of the M. P. T. O. of A. present at the Wednesday meeting were President Sydney S. Cohen, Senator James Walker, W. A. True, Charles L. O'Reilly and Michael J. O'Toole. The formal announcement of Senator Walker before Mr. Zukor and Mr. Ludvigh was preceded by a private conference participated in by the representatives of the M. P. T. O. of A. Senator Walker declared:

"It is in the mind of the committee that you should know, Mr. Zukor, that the only knowledge we have of any action on the part of the Government, is what we have seen in newspaper articles.

"We do not take the stand of criticizing the Government. We should hold it as an unfortunate occurrence if anything were to occur that would interrupt the pleasant relations existing between us. We, the members of the committee, are all of one mind: that we are happy over the results obtained.

"There has been no hesitancy on your part in meeting us. It has been our position and even disposition to go even further than we anticipated, and in some cases you have gone even further than we have asked.

"I think you ought to know that in coming to Famous Players-Lasky it was not because Famous Players was the target, but because Famous Players was the biggest and leading company in the field. Because we decided to attack the big fellow first, it was decided to start with you, so as to prove that we were not afraid to attack the big one. The M. P. T. O. had courage, if it had nothing else, and that's the reason it started with Famous Players.

"There is no disposition on our part to play favoritism with other companies. There will be prosecution of all of them with all the vigor and all the force at the disposal of the M. P. T. O. It makes no difference against whom the grievances are. We will prosecute all producers and signal out no favorites. Our purpose is honest.

"I don't mind saying to you that because Famous Players was first selected does not mean that our grievances against your company are the most serious. There are others that are more serious than those against Famous Players.

"We have confidence in your sincerity. We have never looked for outside help nor appealed to outside interests.

"We want you to know that we would not ask for certain considerations from you, get them in every sense and then ask for prosecution. That would be unfair. If you ignored us, then any force could be brought into use. We, the M. P. T. O., do not want to be placed in the position where, after asking for adjustments with a man and getting them, we bring in a complaint through an official bureau. We say this not for Famous Players, but for anyone."

In replying to Senator Walker, Mr. Zukor said:

"Irrespective of any action now pending, I want to continue in harmony the relations started. I want to adjust all differences between the M. P. T. O. and Famous Players. I will go beyond this. I want to cooperate with the M. P. T. O. in bettering conditions in every branch of the industry in all sections of the country. I made the statement in Minneapolis and have since repeated it. I will personally straighten the difficulties as I have promised and no contemplated action will make any difference on my part."

RothakerBackfromEurope His Story in Next Issue

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER arrived in New York from Europe on board the Olympic on Wednesday of this week, August 31st. Mr. Rothacker left without delay for Chicago but will return again to New York in a few days. He declared that he has a very interesting account of conditions abroad to give to the trade. Next week's issue of the News will carry Mr. Rothacker's story in full.

Brady and Rogers at Work in Washington

William A. Brady and Saul E. Rogers journeyed to Washington during the week and started work on tax matters on behalf of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Both Brady and Rogers had opportunity to discuss tax problems with members of the Senate Finance Committee and found a sympathetic hearing. They appealed for a rescindment of all three taxes now affecting motion pictures, rental, seat tax, and admission levy, and offered their support for the Smoot amendment calling for a manufacturer's sales tax as a substitute.

Selling Goods

THE policy of MOTION PICTURE NEWS with respect to advertising and the solicitation of advertising is simply this:

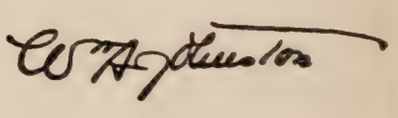
We do not ask for advertising support. We do not sell advertising pages for the sake of advertising income. We are not in that kind of business.

Our advertising pages exist for the sole purpose of merchandising pictures and equipment.

Our advertising department exists for the advertiser. Its function and purpose is to help him utilize our pages for the profitable sale and distribution of his goods.

We are prepared to suggest advertising ideas and campaigns; to write advertising copy and letters; to do art work. Our trade statistics are available to any advertisers. We can put the producer of pictures and the manufacturer of equipment in touch with the distributor, dealer and exhibitor. We are, in short, prepared to market goods; and we are giving this service successfully right along.

A call at our office or your office will quickly prove whether or not we can give valuable service.



NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

George De Kruif, assistant to the president of the Exhibitors' Supply Company, left Monday for Minneapolis where he will inspect the branch of the Exhibitors' Supply Company, in that city, and lay out plans for a Fall sales campaign. He expects to return to Chicago in about ten days.

Griever Productions has moved into its fine new quarters at 837 S. Wabash avenue, and decorators and furniture men are rapidly getting the exchange in shape. Si Griever's new quarters will be among the finest in Chicago and will give him splendid facilities for taking care of the large number of pictures he will release during the Fall and Winter.

Negotiations for a big Paramount week in the Chicago territory are most favorable, as 457 theatres have signed up to play nothing but Paramount pictures during the week of September 4th to 11th, an increase of one hundred per cent over the theatres which took part in Paramount Week in 1920.

Jack Camp is with the Metro organization, having signed up with Manager Roselle as a salesman to cover the Wisconsin territory.

Manager I. Maynard Schwartz, of Educational, recently has added several salesmen to his staff. Among them being Dave Dupin, formerly with Celebrated; S. Keeley, recently with Fox, who will cover the northside; E. Mitchell, who comes from Robertson-Cole, and will cover country territory, and J. H. Cohen, who has been working for Reelcraft recently, who also will be assigned to country territory. Mr. Schwartz reports that all key cities have been closed up on the Educational short features, and that the Chicago, Roosevelt and Jones, Linick & Schaefer's theatres in the Chicago loop will give the short features first run showings. Ascher Brothers are also on the list of important circuits which have signed up for Educational series.

Clever detective work on the part of Leo Hopp, manager of the Ideal Theatre, 1622 Larabee street, resulted in the arrest and confession of a youthful crook who recently jimmied his way into the ticket office, manager's office and operator's booth of the Ideal and escaped with a small sum of money. The young fellow under arrest has been proved to be a parolled Pontiac prisoner, and his capture has led to the arrest of seven or eight members of the gang with which he operated, which is said to be responsible for a number of burglaries.

District Manager Stern, Branch Manager Lesserman, Maurice Hellman, and Louis Laemmle, led a host of Universal Chicago employees, including the entire sales staff to the Heiser Hotel, Lowell, Indiana, Saturday, where the crowd enjoyed a splendid dinner which was followed by a sales conference. Among the items on the menu were Joe Martin soup, Harry Carey salar, Priscilla Dean yams, Gladys Walton apple pie, Eddie Polo lemon pie, and many other articles named after Universal stars.

Harry Crawford, who will have charge of the first "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" road show, will open this important feature at the Oliver Theatre, South Bend, next week, for a two-week's run. Manager Roselle, of Metro, states that four road companies will be kept busy during September and five during October.

Frank Fischer, owner of the La Salle Theatre, at La Salle, Illinois, has taken over the Colonial from Jody Dorman, and is reported to be negotiating for the Marquette and Majestic Theatres, the other La Salle houses.

Art Pelser, salesmanager of Favorite Players Film Corporation, of Chicago, has started an active sales campaign and has just returned from a two week's trip through the territory.

Pierce & Son, who are constructing a new theatre at Kewanee, Illinois, announce that the new house will be complete and ready for business within sixty days.

The new theatre at Hoopeston, Illinois, which has not yet been named, will be ready for business on November 1st and will be an up-to-date and commodious small town theatre in every respect.

Julius Alcock, city salesman for Superior Screen Service, is taking a week's vacation preparatory for the Fall campaign to be put on by Superior. Billy Weiss has returned after a rest of two weeks and again is hitting the trail throughout northern Illinois in the interests of Superior.

"No Woman Knows," the picturization of Edna Ferber's popular novel, "Fanny Herself," was given a private showing to the trade at Aryan Grotto Thursday morning. A large crowd of exhibitors were present and very favorable comments were heard on the picture, the heart interest being unusual throughout. An interesting feature of the preview was the presence of Miss Ferber, who stayed over in Chicago especially to attend the showing.

The one thousand seat Premier Theatre, at Valparaiso, Indiana, owned by G. C. Showers, is rapidly being pushed to completion, and it is the intention of the management to open it early in October. This will give Valparaiso one of the handsomest and most up-to-date houses in northern Indiana.

Harold Kemp, of Michigan City, Indiana, is the owner of the new house at Hobart, in the same state.

After an auto trip of three thousand miles through Illinois and Indiana Harry Weiss, of Superior Screen Service, is back home with a large bale of contracts in his pockets and reports that motion picture houses are opening right and left and a few days more will see the houses running full blast. He states that one interesting fact picked up on the trip was that while everyone was howling calamity several exhibitors have confessed that the summer business was as usual and the only reason they howled was because the other fellow howled. Harry Weiss is leaving September 1st for a ten-day tussle with the big fish at Saynor, Wisconsin. A contingent of local exhibitor fishermen are going along to enjoy the sport over Labor Day.

The Aurora Theatre Company has arrived at a temporary agreement with the musicians' union following what appeared like a fight to a finish over the question of the musicians' right to dictate the number of musicians to be employed in the different theatres operated by the Burford-Rubens organization.

The theatre company recently obtained an injunction against the union restraining the union from fining or otherwise interfering with musicians working in various theatres, and it was the intention of Messrs. Burford and Rubens to test the right of a union to dictate the number of musicians to be used in various orchestras.

Upon the renewal of negotiations with the union, however, it was agreed to secure a suspension of the temporary injunction, which the Aurora Theatre Company did, retaining the right to reinstate the case in the courts if they wish to later.

If it is necessary to fight the case through the court the decision will be against the labor unions in the opinion of leading attorneys, and will prevent the labor men from forcing moving picture houses or other theatres to use any certain number of musicians, which will be held an act in restraint of trade.

Pending a final agreement with the union for trial of the case in court, the Rialto Theatre is being operated with a six-piece orchestra; the Fox and the Palm without orchestras, although it was the contention of the musicians' union that the Fox should employ four musicians and the Palm three.

Alderman Maurice Kavanagh, who has recently returned to Chicago after an inspection tour of theatres in the west, is again agitating for an ordinance compelling moving picture theatres to rearrange their seats so that no one shall be seated within thirty feet of the screen. He also believes that seats on the side of theatres, which compel patrons who paid full admission prices, to witness a picture from such an angle that the picture is distorted, should be given relief, possibly by the removal of side seats.

No information as to the attitude of the council in general on Alderman Kavanagh's proposal is as yet available, but it is thought in motion picture circles that the measures proposed by the alderman are too drastic to go through.

The world's premier of Douglas Fairbank's "The Three Musketeers," drew tremendous crowds Sunday, August 28th, to Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Randolph Theatre in the heart of the Chicago loop.

According to Ralph Kettering, not only the picture but the attendance surpassed all expectations and from the time the theatre opened at 9 A. M. until it closed at 11 P. M. a long line of prospective patrons were waiting to get in. On Monday the house opened an hour earlier and exceeded Sunday's business by six hundred dollars.

The press and public of Chicago have given the picture such a splendid reception that Jones, Linick & Schaefer state that the picture in all probability will run at least ten weeks.

"It is one of the greatest, if not the greatest, box office attractions ever screened," said Mr. Kettering after the second day's run, "and should break all records wherever shown throughout the country."

"Way Down East" will follow "The Three Musketeers" at the Randolph and will carry the house through until after the first of the year, according to present plans, when "Dream Street" will be put in for a prolonged run.

H. R. Phillips, who for the past two years has been one of Robertson-Cole's star salesman, covering the southside, has resigned to accept a similar position with F. B. Warren Company's Chicago exchange, and will cover the same territory.

Music and the Picture

"Survey of a Year of Motion Picture Music"

By Charles D. Isaacson

ONE year ago I had the pleasure of joining the MOTION PICTURE NEWS staff as musical editor.

I had certain ambitions in picture music, and I have seen a good many of them fulfilled, and a great many still to be made a reality. A great writer once said "A man's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for?" In any event, there has been a great reaching forth, and some things have been plucked.

A survey of the year's activities and musical developments will prove interesting to my publishers and readers.

The most important single improvement in the musical film field to my mind, was the Congress of Motion Picture and Musical Interests at the Hotel Astor last January and the subsequent formation of the Association of Motion-Picture-Musical Interests which has now a membership of several hundred musicians, managers, producers, publishers, instrument makers, etc. The Board of Directors includes some of the biggest figures in both music and pictures, and immediately after the summer lull the Association will begin to show its power and prowess.

The year witnesses the fierce fight on the music tax, and the settlement of one point. The Society of Composers and Authors has the right to impose the tax and the theatre has the privilege of playing non-taxable music.

The Association of Organists formed a service bureau for all theatre managers.

The New York Exhibitors Board of Trade has developed a music exchange, where musicians and managers can meet and settle their problems.

Headed by Percy Grainger, a number of the biggest musicians have made their first appearances in picture houses, clearing the way for all artists to be billed in motion pictures without any loss of dignity!

The musical magazines which up to now have been quite on their heels when motion picture music was mentioned, have during this year opened their own little Motion Picture departments, so that their entire reading constituency may learn how to get into the new and growing field of art.

A number of the most conservative newspapers during the last several months have begun mention of "Motion Picture Music." These same newspapers last year considered their music department above reporting picture music, and picture reporters weren't in a position to criticize music at all, with the result that nobody said anything about any of the fine work of the big picture orchestras and organists.

The Rochester School of Music was the first of several important musical conservatories to announce the opening of a department devoted to motion picture musical theory and practice. This is a field of wide importance,—for so many finely equipped musicians are totally unfamiliar with the picture needs and technique.

Discussion and comment have been started in agitation for a "Musictionary" or in plain language a dictionary of music adaptable for all moods and emotions—a book which will enable the musician to find all the music among the standard works, which might be used in any situation, by just looking in the pages—as easily as you might seek a word in a dictionary.

The most virile discussion has been waged around the cue-sheet, with the result that innumerable improvements have been begun even among the most conservative "old-timers." New types of cue-sheets have sprung into being. The tendency now is to analyze the picture emotionally and let the musician pick out his own music, rather than list some one composition which might not be available, and which does not explain its intent to the musician.

Many of the oldest conservative musical agencies have joined the special picture musical agencies in the business of providing artists for musical acts within the picture houses.

The oldest publishers of music have opened special motion picture departments.

The conservative piano houses like Steinway have begun activity among the picture managers, to place their instruments in the theatres as "official piano."

The reproducing piano has become an actuality in dozens of big theatres.

The theatre orchestras in the big-type houses are steadily growing and improving and are better than many so-called symphony orchestras.

Acoustical information has become more understood, and is more demanded by theatre associations.

The assistance of women's clubs and music clubs has been encouraged by the theatre associations.

Jazz and ragtime have been rapidly put in the background as musical accompaniment to pictures excepting where the scenes specifically call for that kind of music; in other words there has been a steady betterment of the kind of music used.

Cooperation between touring artists, opera companies and orchestras has been actually a fact in dozens of theatres.

In the conduct of the present department, over two thousand letters have been received from musicians and managers all over the country and the inquiries have included such matters as these:

BUILDING LIBRARIES.
SELECTING ORGANS.
ACQUIRING A KNOWLEDGE OF MUSICAL EMOTIONAL PSYCHOLOGY.
ENGAGING MUSICIANS.
ACOUSTICAL DIFFICULTIES.

Prohibition and Music

Senator Sheppard of Texas (author of the eighteenth amendment) declares that a greater love for music is prohibition's harvest. In an article in Music Trades, he writes:

"Since prohibition has come to be a reality families spend much more time together; the worker finds no occasion to linger at downtown corners, spending his money and time; the front porch and the garden have come up as the corner saloon has gone down.

"Homes that knew not music for lo! these many years, know it again. Children are better cared for. Wives know, some of them for the first time, what it is not to be on the grocer's books. Fathers take notice of the shabby furnishings and help save us to replace them. The whole town is better dressed and happier. Piano and phonograph stores have engaged additional assistants. Home purchases, always popular, flourish even more."

Vassar Head Studies Singing

Dr. H. M. MacCracken, president of Vassar College, is a man's man and a mingler in everyday life as well as academic affairs. He is a doer of unconventional things at Vassar. But all that is beside the present point. I saw him coming down the path from his home on the college campus. He was loaded with bundles and smiling broadly.

"I'm making a raid, you see, upon the clothes treasures, getting my vacation duds in order.

Then we discussed music.

"I am an ardent lover of the art, and I should like to see it enter college life in a much broader way than is generally followed. I want to make our music course very democratic, for that's my whole policy here. More than that, I desire that the whole of the student body participate in musical undertakings, not actively, but passively—listeners, in any event.

"We organized a faculty glee club! We had forty teachers in the group, not all with great voices but nevertheless all harmonizing well. The glee club rehearsed only good music. At the concert, the entire student body turned out in amazement to hear the teachers sing! . . . Well, do you know, the enthusiasm was great. Many other teachers' faculty events were planned. However, what happened immediately was worth anything.

"Glee club members, all who sing, must be pretty good fellows, the teachers must be human. And indeed they were. The music showed it. Oh I know the concert cemented student-faculty good will. I even go so far as to insist that every student received at least half one per cent better grade as a result of that concert! The teachers were in such a good light, that every body worked harder to pass her examination."

President MacCracken laughed genially.

"I believe in good mass singing but I am opposed to the so-called community chorus—it gets us nowhere. It is just an expression of the savage state.

"By the way, I am studying singing! Yes, indeed, I've been taking lessons for two years. It has helped my speaking voice. Formerly in public addresses, I needed to wet my mouth several times and cough and clear my throat. Now, all that is unnecessary. It is easy to talk now for hours. I use my vocal chords correctly, I breathe right. My tone is more pleasant to hear. And in addition I've learned much of music which I was missing before."

Will Reopen Lima, O., House in Sept.

After having been closed for three months, undergoing a thorough renovation and redecorating, the Regent theatre, Lima, Ohio, will reopen on September 3 as one of the chain of houses operated by W. S. Butterfield.

The management of the Regent will be in the hands of Frank Zartman, well-known theatrical manager and publicity specialist, formerly publicity director and manager of the Strand in Dayton, and lately with the Allen Brothers of Canada.

New Angle to Baby Show Idea

Jack Lacy, Paramount exploiteer for Detroit, has arranged baby shows to be held simultaneously at six of J. H. Kumsky's resident theatres in Detroit—The De Luxe, Alhambra, Strand, Linwood-La Salle, Liberty and Garden. These tests will be strung along for four days of Paramount week, September 5 to 10.

Tuesday is to be known as pretty baby day; Wednesday as smallest baby day; Friday as twins day, and Saturday as dimpled baby day. One prize will be given away each day at each of the six theatres to the babies considered by the judges to be the winner in his or her particular class. The prizes were chain and locket, silver spoon, beauty pins, gold rings, silver baby mug and other gifts. The local women's clubs in the neighborhood of the theatres have leaped at the opportunity of bossing and arranging the whole affair. The newspapers have been prodigal in mentioning "The Paramount Week Baby Contests."

Navy Aids Royster at Olean, N. Y.

A tie-up with the United States Navy for "Idols of Clay" and "Something to Think About" and cooperation with merchandise windows were the feature of Harry L. Royster's campaign in Olean, N. Y., during the run of these pictures at the Gem theatre. A cut of one of the window displays appears above.

Sends Out Postals Written in Shorthand

J. B. Gardner, manager and J. E. Lindgren, publicity director for the Gem and Scenic theatres, Sand Point, Idaho, used a novelty postcard as one of the exploitation mediums for the recent showing of "Too Much Speed" at the Gem.

The postcards announced the picture's engagement in shorthand and were mailed to all the stenographers in the city.

The stunt was good for much word-of-mouth advertising, the "stenog," of course, telling all their friends about the novelty.

This window display for "Idols of Clay" is by the Gem theatre, Olean, N. Y.

Three exploitation stunts which Roy Tillson, manager of the New Strand theatre, Lansing, Mich., originated for the engagements of "The Woman in His House," "Peck's Bad Boy" and "Twin Beds" respectively. The displays were in the theatre lobby

Ricketson Puts Personal Touch to His Campaigns

Rick Ricketson, the Paramount exploiteer for the Salt Lake City exchange, is getting great results from the personal appeal stunt in small towns. When he went to Nemphi, Utah, population 10,000, for the run of "The Inside of the Cup," he made it a point to get in touch with all the club women of the town.

He telephoned the president of the federation of women's societies at Nemphi, and told her the theme of the picture and of its endorsement by certain New York uplift societies. She acted as telephone girl and telephoned the hundred or more members of her organization asking them to go to the Venice theatre, Monday or Tuesday. Co-operative windows were landed and since Manager Foote of the Venice had 10 one-sheets left over after he had put his accessories out, Ricketson mounted these on old compo and beaver board and put them on delivery trucks and "jitneys." The total cost of the exploitation was $3.25.

Projection Room Effects Tried Out by Hyman

Water ripple effects from the projection room on the lower half of a blue neutral drop, shadow lights of night on a foliaged river bank back border, a cut-out pier bathed in mellow light, faint glow from far-away village windows—all these artistic effects were invoked by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman recently in developing an opening number for his show at the Brooklyn Mark Strand that would serve to fill the place of an orchestral overture.

Mr. Hyman worked out all these effects with the projection room and motion pictures as his chief aids, basing it all upon Burleigh's fine number, "Deep River," which was sung by the Mark Strand Mixed Quartette.

Kistler Transforms Lobby Into Maine Woods Scene

Manager Harold Kistler, of the Rialto theatre, Atlanta, transformed the lobby of his theatre so completely, for the showing of "Snowblind," that Atlantans passing that corner thought themselves in the lost Maine woods.

The entire front of the Rialto, which has an entrance from two streets, was built into a log cabin, with windows which held posters advertising the picture, and two narrow doorways, dripping with artificial icicles, and snow, led to the box office, which had been partially concealed with pine branches.

The corners of the building, outside, had been masked by four tall pines—real ones—in which the artificial snow and ice glistened coolly.

Fans concealed about the lobby gave a "pine-laden Northern breeze," that was distinctly refreshing on a torrid day.

Stage Wedding for "Wedding Bells" at Wichita

O. K. Mason, of the Regent, Wichita, Kans., put on a real marriage during the week's run there of "Wedding Bells." It was held on the Regent stage one night to a capacity audience, with wedding bells, pretty decorations, flowers and a minister, with the result it was turned into a big local news story by the Wichita papers.

Dozens of firms joined in giving presents to the newlyweds. And none of these failed to place notices of the fact in their show windows, with the things they were going to give away, large placards tastefully decorated, and the name of the theatre and motion picture being shown prominently displayed. In scores of show windows throughout the city large twin-bells were placed, and in the middle of these were "cut-outs" containing scenes from the motion picture

Explaining by pictures the exploitation stunt which Reed and Son, managers of the Star theatre, put over for the showing of "Brewster's Millions"

Schmidt's "Devil" Lobby Goes Big

Manager George Schmidt capped his many effective lobbies, since his acceptance of the post of manager of the Strand theatre, Atlanta, some weeks ago, by one of the best seen in the South.

The picture being played was "The Devil," coming second run from another Atlanta house.

For a week before the opening date, he carried small single column ads, little over an inch in depth which said, simply, "Go to The Devil!" There were no quotation marks to indicate that this was an invitation, rather than a profanity, and the little ads got the maximum of attention.

For three days before the opening, a giant white banner, over the side of a little candy shop next to the Strand, bore, in box-car letters of a startling crimson, the same, terse phrase, "Go to The Devil!"

But best of all was the lobby which greeted startled Atlanta Monday morning, the opening day. The entire lobby had been hung with scarlet draperies, the walls covered, the box office masked, the whole lobby one mess of scarlet.

A cut-out from a twenty-four sheet, showing the star in the costume of the big "bal masque" which is the picture's biggest punch, stood at the top of a small flight of steps. Grouped around him were the maidens of the Bachanalian ballet, writhing in various postures of agony and abasement. The top step of this flight of stairs was of glass, and under it had been arranged a circle of red and yellow lights. The whole color of the entire group, Devil and maidens, was red, a sinister shade that accentuated the backdraperies.

On either side of the bottom step crouched two horrible little demons, looking up in crooked adoration of the Devil, on the step of glass. Bits of yellow and red crepe paper had been cut, and were fastened to electric fans, concealed, so that the bits of paper seemed flames leaping around the feet of the Devil and menacing the maidens. The doorman was dressed as a devil.

"Passion Flower" Lobby Display at Owensborot

A lobby display that paid for its cost many times over was recently used by Arch Bamberger, manager of the Empress theatre, Owensboro, Ky., for his engagement of "The Passion Flower."

Several days before the showing the exterior portion of the lobby display was put up, made of beaverboard and threesheets, giving the appearance of the entrance to a Spanish garden suggested by the picture. Then the day of the showing the box effect giving the distance, with the sunset and the winding path and a dancing girl with tambourine in silhouette, was set within the entrance, so that the effect from the street gave the appearance of a garden. At night electrics concealed in the base lighted it up giving the effect still of a sunset in old Spain.

McCormick's Prologue Number Creates Sensation in Cleveland

An atmospheric prologue that took Cleveland by storm was recently presented by S. Barrett McCormick, manager of the Allen theatre of the above named city in connection with the engagement of "A Tale of Two Worlds."

Mr. McCormick and his art director, Frank Zimmerer titled the number, "The Feast of the Lanterns and Tall Spears." The atmosphere of the prologue like the atmosphere of the feature, was Chinese.

After a brief overture, the scene opened with a magnificent Chinese garden. Two Chinese priests appear. They salute each other. They withdraw. Then down, through the two main aisles of the theatre came the Chinese procession. There were the "Fan Fan Girls," gorgeously arrayed; "The Hatchet Men"; "The Lantern Men" with beautifully lighted lanterns. Then came four coolies, down each aisle, each carrying a litter. When the procession is half way down the aisle, a bugle sounds. Everything halts. The curtains of the litters are drawn aside, and reveal in one a Chinese prince, in the other, a Chinese princess. The prince sings a love song to the princess. She answers him in song. Then the prince gives the signal, and the procession advances down the aisles, through the orchestra pit, to the stage, where the "Fan Fan Girls," members of a permanent ballet and the "Hatchet Men" dance. After that the procession proceeds while the curtain is drawn.

Zeigler Puts Over Extensive Campaign

Another example of small city success with a well planned exploitation campaign is afforded in the publicity drive recently put over by Harold Zeigler, of the Reliance theatre, Orangeburg, S. C., for "Outside the Law."

Zeigler's campaign had four angles, a clever street stunt, a big newspaper merchant tie-up, a window display tie-up and punchful lobby.

His street stunt was simple but effective. It consisted of dressing two men, one as a policeman and the other as a convict, handcuffing them together and sending them on their merry way through the streets of Orangeburg with signs advertising the picture on their backs.

Zeigler's newspaper tie-up consisted of a double-truck in the Orangeburg Times and Democrat, built around his theatre ad and consisting of a score of merchant ads using the word REPUTATION in striking black cut. In connection with this page was a misspelled word test, using words in various ads. This proved very popular. Prizes for those detecting the misspelled words consisted of tickets to the picture.

A number of attractive window displays were arranged with various merchants, advertising the Reputation of their merchandise.

The Reliance theatre lobby was decorated with posters and cut-outs from the posters supplied with the picture, including a smashing twenty-four sheet head of Priscilla Dean over the entrance.

Louisville House Presents Prologue

The accompanying cut shows a view of the prologue which Manager Firnkoess, of the Majestic theatre, Louisville, Ky., presented for his engagement of "The Mark of Zorro."

The setting was of beaverboard painted to resemble stone and the balconies, shutters and bars were of wood.

Vines were used to give the setting the atmosphere.

A singer costumed in Spanish attire rendered Spanish songs. The feature was greatly strengthened by the presentation number.

Mayer's Indianapolis Campaign for "Reputation"

Joe Mayer, Universal exploitation expert, and Bob Eichelsdorfer, publicity manager of the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, put over a new one in that city recently, for the showing of "Reputation." Return postcards were sent to 5,000 residents of Indianapolis reading as follows:

"The first issue of 'The Scandal Sheet' will be published on Thursday, August 12. This paper will contain a number of highly interesting stories about people you know, including a full and intimate history of the life and escapades of notorious Laura Figlan. We want every person in Indianapolis to read 'The Scandal Sheet,' and in order to introduce it into every home, we will send a copy of the first issue, absolutely free. Fill out the attached postal card and mail it at once, etc." Altogether more than half of the cards were returned.

Advertisements of "The Scandal" were inserted in the local papers, resulting in many more requests for the little publication.

Several thousand more of the miniature newspapers were distributed through other agencies.

This stunt was backed by an extensive newspaper teaser ad campaign, followed on the fourth day by larger ads, on the fifth day by character study ads and on the sixth and seventh days by big smash ads. On the eighth day of the newspaper campaign—the second day of the showing, the Indianapolis Times carried a double-truck of 16 columns made up of local merchants' ads based on the word "REPUTATION" built around the theatre ad.

A series of window displays, also built around the word "REPUTATION" supplemented the other forms of exploitation.

Big Campaign for "Four Horsemen" in Twin Cities

One of the most extensive exploitation campaigns ever inaugurated in Minneapolis is in progress for the indefinite showing of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" at the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, and the Garrick theatre, St. Paul.

The advertising for the picture for both cities was under the supervision of Arthur Janisch, advertising director of Finkelstein and Ruben, and the publicity was handled by R. D. Scofield.

The advance campaign was confined almost exclusively to the newspapers. About ten days in advance of the opening, small amusements were run announcing the opening of the seat sale. One week in advance of the opening the newspaper campaign was inaugurated with a large commercial ad. The catchline, "The World's Greatest Picture," was used in all the ads.

Four weeks in advance of the opening 50,000 gummed stickers, six inches in diameter, were pasted in every conceivable location in Minneapolis. These stickers merely read, "Coming soon. The Four Horsemen." At the same time a large banner was strung across the street in front of the New Lyric. This attracted a great deal of attention because banners are very seldom seen in Minneapolis because of the difficulty in securing permission to use them from the city authorities.

Simultaneously with the appearance of the commercial ads, all the local newspapers co-operated generously with stories and pictures in their news sections. The Minneapolis Sunday Tribune, on August 28th, carried a seven-column layout of scenes from the picture.

"Wallie" Decker, a veteran showman, is in charge of the presentation of "The Four Horsemen," at the New Lyric. Harry F. Billings, formerly manager of the Capitol theatre, Saint Paul, will manage the New Garrick during the run of "The Four Horsemen."

"The Four Horsemen" is presented with an augmented orchestra under the direction of William Warvelle Nelson, former director of the Minneapolis New Garrick orchestra.

Miniature Train Advertises "Love Special"

With a little electric train, upon a circular track, a station called "Wedlock Junction," at which the train stopped on each trip around the circle, Clarence Rollins, manager of the Capitol theatre, at Clearwater, Florida, stopped every passer and had the town talking about "Have you seen the 'Love Special' at the Capitol?"

The display did not cost a great deal, but it was more effective than all the paper that could be put up. All day long there was a crowd in front watching the little train as it glided around the track and made its halt at the station.

The evening paper gave the novel display a nice write-up, and this brought out a great many who would not have come. Mr. Rollins says, "It brought me an excellent day's business, which more than paid for the time and expense of preparing it. I shall use displays of this kind as often as the opportunity presents."

Weld Gets Merchants in on "County Fair" Exploitation

When "The Country Fair" played the Strand at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, the manager, Arthur E. Weld, ran a little county fair in the lobby just to let the good folk know what was going on inside. And the lobby cost him nothing.

Borrowing a half dozen tables from a friendly furniture dealer, Mr. Weld enticed local merchants to occupy them with displays of fancy merchandise and to provide pretty demonstrators to electrically toast bread for the hungry and sprinkle perfume and powder upon those who would stand for it.

The merchants were thankful for an opportunity to use the beautiful Strand lobby for display of their wares, and the manager got an effective lobby for his show. Incidentally the merchants who accepted Mr. Weld's courtesy have some excellent windows which will be easier of access to the Strand hereafter.

Prize Gardens Aid "Appearances" Showing

When "Appearances" played at the Lyric theatre, Logan, Utah, Rick Ricketson, Paramount exploiteer, sold the theatre on the idea of offering a little prize for the best garden in the community. The Women's Club Executive Committee sponsored the cause and agreed to act as judges. This dragged the newspapers in line and the editors opened their front pages. Ricketson then founded an "Appearance" League and got up a kids' matinee to boom cleaning up the town. A co-operative window card was displayed in practically every store.

The cost of the exploitation as a whole went around $10.

Atlanta Theatre Builds Nice Display for "Wing Toy"

Manager A. W. Irwin, of the Forsyth theatre, Atlanta, is always on the alert for an exploitation idea that will earn its keep.

Lobby displays he has found effective in bringing people into the theatre and many excellent examples of the art have been originated at the Forsyth. One of Mr. Irwin's recent displays was for "Wing Toy."

The central decoration of the lobby was a huge square of pale green beaverboard, with a darker green border. Encircling this board was a great, coiled dragon, "breathing fire and destruction." His wide open mouth was lined with red tissue paper, tiny red electric light globes were in his nostrils, and a green globe indicated the one eye which could be seen. There was a small electric globe back of the tissue paper lining of his mouth, all adding to the effectiveness of the scene.

In that part of the board untouched by the dragon's coils, the words "Wing Toy" had been cut out, Japanese-fashion, and were filled in with tissue paper, in various colors, with electric lights back of them. Mounted at either corner of the board, were cut-outs of Shirley Mason, in her Japanese make-up.

Tall wicker vases, as tall as an average man, held varicolored bouquets of chrysanthemums—the paper kind, but arranged with much care and good taste.

Down on the floor in front of the cut-out was a huge bowl of gold-fish mounted on a pedestal that looked like Japanese coral.

There were branches of cherry blossoms around the lobby, and concealed fans kept the blossoms swaying in a very life-like manner.

Railway Station Lobby Display for "Love Special"

Patrons entering the Capitol theatre at Oklahoma City, Okla., recently might have imagined that they were boarding a railway train bound for the East.

The lobby of the theatre was filled with cartoons on a large scale, representing a locomotive and railway coach with the box office representing the ticket office. Railroad time tables were scattered around and bulletin boards marked up to show schedule for leaving time for "The Love Special," which the Capitol was showing.

Imitation ringing of the locomotive's bell and blowing of the whistle, attracted the attention of passersby.

Manager E. I. Lewis is a live wire exhibitor and a firm believer in exploitation.

"Augmented Scenics" Hyman's Latest

Adding animation to short scenic film subjects through the proper use of soloists has served to popularize the scenics which are not always met with cheers on a motion picture program, according to Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand, who finds that a show without one of his augmented scenics, as he calls them, is not regarded as complete.

An example of how presentation can enliven a scenic had its demonstration in the Prizma film, "At Dawning," which is a series of delicately tinted outdoor scenes. While this number would have been accepted, it was given life through the rendition during the showing of the picture of several romantic song numbers by operatic stars.

The singers were off-stage when the first scenes of the film were shown. As the film was unreeled, Dorothy Bell, soprano, sang Cadman's "At Dawning." George Dale, tenor, followed this with "Somewhere A Voice Is Calling." The singing of the two songs gave a story or descriptive theme for the film. In this way an element of life was given.

Ricketson Works Hard in Logan, Utah

When "The Gilded Lily" played at the Lyric theatre, Logan, Utah, Rick Ricketson, tied up every single window on the main street of the town. The Chevrolet people donated a car, on which was erected a poster made of a cut-out. The only other draperies were patriotic bunting swiped from the police department. A special newspaper campaign was put on and the picture was given a pre-view before an invited audience.

Trade Papers Have Sold Exploitation, Says Saunders

After a tour of the Middle West, Claud Saunders, Paramount exploitation chief, finds that the trade papers have practically sold exploitation to the industry. "And many of the smaller exhibitors in the still smaller towns have found exploitation the salvation of their businesses. Current results and the present attitude of the average theatre manager is a great tribute to the influence of the trade papers. Where the exhibitor is not altogether sold on exploitation, he is at least receptive to any exploitation proposition," Mr. Saunders said.

"The trade papers can not give up their educational work now. With a little redoubled effort, the industry can be taught to look upon exploitation as a necessity. The exploitation sections of these papers must be conducted as they have in the past, for they are the matter the exhibitors are extremely anxious to read." Mr. Saunders found business conditions indicative of a prosperous fall and winter.

Artistic Lobby Display Used by Regent

The cut does not do the display justice as the "clowns," "elephants," etc., were not a part of the background, but were set out from the backing some three or four feet.

The display attracted a great deal of favorable attention.

Wooden "Shrillers" Advertise "The Whistle"

Leslie Whelan bought several hundred wooden shrillers at about two cents a piece and distributed them at Cheyenne, Wyoming. When the youngster's put them in their mouths and made the ear-piercing noise, there was only one answer —"The Whistle," playing at the Princess theatre. The Paramount exploiteer affixed tags advertising the picture on the whistles to make sure that nobody went wrong.

Fight Pictures Get Much Publicity at Buffalo

Paul Gray, who is exploiting the Dempsey-Carpentier fight film in the hinterland, has recently put over a campaign at Buffalo which broke precedents for free newspaper space.

The Buffalo Evening News was persuaded to lend itself to a tie-up that secured front page stories on the attraction in a number of editions.

As a chaser for landing on the Buffalo Evening News' front page, Mr. Gray went one better, and broke into print on the front page of the Buffalo Evening Times exactly seven times in one week. In order to successfully do this he built an immense hand-painted reproduction of that paper's front page in front of the theatre. The reproduction was over eighteen feet high and its manner of make-up was similar to the style employed by the Times. Every story on the massive newspaper referred to the fight films, and it attracted thousands of people to the theatre.

Vogel Cashes in on Marine Crime

A. Mike Vogel cashed in on the wave of marine crime on the Pacific Ocean, when he was exploiting the Paramount picture, "Buried Treasure," playing at the Strand theatre, Seattle. He took one of the panels of the lobby and filled it with clippings from newspapers showing the latest piracies. He featured the display with a large caption, "Sure There's Pirates," which was effectual if ungrammatical.

Local Merchants Aid "Charge It" Campaign

A tie-up with local merchants tha packed the Rex theatre during the recer run of "Charge It" at the Rex theatr Spartansburg, S. C., was carried out b Manager A. C. Cowles in an ingeniou manner. A full page advertisement i morning and afternoon dailies of Spar ansburg was run on the day preceding th showing of the picture. The Rex thea tre's advertisement occupied the center c the page, and around it were assemble various advertisements contributed b Spartanburg merchants. Every ad on th page had as its central theme the evil c charging goods. Jewelers, grocers, dr goods merchants, wholesale concerns, an other business houses of the city vied wit each other in securing space on this pag which was the chief topic of conversatio during the stay of "Charge It" at th Rex. One of the catchiest ads on th page was that of a dealer in batteries fc automobiles. This ad set forth, in larg black type, that "Charge It Forms th Biggest Part of Our Business." Manage Cowles found that this form of tie-up de veloped the strongest pulling power h has secured since taking over the Re In putting this tie-up across he secure the co-operation of the advertising mar agers of both local dailies, each of the ex perts being delighted to assist in th campaign.

Klu Klux Klan Aids Strand of Atlanta

Manager Schmidt Puts Over Novel Exploitation on "The Face at Your Window"

ATLANTA is the headquarters of the Klu Klux Klan, and about a year ago, the Klan was reorganized, with l its Civil War traditions, its ghostly remonial, its weird white robes, with eir symbols in red and black on the east. So little has been learned, by outders, about the real Klan and their trations, that they are still invested with e romance and the mystery of the olden ys. All of which Manager George chmidt of the Strand theatre, Atlanta as recently utilized in an exploitation mpaign for his showing of "The Face Your Window."

First he arranged a private screening r some of the highest officials of the rder. These men endorsed the picture. long letter to that effect, mounted on ardboard and in a one-sheet-size lobby ame, was made the feature of the lobby.

A half of the side-wall of a house had een erected in the lobby, with a window the center. There were curtains at his window, and back of it had been ounted a cut-out of a sort of "greenyed demon," whose hands thrust apart e curtains, and whose hideous face eered through the window.

At the left of this was a tall white gure—a Klansman in exactly the proper ostume, down to the weird symbol which always done in red and black, on the eft breast of all the Klan robes. This gure bestrode a horse, draped as all Klan-horses are, in disguising white robes, nd the Klansman pointed to the face at he window.

Aloft in one hand the Klansman bore he "trademark" of the order, a white ross, in which had been set dark red electric globes, and the whole wired.

The lighting effect was perhaps the most interesting feature of the display. Back of the window, and shining down on the face were green lights, throwing into relief every horrible feature of the face. The Klansman scarlet light, in vivid contrast to this, drew much attention.

The street bally-hoo was well taken care of, too. Every afternoon, for three days before the play-date, just at twilight (which is the hour always chosen for the Klan parades), ten horsemen, draped in their robes, with their horses disguised, rode down the principal streets of the city. Their horses' hoofs muffled, their progress was almost deathly quiet, and in the midst of the clamor of home-going, this silence, instead of being lost, made a strong impression. For the entire week of the run of the picture, twenty seats had been reserved, and at eight o'clock twenty Klansmen, in full paraphernalia, marched in, ten down either aisle and seated themselves.

Mr. Schmidt used three American flags and two Confederacy flags, in the lobby, all gathered, with corners touching.

The whole thing was a campaign well-planned, for its effect on Southern people particularly, because the Klu Klux Klan had its beginning in the very heart of the old South.

Note—Mr. Schmidt's tie-up with the Klu Klux Klan is related with the editorial suggestion that exhibitors must use their own judgment, taking into consideration local conditions in effecting tie-ups with this organization. What has proven effective exploitation for Schmidt might prove a boomerang for other exhibitors.

Samples of Writing Put Over "Jim the Penman"

Samples of penmanship were the means used to exploit "Jim, the Penman," when it appeared in Long Beach, Cal., at the Liberty theatre. Publicity Manager Strain got the two business colleges of the city to submit all kinds of penmanship examples from class work of the schools. These were literally plastered over the inside of the lobby. The centerpiece was a huge cut-out of Mr. Barrymore's arm with pen in hand outstretched, gripped by the hand of the law.

Comment on handwriting experts, great forgers and how they were caught, etc., were used liberally in newspaper readers and the whole made a pulling combination that did the business.

Incidentally the schools were tickled to death to submit the penmanship examples.

Jameyson Puts Over Effective Campaign for "Caligari"

Howard E. Jameyson, advertising manager of the Liberty and Doric Theatres in Kansas City, carried on an expensive but effective exploitation campaign with "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," at the Doric theatre last week.

Aside from an unusually large newspaper ad Sunday, Mr. Jameyson made his campaign purely a psychological one. Instead of featuring the merits of the picture, playing up the leading characters and explaining the settings of the production, none of which are out of doors, Mr. Jameyson played upon the curiosity of the public. Nothing was explained in the copy which went into the newspaper ads.

However, a half-page editorial in one of the leading dailies and further publicity following the special showing of the picture to a class from the Kansas City Art Institute, was sufficient to start the public talking about the production. Virtually all the newspaper publicity given the picture came as a result of statements from local art and dramatic critics, predicting that the settings and technique of the production were twenty years ahead of the present time.

The picture lived up to the mysterious atmosphere with which it had been surrounded and the Doric played to one of the best weekly attendances that it has enjoyed in some time.

If it is advertised at all— it's in the News.

Des Moines Newspaper Aids Stolte

The Des Moines Evening Tribune wi induced by Max R. Doolittle and Arth G. Stolte, managing director of the D Moines theatre to lend its exploitati services in conducting an easy competiti on "the greatest moment in my life," connection with the showing of "T Great Moment" at the Des Moines.

Mr. Doolittle sold a paper on the id of mutual benefit. Do you remember se eral years ago, when nearly all pape were running contributions on "My Mo Embarrassing Moment?" said Doolittl "Wasn't that a great circulation builde Why not a tie-up on 'My Greatest M ment?' The picture will be certain stimulate interest in the test."

The Tribune was sold. They donat one of their most talented writers to he put it across. Stills of the picture and a nouncements of the run found their wa on the front page. There were front pa readers on Gloria Swanson—now Mr Herbert K. Somborn, mother of a bab daughter. What was her moment? H elevation to stardom or the arrival of h baby daughter. The town fell for it. T Tribune circulation took a big boost nearly 1,200 essays flooded the Tribu offices. Pathe Says Exhibs Are Not Relying Too Much on New Season's Output

IN a statement just issued from the Pathe headquarters announcement is made that bookings on its feature productions have increased to a marked extent and made necessary the shipping to exchanges of new prints and accessory material. Many of these pictures registering a new impetus in booking have already passed through their first-run period in the big cities. In this fact, Pathe scents the development of an unusual and significant situation. Exhibitors, declares the Pathe statement, seem to be doubtful about relying too confidently on the season's output of new feature productions.

"Last year," continues the Pathe statement, "these numbered about eight hundred; this year the list of new features is reduced to approximately five hundred. If the experience of exhibitors had been such as to make them feel assured of the general high quality and box-office value of these five hundred new features, probably they would not be disturbed by the sharp reduction in the fresh supply. But that has not been their experience. They have grown accustomed to making their choice from a list so much larger than that offered for the season now beginning that they are naturally fearful of having to content themselves with a certain amount of inferior material.

"So much has been printed about retrenchments all along the line wherever motion pictures are produced that it would be a very optimistic exhibitor who would not expect this tendency to be reflected in a falling off in impressiveness of the new output. So it appears that exhibitors in many parts of the country are inclined to place the new feature supply at a figure considerably lower than the one brought to their notice—making even a reasonable deduction for inferior productions."

On Arrival of New Directors Fall Work Begins at Universal City

THREE new directors signed by Universal will report to Irving G. Thalberg, general manager at Universal City. With their arrival Universal City will start the fall production season with fifty-two special attractions and approximately ten big Universal-Jewel scheduled for the year's output.

Paul Scardon will be the first director to start work. He will guide Miss du Pont, Universal's spectacular new star, through "Ropes" a photodrama which will be filmed from Daniel Wilbur Steele's one-act play—a sensation when it appeared in Harper's Magazine.

Almost simultaneously with the starting of production on "Ropes," Dallas Fitzgerald will begin work with Gladys Walton on "The Guttersnipe." The famous little flapper-star will interpret the role of an alley-waif under his guidance. The story is from the pen of Percival Wilde.

Hobart Henley is en route to Universal City from New York and has not yet been assigned to a star. It is understood that he will be given one of the most important units at Universal City.

Jack Conway will start production almost immediately on "The Substitute Millionaire," which will serve Herbert Rawlinson as his first Universal starring vehicle.

Frank Mayo will return from an extended vacation in time to join the production barrage with "Dr. Jim," a smashing sea-story to be directed by William Worthington.

Edward Kull is to direct Eileen Sedgwick in "The Terror Trail" as soon as the serial star completes her vacation.

Fanning Collaborates with Authors

The average director does not relish having any interference on the part of authors of a story, the film version of which has become his solemn duty. Frank Fanning, directing "Behind the Mask," is an exception. He really acknowledges that there may be something about making pictures that he and that no other director has yet learned, and he realizes, also, that the author or authors may have a definite conception of the story which, from a director's point of view, is hidden. Therefore, when Henry McCarty and Leo Meehan, authors of "Behind the Mask," which is being produced with Lester Cuneo as the star, suggested they work with the director in production they were cordially urged to do so.

"Behind the Mask" is the first of a series of eight five-reel Westerns, starring Mr. Cuneo, with distribution in the hands of Irving M. Lesser.

Jack Holt, besides starting his first Paramount star picture, has also the honor of breaking virgin soil for location scenes at Monmoth Mountain, California, fifty miles north of Bishop. The picture is "The Call of the North" and a reproduction of a Hudson Bay Trading post will be constructed in the heart of the mountains and on the shores of one of the many beautiful lakes.

Piute Indians about the many of these will be employed as extras. Madge Bellamy has the feminine lead and Noah Berry, former Paramount character favorite, Francis McDonald, Jack Herbert and others are seen in good roles, and Big Tree, the latter a full blooded Seneca, are taking part.

Realistic Production of Cyclone on Screen

Bertram Bracken, director of the two-reel Selig-Rork Photoplays being made for Educational release, has reproduced on the screen in most realistic fashion all the phases of a terriffic cyclone, according to a report from Educational.

Laud Arliss in "Disraeli"

New York Critics Praise United Artists Film at Strand Showing

"DISRAELI," the first George Arliss production to be distributed by United Artists Corporation, has been received most enthusiastically by the critics of the New York newspapers, who were lavish in their reviews with words of praise for this production.

Mrs. H. Z. Torres, Dramatic Editor of the New York Commercial, said: "'Disraeli' is distinctly a motion picture event. The distinguished acting of George Arliss is even more more effective in the screen version than in the stage success of the same name. Here is a motion picture that is signally intelligent. No one interested in the development of screen art can afford to miss it. The pulsating, vivid drama is held intact, and the whole is crowned by the art of Arliss."

Gertrude Chase of the Morning Telegraph said that "Disraeli" was particularly suitable for the screen, full of color and wit, and that the supporting cast was fine.

The new York World said that "'Disraeli" is "one of the screen's finest personal characterizations, and that Mr. Arliss as the suave, designing, shrewd and courageous British Premier "smirks his way through the motion picture adaptation of Louis N. Parker's great play, in which he made the outstanding triumph of his long career with the ease and poise of a veteran photoplay performer."

In speaking of Mr. Arliss, the World says: 'The clearcut, stonelike profile of the star, the deft little turn of the head, the mouselike tread as he slips in and out of the camera's range, the penetrating eyes, the keen mind that lies behind those hard chiselled features —they make themselves felt. Mr. Arliss is a motion picture actor as naturally as he is a stage actor. The picture is highly worth seeing for the sake of his uncommonly fine acting."

B'way Premiere for Scenic

Capitol Shows National Geographic One-Reeler, Released by Educational

THE National Geographic Society picture "The Crater of Mt. Katmai," released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., had its premiere this week at the Capitol Theatre, New York.

An elaborate display was arranged in the lobby of the theatre to announce this remarkable single-reel picture, which was made by the expeditions of the National Geographic Society to the Katmai district of Alaska—the only white men who have penetrated to the mountain since the eruptions of 1912 that blew off the top of the mountain and left the largest active volcanic crater in the world.

The September issue of the National Geographic Magazine contains one of the greatest link-ups for a motion picture that the industry has ever seen. This magazine has a circulation of almost a million, and is conceded to be in a class by itself as to dignity and general character. In the September issue 74 pages—the biggest part of the magazine—are devoted to a story of the completion of the explorations of the Katmai district. The story is by Robert F. Griggs, who headed the expeditions. The story is illustrated with 75 black and white illustrations and sixteen illustrations in colors, a great many of which are full page illustrations.

At the suggestion of the exploitation department of Educational Film Exchanges the publicity department of the Capitol Theatre made the best of this. Ten rectangular holes were cut into a large gray pasteboard or mat, and using these as frames, the front cover of the National Geographic Magazine and nine of the full-page illustrations were inserted. The whole was put into a large gold frame and set just inside the door in the lobby of the theatre.

"The Crater of Mt. Katmai" is a companion picture to "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes," also made by the Katmai expeditions of the National Geographic Society and released by Educational.

Busy Season Ahead for Neilan

MARSHALL NEILAN is planning the busiest six months of his career as an independent producer starting September 1st. Stories and advance preparations for three productions are now being completed so that there will be no lapse of time between productions thus facilitating continuous "shooting" at the Neilan studios during the next half year.

The first production on which actual "shooting" will be started within the next ten days is "Penrod," Booth Tarkington's famous story and play. For practically two years Mr. Neilan has been holding the motion picture rights to this piece of theatrical property awaiting the proper time to produce it with Wesley Barry in the title role.

Upon completion of "Penrod," Mr. Neilan will start work on two episodic productions along the lines of "Bits of Life," in accordance with the reception accorded the plans recently announced by this producer concerning the four-story picture. Communications from exhibitors in all parts of the country received by Mr. Neilan, clearly indicate that his desire to get away from the usual type of motion picture production has the enthusiastic support of the men who show motion pictures to the public.

"Give us something different," has been the cry of the exhibitor for the past two years. It was as a result of this demand that Neilan, who has constantly striven to be abreast of the times with his pictures, has attempted to get away from the accepted type of six or seven real production entirely in "Bits of Life."

Marshall Neilan

"Bits of Life" will be released the early part of next month. That it will create unusual interest in and out of the trade is freely predicted by various motion picture men on the West Coast and in New York who have privately viewed the picture. "Penrod" will then be released at the height of the theatrical season throughout the country.

All the above pictures will be distributed by Associated First National Exhibitors under a special distributing arrangement in which every theatre in the country regardless of affiliation or policy may bid for these productions. It is Mr. Neilan's plan to get the maximum distribution on his product and every exhibitor will be invited to consider these films for his theatre.

"I have received many inquiries recently from exhibitors to the effect that it has been impossible for them to secure my productions for their theatres because my product could only be placed in First National Franchise houses," said Mr. Neilan.

"I wish to state that every exhibitor who may be interested in securing these productions regardless of affiliations or past policies will be given consideration by my sales department. We want maximum bookings and wish to deal with every single exhibitor who is interested in these pictures regardless of politics, policies or affiliations."

In the opinion of Mr. Neilan, Wesley Barry has now reached a point where he is fully capable of handling the "Penrod" role which in itself is a big responsibility insofar as this story is concerned. The popularity of Wesley Barry throughout the country has now also reached a degree where his appearance in this production will greatly enhance the popularity of the story and plan itself, declares a statement from the Neilan office on the Coast.

It is thus believed that the film adaptation of "Penrod" with Wesley Barry, directed personally by Marshall Neilan, whose best work has been this particular type of story, will offer one of the most powerful box-office attractions of the coming season. A national exploitation campaign is now being prepared for this picture which will increase in strength as the release date draws nearer. Various novel exploitation ideas that will re-popularize this story nationally will shortly be executed.

Warren's September Releases

COMPLETING a continent-wide motion picture distributing organization in less than four months, the F. B. Warren Corporation this week through the medium of its trademark comes face to face with the American public and announces for its opening month of September a larger number of releases in four weeks than any company previously formed has ever had before in the history of the motion picture industry, it is asserted.

To Lois Weber's fine production "The Blot" goes the distinction of being one of the early popular national "hits" of the new season as well as the first production to be released through the Warren offices.

The following tabulation of September releases through the F. B. Warren Corporation offices reveals in some measure the ambitious scope of the organization:

September 4th—Lois Weber's production, "The Blot;" Post Pictures' "My Barefoot Boy;" and Drama films' "Moon Gold."

September 11th—George Kleine's "Quo Vadis" revival; and W. H. Clune's "A Bear, A Boy, and a Dog."

September 18th—W. H. Clune-Nell Shipman's "The Girl from God's Country;" and Post Pictures "Ramblers Three."

September 25th—Herz-Sascha's production, "Good and Evil."

In October there will be released one long feature production for each of the five weeks of that month and there will be one and often two short-length supplementary releases for each of the five weeks. Announcement within the next fortnight will be made of all releases of the company to and including the last week in November.

"Our company and the accomplishment of its organization to its present state represents the joint effort of fifty or more men working with a minimum of noise and absolutely without flamboyant promises," says F. B. Warren in commenting upon the organization's progress. "I have never before seen a picture releasing concern start out without extravagant promises to the exhibitors. Ours has done this. Since April we have never said anything to the exhibitors in announcements or advertisements except that we would have sincere, well-made productions by some of the best producing and directing factors of the business.

"Knowing that over-statement has made progress difficult for many companies, we have told the exhibitors that it would be better for them to see our productions than to buy them in advance without seeing them. Many exhibitors took this advice and waited. When they saw our initial productions in the branches they found perhaps better pictures than they expected of us, because so many new organizations have fallen down in the past with their opening releases.

"We have felt right along that there is no place in the picture business for politics. Although we are thoroughly independent of affiliations in any directions we haven't used circus methods to become a ring-leader in the so-called independent movement. We believe that a great many bad pictures are going to be unloaded upon exhibitors under the cloak of independence, and we are not going to find our market outlets through sympathy or begging our way into theatres. If we cannot get in on the merit of product offered and the cleanliness with which we market it then we can get out of the business.

"At the outset of our releasing career we are serving and selling the representative theatres of the country including many owned or dominated by Mr. Zukor and his allies; by the parent members of the First National organization; by the Goldwyn and Marcus Loew organizations; by the Keith interests; and by William Fox.

"Our organization is wide open to receive from any reputable producing or directorial source pictures of value made according to the better standards of the industry."

Lasky Studio Takes on Semblance of Arabia

The Lasky studio has temporarily become Arabia with dancing and harem girls and a mingling of Turks, Semitic types, Armenians, and what not—all for George Melford's production of "The Sheik" for Paramount. Agnes Ayres and Rudolph Valentino are featured.

It has required two stages and a location on the desert to supply the scenic backgrounds for this colorful story. The setting now being used is a seraglio where the Sheik's household gracefully reclines upon cushions and divans while a native orchestra with native instruments furnishes the sinuous music of Arabia.

Selznick's Own O. K. on All Contracts

IN the future all contracts for pictures distributed through Select branches will be personally passed upon by Lewis J. Selznick.

"Mr. Selznick has a wide and thorough understanding of the exhibition field," says the statement that accompanies the announcement from Mr. Selznick's office. "Mr. Selznick also understands distribution better than most men and as he is able to look upon both sides of the subject he has determined to make part of his manifold duties the work of passing on every contract.

"He knows motion picture values as related to various houses in various territories and for that reason there is no one better able to pass judgment on the fairness of contract prices the country over. There will be no overselling or over-charging with Mr. Selznick watching the contracts. Both parties to the contract will get fair treatment and in this way will all interests be protected.

"Mr. Selznick also wishes to become more intimately conversant with the activities and accomplishments of his sales forces."

George D. Baker Renews S-L Contract

George D. Baker, who has completed a series of three comedies starring Gareth Hughes, has signed a contract under which he will make another series of pictures with the same star. Announcement of the new agreement just has been made by S-L (Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin) by whom the productions are being filmed for Metro.

Rare Photography Seen in "Midnight Bell"

"A Midnight Bell" is pointed out by First National as a rare achievement from the photographic angle. This picture, which stars Charles Ray, was photographed by George Rizard.

Much of the action takes place in a haunted church. One of the outstanding features of the production is Mr. Ray's facial monologue while seated alone in the church pew in the dead of night, seeing eerie things and hearing weird and fearful noises. In this scene the star displays great artistry, but he insists that very great credit is due also M. Rizard for picturing his overwrought imaginings with consummate skill.

The tunnel scene is another in which the cameraman was put to the test. To bring into visibility the operations of the band of crooks in this underground passageway called for cooperation between the photographer and the electricians of the Ray staff.

Throngs Flock to View "Quo Vadis" Revival

ON August 28th, "Quo Vadis" was shown at the Savoy theatre, San Francisco, Cal. On the opening day the picture grossed $2,300, and the lobby of the Savoy was crowded from opening until closing time, declares a statement from the headquarters of the F. B. Warren Corp., which is releasing the picture. Following the showing, Jefferson W. Asher wired the Warren home office:

"We opened the Savoy theatre today with "Quo Vadis" and played to continual capacity all day long. Prices up to seventy-five cents. We are jammed with contracts at Strand theatre, so we put 'Quo Vadis' in a closed house for an indefinite run and we tell the world it gets them. Congratulations"

The splendid success attained by the revival of the George Kleine production upon its second premiere before the American public recalls the spectacular triumph of the picture during 1913 when it played as a road attraction throughout the country at one-dollar top and grossed over two million dollars.

Metro Coast Studios Going Full Blast

The pictures now being screened by Metro at its Hollywood studios are: "Lady Fingers," a Bayard Veiller production of Jackson Gregory's story adapted by Lenore Coffee with Bert Lytell as star; "The Fourteenth Lover," a Harry Beaumont production of Alice D. G. Miller's story adapted by Edith Kennedy, starring Viola Dana; the George D. Baker production for S-L (Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin), starring Gareth Hughes; and "The Golden Gift," starring Alice Lake, a Maxwell Karger production of a story by June Mathis and Florence Hein. The picture shortly to be screened is the Rex Ingram production of "Turn to the Right," adapted by June Mathis from the John Golden stage success by Winchell Smith and Jack Hazzard.

"Scrap Iron" Acclaimed in Los Angeles

"Not since 'The Birth of a Nation' has an audience gone into such wild acclaim as during the run of 'Scrap Iron.'" This sentence is from the report of Edward A. Smith, manager of the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, to John McCormick, First National's branch manager in the city of Angeles. The official report confirms also the statements in the Los Angeles newspapers, which declared that this personally-directed Ray feature, in which the star was presented by Arthur S. Kane, created an absolute furor.

aramount to Run Two Page Ad in the Post

FOR the first time, in its issue of September 24, the Saturday Evening Post will carry a double-truck advertisement of a single motion picture production. This picture is Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount special production, "The Affairs of Anatol," and the double-page advertisement carries the announcement that 211 leading theatres in the United States will show the DeMille special the week of the 25th. These houses will be listed in the advertisement.

The idea of a National "'Anatol' Week" was conceived by S. R. Kent, general manager of Paramount's distribution department, who realized the tremendous advertising possibilities in the production with its twelve stars. Accordingly, September 25, the day designated for the release of the picture, was chosen as the date to inaugurate a week's showing in as many theatres as possible.

"Prosperity Is Already Here"

"U" Bases Statement on Reports from Big Centers

"PROSPERITY has already arrived." That is the crux of a statement issued by the Universal headquarters and based on the reports from Universal officials in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, and Atlanta.

Charles Rosenzweig, who has just been appointed general sales manager of the Big U exchange, New York, reports that last week was by far the biggest week the exchange has experienced since it was established nine years ago. After the check-up Saturday night it was found that his salesmen had brought in between seventy-five and eighty thousand dollars of new business. The record week's business before was forty-five thousand. Among the big circuits signed up for Special Attractions were Loews, Fox, Meyer-Snyder, Sydney Cohen, Rachmel & Rinzler and Herring & Blumenthal.

From across the continent in Los Angeles where H. M. Berman, general manager of Universal Exchanges, is conferring with Irving G. Thalberg, comes the same story.

Speaking of "Foolish Wives," Mr. Berman said:

"The picture goes to the screen as Carl Laemmle's greatest achievement and a mile-stone along the highway of motion picture progress. It will smash precedent in that it is both an artistic triumph and a commercial success. Universal has spent exactly $1,256,190.80 to date on this production. Within two years it will have returned a handsome profit on the investment.

"But 'Foolish Wives,' in spite of the huge publicity it has received, is not all they are talking about here. Special Attractions are booking in a way that assures me that the Universal's confidence in the future was not misplaced. Last Spring we did not slow up one moment. Mr. Laemmle tried with might and main to inject his own confidence into others—exhibitors and producers alike. And he took his own medicine. He practised what he preached. The result is that Universal has a wonderful product to offer right now when the exhibitor is most in need of it. I find that our production manager, Mr. Thalberg, with justifiable business sagacity, has been able through the unemployment of many fine players to make our pictures much better in quality without increasing to any great extent the cost per negative foot. I have seen every one of the first five Special Attractions and the same high quality goes all the way through."

From Chicago comes word from I. L. Leserman, manager of the Universal Exchange, that the big circuits of theatres—the Chicago territory, Lubliner & Trinz and Ascher Brothers—had signed contracts for all their theatres for Special Attractions, many of them for full week engagements. "Contracts," according to Mr. Leserman, "are coming in a full month ahead of last year at the same time."

William Oldknow, veteran film man and president of the Consolidated Film Company of Atlanta, with offices all over the South, is now in New York on one of his regular business trips. He is in a more optimistic frame of mind than he has been in the last two years. The Consolidated distributed the Universal product in the South.

"Confidence has returned to the South," said Mr. Oldknow in the Universal offices this week. "You won't know what that means unless you have lived south of the Mason-Dixon Line. But to me and to every southerner it means a barometer. When it goes up we have fair sailing; when it goes down, look out for storms. Cotton has been down. Banks were all loaded up with planters' commitments. Nobody could borrow any money or get credit; nobody had any money and nobody had any confidence. Now cotton has started to go up, point by point. And every point means twenty-five million dollars to the South. The banks can pay the planters for the crop and the planters can pay their obligations. In a word, confidence has returned to the South. I look for a tremendous year of real prosperity."

Fox Specials for Small Towns

THAT exhibitors of other than first-run theatres have been fully taken care of in the plans made for the releasing of the twelve Fox Special Super-features announced for this season is revealed through a reply to numerous inquiries which have been directed to Fox Film Corporation.

The announcement that these pictures, following their runs at Broadway theatres in New York City, will be available "for exhibitors who could give them the extended engagement commensurate with their value" seems to have created an impression amongst some exhibitors of smaller houses that the pictures would be unavailable for them. Such was not the intention of William Fox. His productions are now, as they have ever been in the past, designed for appeal to the great body of moving picture patrons, and this necessitates the broad extension of runs which has ever been the characteristic of the Fox distribution policy.

The Fox Specials naturally would find their way first into the larger houses, which are better equipped to present the pictures in key-cities, and thus to make them for the entire territory. Following their presentation at first-run houses these pictures will, in the natural course, be shown at second-run, third-run and the other theatres in the usual sequence. The big city presentations will serve to make them more valuable for neighborhood and other smaller houses.

Preparations for releasing the specials to small exhibitors and promoting their exploitation in this most important field have been made, it is said, with all the care and thoroughness devoted to the first two stages of the campaign to establish the specials as standard attractions.

The first of the specials to go to exhibitors in the small cities and towns is "Over the Hill," which enjoyed a year's run in New York at Broadway theatres before going to exhibitors in the key cities. This attraction now is known by reputation to every motion picture patron in the country.

Next to go to the smaller exhibitors is a super-special of a strikingly different type, "A Virgin Paradise," written by Hiram Percy Maxim and directed by J. Searle Dawley. It is a spectacular and thrilling story of the jungle and civilized hypocrisy.

"A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," the Mark Twain comedy classic picturized under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn, had a tremendously successful run in London, after running for half a year on Broadway, New York.

"Thunderclap," declared to be the greatest racetrack drama ever staged, was prepared for the screen by Paul H. Sloane and directed by Richard Stanton.

"Shame," a surprise thriller, was written by Emmett J. Flynn and Bernard McConville and directed by Mr. Flynn.

"Perjury," a photo-drama presenting William Farnum in an intensely emotional role, was directed by Harry Millarde.

"Footfalls," from the prize story selected by the O. Henry Committee, presents Tyrone Power in an extraordinary role, with Estelle Taylor in the leading feminine part. It was directed by Charles J. Brabin.

"The Last Trail," from the celebrated novel by Zane Grey, was directed by Emmett J. Flynn.

Reisenfeld to Arrange "U" Presentation

HUGO REISENFELD, director-general of the Rialto, Rivoli, and Criterion theatres, New York, will stage the presentation, September 4, in the Central theatre, 48th Street and Broadway, of Tod Browning's new Universal-Jewel production, "No Woman Knows."

In engaging him especially, Universal has given Mr. Reisenfeld free hand in arranging the presentation, and it is understood that the noted director is going to great lengths to give the picture a musical and picture setting eminently fitting its theme, and in accord with the ideals which has prompted Universal to take over the Central theatre for the presentation of Universal-Jewel productions.

254 Theatres Engage Hughes' Photoplay

Exhibitors are reported to be showing themselves just as eager to book the second of Goldwyn's big Rupert Hughes photoplays, "Dangerous Curve Ahead!", as they are to get early showings of "The Old Nest." The bookings for "Dangerous Curve Ahead!", which will be released three weeks later than "The Old Nest," were within two of the "The Old Nest" bookings, the latter being 256 as against 254 for "Dangerous Curve Ahead!" In many instances the same theatres have booked both pictures for the first week of release.

Oriental Story Based on Actual Experiences

The story for "Dawn of the East," a coming Realart picture with Alice Brady as the star, was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and based on actual experiences of the author who has travelled extensively in the Orient. As a result it is expected that the picture will be a most realistic portrayal of Chinese life and customs. The sequences depicted in the gambling scenes of the picture will be especially striking, it is asserted, being authentic reproductions of the methods and atmosphere of the typical Chinese gambling house. Sam Kim, an actor in the cast, was formerly secretary to the Korean ambassador. Michio Itow, another player, is a Formosan dancer of note.

Marie Prevost Begins New Universal Film

The cast for "The Girl Who Knew All About Men," Marie Prevost's second Universal feature, has been completed and production begun under the direction of King Baggot. Playing opposite Miss Provost is Harry Myers. Percy Challenger, Vernon Snively, Helen Harris, Mrs. Lucretia Harris, R. Henry Grey and George Kuwa are also in the cast. "The Girl Who Knew All About Men" is an original story by Roy Clements.

The inauguration of releasing activities by the new French Paramount organization, Societe Anonyme Francaise Des Films Paramount, the latter part of September is announced this week by E. E. Shauer, manager of the Foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "The Gilded Lily," starring Mae Murray, will be released on October 14. From six to eight feature productions will be released monthly from that date.

The offices of the Paramount organization are located in Paris at Avenue des Champs-Elysees 63, and are in charge of Adolphe Osso. The releasing activities of the organization will be extended to Belgium, Egypt, Turkey and the French colonies. Branch offices will be opened within a short time in those cities which will facilitate the distribution of Paramount productions.

"Winter Tale" Scores at New York Rivoli

The Post Nature Picture, "A Winter's Tale," released by the F. B. Warren Corporation, scored this week at the Rivoli theatre, New York City. "A Winter's Tale" is a one-reel scenic in which an interesting little story is unfolded.

Dr. Reisenfeld has booked this entire series from the Warren Corporation, and a Post Nature picture will show every week at one of his three Broadway theatres, it is announced by the Warren organization.

E. J. Doolittle Assistant to Lewis J. Selznick

E. J. DOOLITTLE, who has been connected with the Selznick Corp. for some time in various capacities, has just been elevated to the position of assistant to President Lewis J. Selznick. He has already entered upon his new duties.

Mr. Doolittle's earliest work for the Selznick company had to do principally with the spectacular outdoor advertising campaign which told the general public that "Selznick Pictures Create Happy Hours;" "At Theatres Where Quality Rules," a year or two ago. More recently Mr. Doolittle has been active in the business management of Selznick News, and has served as business manager of the Selznick scenario department.

"On Their Way" Title of Boland Comedy

"On Their Way," the forthcoming Hal Roach comedy featuring Eddie Boland, is scheduled by Pathe for release during the week of September 11. Boland is assisted in this offering by Ethel Broadhurst and most of the Hal Roach comedy staff.

The story depicts the tribulations of a young couple who go on their vacation in a second-hand automobile, loaded down with a portable camping outfit.

Views of Ill-Fated Air Ship in Pathe News

Type of production.....2 reel western

This is one of the series starring Tom Santschi, and like the foregoing numbers of the series, it possesses several noticeably good points, which make these highly desirable offerings of this type. The production as a whole shows an unusually finished appearance for a short feature. The locations are admirably chosen, the piece is very well acted, and the photography, at most times, is exceptionally good.

"THE DESERT WOLF"—Pathe

Type of Production.....2 reel western

Tom Santschi is the star of this one, which, like most of the previous numbers of the series, is a first rate picture of its kind. The story is very well and smoothly told, the action fast and coherent, and the whole thing presents a very finished appearance. Fine locations have been secured for every shot and they bring out some exceptional western scenery. The photography too, is noticeably good.

"THE SHERIFF OF MOJAVE"—Pathe

Type of Production.....2 reel western

This is a Tom Santschi short feature, and is is characterized to a great extent by the same finished appearance, and the same capable handling of the story both by director and actors which have made all the numbers of this series first rate offerings from an artistic as well as an entertainment standpoint. The exterior settings are all fine westerns, the interiors are good, and the photography is better than average. Santschi has his usual kind of part, this time that of a square dealing sheriff who adopts the daughter of an outlaw whom he thinks dead. Later the outlaw appears, after ten years, and the sheriff is up against a problem. There is plenty of excitement in a couple of gun fights, and finally the outlaw is killed, thus solving the sheriff's problem for him. Where westerns are popular, this one will go well, and if you use short features at all, this one will be a good bet.

By Hunt Stromberg

THIS is obviously the age of discretion.

The day is "gone but not forgotten" when exhibitors and the public will countenance the story inspired by an individual's self-mooted fancy or personal "liking," with its practical mass appeal undermined for the sake of some such individual opinion.

Likewise is gone the day of the story purchased from a stage or book rendition at an enormous figure simply because the piece struck the big Broadway, and some other Broadways, for a goal, when Main Street and Lover's Lane were calmly nestled in a comfortable motion picture theatre enjoying an original story made-to-order for the high class entertainment of the general populace, which would include almost every type and class of cinema patron.

It is altogether reasonable to give credence to prevailing opinion which holds that it is extraordinarily difficult, if not improbable, to actually know in advance of story-production whether or not the preferred manuscript will meet with popular public success. Because motion picture production is an art, rather than a science, the element of the "gamble" defined in terms of the "well, it looks good and ought to make good" attitude enters the minds of many individuals on the "inside" of the industry, and many more on the "outside."

There is, however, a certain modus operandi of research work which minimizes the "chance element' almost to a scientific certainty. But in the rush and hum of average production, and the persistent presence of the please-the-boss-rather-than-the-public brigade, this modern insight into the Practical, rather than the Theoretical, is ofttimes smothered, or completely lost, for the much-abused "personal opinion" or "personal fancy" regarding a scenario outweighs the more important method of decision based upon positive facts and figures, commercially speaking, and public inclinations and preferences, artistically valued.

Men with experience in phases of the picture business other than the single production field know the relative attendance of the average motion picture theatre as compiled in the percentage of sex. The proportion of men, women and children in average attendance is a matter of established statistics. Varying territories commercially classified as "sales zones" also have their particular preferences regarding star and story, or the all-star-director "special."

In one territory, a certain personality of star, or a certain type of characterization and its resultant story, will prove sensationally successful, while this same star and story in other vicinities will fall short. The same reasonings hold true for the stories employed for the all-star-director combinations. The whys and wherefores of such conditions is explained in the simple term "mob psychology," an intricate art of understanding, the grasp of which comes first by instinct, later by a careful study of the market-status of the industry, and upon which rests the success or failure of most any theatrical enterprise.

For the mentality which grasps the fundamentals of showmanship as governed by box-office statistics, and public "trend of favoritism" which is solved by the process of elimination, and the law of averages, has the advantage over the theoretical minds which permit the final word to rest with viewpoints measured by private beliefs and opinions, rather than by the majority viewpoint of the majority public.

The production and release of "periodical" pictures seems to clarify the atmosphere as regards the extent of "mob psychology" and trend of opinion. As the public thinks, so the public buys! During the war, the public mind was aglow with the excitement and glamour of battle. War pictures flourished. The very sight of a Big Bertha, or the waving of a flag, or the pantomime of a brass band in action, literally "brought down the house." When the war ended, the war pictures also succumbed. The public had talked, thought, and seen war until it became monotonous.

Other forms of "periodical" pictures, came into favor. As soon as their success was spotted, along came a flock of similar productions, their theme almost identical, their characterizations similar, their plots more or less the same, with a different climax of some kind to distinguish them. They were "playing" to a trend of public thought that was uppermost. They were a credit to the industry, and should the majority still continue to think and buy along periodical lines, these "timely subjects" would continue to flourish.

Doris May

This is one form of theme and story, however, which continues to hold the attention and favor of the great majority. Exhibitors know it. The critics admit it. The public DOES it! We refer to the theme which spreads sunshine and happiness and draws the patronage because of its influence for diversion that truly relaxes; enjoyment that wholeheartedly satisfies.

It is upon such themes and stories that the element of "risk" is reduced to a minimum, for the recapitalization of "mob psychology" tabulated in commercial or artistic terms proves beyond question of doubt that the majority of the public, forever in quest of that which inspires, enjoys and lightens the human burdens, will give preference to the modern story which it has reason to believe will provide an evening of smiles, heart interest, and genuine—entertainment!

It is because of these facts and their observance that I wrote "The Foolish Age" as the first story to introduce Doris May as a star in her own right. I believe it to be an ideal play of the inspirations and adventures which might well move any girl "somewhere between 'the foolish age' of sixteen and marriage." As such, it is the very edification of youth and romantic adventure. And youth, with its infinite mysteries, wholesome love of spiritous action and conquests in search of its ideals, stands out among all the human attributes as the fond memory of the past, the spreading rainbow of the present, and the buoyant hope of the future.

Thus the story of "The Foolish Age," though a comedy-drama of cyclonic speed and laughs, becomes all the more universal in its appeal because of the humanness, and logic, which permeates its action. It delves straight into the midst of a modern generation in several stages of its "foolish age" where ignorance is bliss, with the sunny side of life holding merry sway.

With the irresistible personality of Doris May as the star of a splendid cast, augmented by the superb direction and production which has been given the story, it should prove sensationally successful for exhibitors, for it is geared to an audience that is—universal.

EXHIBITORS AND PRESS WIRE STROMBERG

MESSAGES of congratulation and felicitation upon the formation of the Hunt Stromberg Productions, to star Doris May in features presented and released by R-C Pictures Corporation, have been wired to Hunt Stromberg from exhibitors, photoplay editors and dramatic critics throughout the country, according to advices at that plant.

The consensus of exhibitor and press messages are declared to indicate a sweeping endorsement of the elevation of the popular Miss May to stardom in her own right, with the "Glad Hand" of felicitations extended Mr. Stromberg on his graduation from the advertising-exploitation field into the productional ranks.

"Fan" letters of the "I-told-you-so" variety also are reaching the Robertson-Cole Studios in Hollywood. In Seattle, Washington, Miss May's "own home town," a May-Booster-Club has been formed to tell the world that Doris May is now an individual "twinkler."

DORIS MAY in "The FOOLISH AGE"

THIS is no time for idle words!

Action off the screen and action on the screen is what counts with the Exhibitors of Today!

My first production, starring Doris May in "The Foolish Age," shall serve as spokesman on the standards which contact with exhibitors and the public have instigated on behalf of the Practical, and not the Theoretical, in the motion picture art.

The Verdict is with you, the Exhibitor—and the ACTION you shall behold off and on the screen!

HEARTY thanks and appreciation to Exhibitors and the Press for the many letters and wires of felicitation.

A HUNT STROMBERG PRODUCTION

"The Foolish Age" Ideal for Doris May

By G. E. Forte

A STORY of zip and sparkle, filled with irrepressible joy of youth, is Doris May's first picture, "The Foolish Age," the first Hunt Stromberg production, which is being released under the R-C banner. Mr. Stromberg searched high and low for the type of story he had in mind for Miss May's initial appearance as a star in her own right, and, failing to find just what he wanted, called his staff together and concocted one on the spot. With producer, director, continuity writer, and star in close co-operation, the results have been what might readily be expected—a swift-moving satirical comedy-drama, filled with unique situations, with every opportunity for Miss May to display her winsome charm and vivacity to best advantage.

"The Foolish Age" is the story of a sweet girl graduate who tries to apply academic ideals to everyday life and who gets a terrible jolt when faced with the actualities of modern civilization. Margy Carr, played by Miss May, has had her little head crammed full of Utopian ideals by the faculty of a very select finishing school, and has made up her mind to go into the slums and teach them how to eat oysters with the proper fork, casually prattle the latest post-Freudian theory over a cup of Orange Pekoe, and tell at a glance the difference between the way they fox-trot in Our Set and the way they fox-trot in Yours. She meets a gang of the hardest gun-men in New York, and straightway sets to work on her task of making square pegs fit into round holes, even going as far as to introduce them into the smart uptown set peopled by her best friends. Her father naturally objects, so does her fiance, temporarily shelved until Margy can accomplish the complete uplifting of her gang of gun-men. But all arguments prove fruitless. Margy is a young lady with decided view-points, and her father realizes that the only way she will ever learn is by experience. Her experiences form the basis of the story, which has been treated from an angle new to pictures. It is social satire at its best, and the entire Stromberg unit, as well as the Robertson-Cole executives, are enthusiastic over the production, which is scheduled for nation-wide release October 16. Violet Clark and William Seiter made the adaptation from Hunt Stromberg's original story, with Mr. Stromberg also assisting on the preparation of the continuity.

Superb production has been given "The Foolish Age," the entire staff and facilities of the big Robertson-Cole Studios in Hollywood combining for the definite achievement of something "new" and "different" in modern comedy-drama and its presentation upon the screen.

The settings, designed by Art Director William Haywood, are distinguished for their faithful depiction of the present-day art in set construction and decoration. Of particular beauty and appeal is the big drawing-room set within the mansion of the heroine of the story, Marguerite Carr.

In contrast to the sets laid amid the "upper four hundred" are the sets and locations of the "underworld." Realism with perfection in arrangement and detail are keynotes of the mechanical and artistic construction of the picture.

Seiter a Specialist in Comedy-Drama

JUST as some actors achieve fame for their deliniation of certain types, so has William A. Seiter, well-known director, won a name for himself as one of the most versatile and brilliant of the farce-comedy craftsmen.

In his direction of "The Foolish Age," Doris May's first Hunt Stromberg Production for R-C Pictures Corporation, Seiter has brought to bear all the knowledge of comedy value and human interest which distinguished his direction of the Parsons comedies, the Carter De Haven comedies and, more recently, of Douglas MacLean's "Passing Thru" and Bellboy 13."

An interesting phase of the standards and systems employed by the young director is seen in an interview given in Los Angeles to a representative of The Motion Picture News.

"Our most successful 'gags' and situations are bred from incidents and little oddities which occur in real life," says Seiter. "The main job is to be constantly on the alert for the humorous things which can be polished and developed into fine situations for the screen.

"In our homes, at the dining tables, on the streets, in business offices—everywhere, in fact—people will say and do little things which 'get a laugh.' These sort of incidents are natural and genuine, so they draw mirth of their own unconscious accord, without forcing matters.

"It is just such incidents which are 'natural and genuine' that combine to make the truly successful screen play. In our present picture, 'The Foolish Age,' I had a deuce of a time deciding just which situations should be retained or discarded. The possibilities were so rich and many that it was quite a responsibility to choose the situation or piece of business which we believed would 'get over' with the average playgoer.

"Then, again, exaggeration is one of the most frequent evils in the production of comedies. We become enthusiastic, enraptured in a frame of thought that will 'laugh at most anything,' with the inclination to carry it too far, thus resulting in a crudity or a vulgarity, which will offend the public.

"Keeping the characters 'down to earth' and making them be funny because they are serious is the keynote of the whole comedy art. For this reason, among many obvious others, we must know life as it is, and through continual study of mannerisms and little human characteristics, be able to comprehend, and distinguish, between the real and the exaggerated form of action."

Seiter is regarded as a keen student of human nature. One of his pet hobbies is to steal away in his automobile, hit the trail for Broadway (Los Angeles), park on one of the most congested streets, and there, at the curb, watch—and study—the mass of humanity as it treads the highway. He believes in practical education and experience for the successful motion picture career, never failing to devote at least four evenings a week to the rounds of the local theatres for an analysis of the market's offerings.

His present position of prominence in the industry is the reward of years of indefatigable work and study, during which preliminary efforts he has served in almost every capacity identified with the production art. His abilities as a film cutter and editor, and his knowledge of photography, set construction, decoration, etc., are well known to the trade.

Whos Who in Hunt Stromberg Productions

Hunt Stromberg

HUNT STROMBERG, whose entrance into the production field is signalized by the formation of Hunt Stromberg Productions, to star Doris May in comedy-dramas for release by R-C Pictures Corporation, is a former newspaperman and special writer. He entered the motion picture industry with the organization of the Goldwyn Company, in the capacity of Service Manager, with activities also extending into special sales and advertising work. He later was appointed Director of Exploitation and Service for Goldwyn, personally creating and conducting many of its successful national campaigns.

He resigned at Goldwyn to accept the office of Director of Advertising, Publicity and Exploitation for Selznick, for which concern he inaugurated a complete national exploitation system, incidentally creating and conducting what many still claim as the prize exploitation event of picture history—the Elsie Janis-telegram-of-welcome drive for the return from Europe of General Pershing, a nationally recognized and endorsed plan-of-greeting which brought hundreds of thousands of telegrams, preceded by unprecedented newspaper editorial comment, to Miss Janis for relay to the homecoming General.

Then came a call from Thomas H. Ince, which engaged Mr. Stromberg's attention to the coveted land and goal—"Los Angeles and Production." As Director of all exploitation and promotion for Thomas H. Ince as an individual and for his Associated Producers' productions, his services and activities extended into the innermost circles of production and its allied fields. During his two years association with the noted producer, Mr. Stromberg was responsible for many national promotional campaigns, chief among which was his own creation, direction and exploitation of a three-reel production, "A Trip Thru The Ince Studios," which proved to be a sensation at the time of its nation-wide release and subsequent exhibition in more than 4,000 theatres of the United States and Canada.

William A. Seiter

WILLIAM A. SEITER, associated with Hunt Stromberg as the director of the Doris May series, is generally conceded to hold rank as the leading comedy-drama director lending his talents to the screen.

Entering the industry following an early education at the Hudson Military Academy, augmented by a special course in dramatic art, he began his theatrical career as a featured actor in stock companies of Universal, Reliance-Majestic, and the old Selig Company.

With the organization of the National Film Corporation, he was given the directorial reins for the comedies starring "Smiling Bill" Parsons. With the advent into pictures of Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven, he skipped over to the DeHaven "lot" directing and supervising, writing originals and continuities, for all the DeHaven successes.

Fired with an ambition to direct one dramatic feature, at least, he took the megaphone for the direction of "The Kentucky Colonel," a recent release which has proved its merits at the box-office.

Doris May

His desire for 'dramatics" fulfilled, the return of the "comedy bug" overtook the young craftsman, so he progressed to the Thomas H. Ince studios to assume direction for the Douglas MacLean-Paramount productions. "Passing Thru" and "Bellboy 13," two of MacLean's most successful pictures, which were made under the direction of Seiter.

Mr. Seiter's genius for comedy and its "gags" and "business" is said to be amply demonstrated in the splendid direction of "The Foolish Age."

Doris May

DORIS MAY was born in Seattle, Washington, October 15, 1903. At the age of seven years, having manifested an early artistic strain, she was beyond her class in elocution, according to Professor Knox, of the Puget Sound University. At the tender age of nine she was selected as piano accompanist for Kubelik, upon the occasion of his public concerts at San Francisco. At twelve, she was chosen to lead hundreds of juveniles in a series of folk dances for the opening of the San Diego exposition.

Two years later, upon deciding on a career in motion pictures, she was elevated from the "extra" ranks by Thomas H. Ince, and given leads opposite Charles Ray. Following leads with Ray in "His Mother's Boy," "Hayfoot, Strawfoot," "The Law of the North," "The Girl Dodger" and others, Ince elevated Miss May to the feminine side of the success-overnight team, Douglas MacLean and Doris May.

In this combination, Miss May firmly established herself in the esteem and favor of the public. According to exhibitors and critics, she was possessed of a personalty and histrionic art unlike anything before the public. Her first appearance in the co-star team was as the vivacious General's Daughter in "23½ Hours' Leave." Following this triumph, she appeared as co-star in "What's Your Husband Doing?" "Let's Be Fashionable," "Mary's Ankle" and others.

At the expiration of her contract with Thomas H. Ince, she enjoyed a short vacation, then returned to the spotlight as the featured personality in "The Bronze Bell" and "Foolish Matrons," in which latter production she achieved a remarkable personal success.

Following a careful survey and investigation among representative exhibitors in all sections, the opinion was unanimous that in the unique personality and capabilities of Miss May the screen was endowed with an attraction of extraordinary drawing power, with elevation to stardom in her own right won squarely on merit. Photoplay editors and dramatic critics on the nation's leading newspapers and magazines also lauded the idea of Miss May's individual stardom, many of the most influential critics claiming that "dainty Doris," as she is intimately known, would sweep the field in modern comedy-drama, giving her talents and charm their deserved scope.

Under the productional policy assumed for the Doris May series of features, originals, or book or stage adaptations will be employed as vehicles, with the dominant policy calling for wholesomeness and cleanliness in pictures that will radiate sunshine and happiness through force of their star individualism and story-production value.

Bert Cann

Reports from the Robertson-Cole Studios credit Bert Cann, veteran cinematographer, with having surpassed any of his previous efforts in the photography of Doris May's premiere starring attraction, "The Foolish Age," a Hunt Stromberg Production presented and released by R-C Pictures Corporation.

Favorably known throughout the industry as a former cameraman on the Thomas H. Ince staff, Cann's contribution to the productional qualities of "The Foolish Age" is said to include a number of innovational "surprise" shots made with a special lens which forms part of the equipment on a new Bell and Howell which was pressed into service for the first time for "The Foolish Age."

The exterior scenes of a girls' finishing school during the course of its graduation exercises are described as models of artistic composition, the scene being opened very effectively with a longshot panoram photographed through a specially arranged arch of trees. Other beautiful location views add to the scenic value of the picture.

The interior photography boasts the customary Bert Cann finesse and clarity, with special lighting effects announced for several of the novelty scenes.

Prior to joining the staff of the Hunt Stromberg Productions, Cann was in personal charge of the photography for every picture co-starring Douglas MacLean and Doris May. He later photographed the McLean individual releases. In point of service and studio contact, Cann is one of the oldest men behind the camera.

He is the author of several treatises on artistic lighting ond composition for the photo-dramatic art.

Current Paramount Issues

"The Hell Diggers" and "The Great Moment" Set for Sept. 4th Release

PARAMOUNT will open the season of 1921-22 with the release on September 4 of Wallace Reid in "The Hell Diggers" and Gloria Swanson in "The Great Moment."

Byron Morgan, who wrote the series of automobile stories in which Wallace Reid has appeared so successfully for Paramount, is the author of "The Hell Diggers." This, however, is not a tale of racing motor cars but deals with a subject new to the screen—the giant gold dredgers in the gold fields of California. Mr. Reid is a sturdy dredgeman in the story and when he falls in love and runs counter to the interests of his unscrupulous employers, things begin to happen.

Lois Wilson, who had the leading feminine role in "What's Your Hurry?" is again Mr. Reid's leading woman. The part of John Wade, leader of the farmer faction, is played by Alexander Broun, a veteran actor with a new name. He is none other than Richard Bennett for years famous on the stage and seen a year ago in Eugene O'Neil's play, "Beyond the Horizon." Frank Urson, formerly assistant to Cecil B. DeMille, directed the picture.

"The Great Moment," Gloria Swanson's first starring picture for Paramount, has already in numerous pre-release showings as one of the big-box-office attractions of the year, and recently concluded a run of three successive weeks at the New York Rivoli and Rialto. The story was written especially for Miss Swanson by Elinor Glyn. It was adapted by Monte M. Katterjohn and direced by Sam Wood.

Milton Sills is Miss Swanson's leading man, and Alec B. Francis, F. R. Butler, Arthur Hull, Raymond Brathwayt, Clarence Geldhart, Helen Dunbar and Julia Faye are among those who have prominent roles.

R-C's Units Busy on Coast

"Ma'mselle Jo" and "The Lure of Jade" Progressing Satisfactorily

PRODUCTION is progressing rapidly at the R-C Pictures Corporation studios at Hollywood, L. J. Gasnier and his company filming "Ma'mselle Jo," from the novel by Harriet Comstock, are on location at Lake Tahoe in the most beautiful part of the State of California.

R. J. Tobin, in charge of production on the West Coast, reports that Gasnier is highly pleased with the continuity of "Ma'mselle Jo" and predicts it will be his best picture since "Kismet." The cast, assembled with an eye to the fitness of the players to the parts they interpret, will be as follows:

Pauline Starke, Tully Marshall, George Seigmann, Rose Dione, Ruth King, Jack Mower, James O'Barrows, George M'Daniels, Jack Livingston and Lillian Rambeau, mother of Marjorie Rambeau.

Work on Pauline Frederick's next R-C production also is moving ahead according to schedule. It will be called "The Lure of Jade." Thirty-two scenes were taken at the beautiful Coronado Hotel at Coronado Beach, Sam Diego, including the balcony, gardens, dining room, lobby, veranda and tea rooms.

Marguerite de La Motte Signed for Long Term

J. L. FROTHINGHAM has announced the conclusion of negotiations whereby Marguerite De La Motte will work under his direction for a long period of time. The work which Miss De La Motte has done in a production which Mr. Frothingham has produced for distribution by Associated Producers, Inc., is given as the reason for the contract which will make her available for productions released by this distributing organization.

Miss De La Motte began her services with Mr. Frothingham on the production of "The Ten Dollar Raise," his initial Associated Producers' release. Her work in the ingenue role of this picture was so satisfactory and promising that Mr. Frothingham selected her for the leading feminine in "The Daughter of Brahma" on which she is now working, and which will be his third release through Associated Producers.

New Subject Started by Murphy Walker-Team

Edna Murphy and Johnnie Walker, co-stars for Fox, have begun a new picture under the temporary title of "Buddies," at the Western studio. George E. Marshall wrote the story.

May McAvoy in Ideal Role

Proves Herself One of America's Most Gifted Players, Says Realart

A STATEMENT from the Realart home-office declares that May McAvoy in her first starring production for Realart, entitled "Everything for Sale," gives added evidence of being "one of America's most gifted young actresses."

The story was specially written for Miss McAvoy by Hector Turnbull, who also supervised its direction by Frank O'Connor. This is Mr. O'Connor's premier for Realart. He has been singularly successful in bringing out all the drama in Turnbull's story it is declared.

The title, "Everything for Sale" is regarded by Realart as a particularly good box-office asset, lending itself as it does to effective exploitation. It refers to a character in the story, Lee Morton, a wealthy idler, who regards everything in life as being purchasable, even a woman's love.

Realart has surrounded Miss McAvoy with an exceptionally strong cast in this her first picture for the coming season, containing such well-known players as Kathlyn Williams, Eddie Sutherland, Edwin Stevens, Richard Tucker, Betty Schade, Dana Todd and Jane Keckley.

Fred. J. Robinson assisted O'Connor in the direction, the photography being that of Hal Rosson.

Equally strong dramatic stories are contemplated for future McAvoy productions among them being "A Virginia Courtship," "Too Much Wife" and "The Happy Ending." It is announced that Wm. D. Taylor will direct one of Miss McAvoy's coming pictures.

Two Big Stories Bought for Miss Du Pont

Irving G. Thalberg, general manager at Universal City, has just purchased two big stories for Miss Du Pont's coming starring vehicle.

The first of these will be "Ropes," to be filmed from the one-act play by Wilbur Daniel Steele, which created such a sensation when it was published in Harper's Magazine. The second story scheduled for her use is "You Can't Live on Love," a clever original comedy drama by John B. Clymer. Wallace Clifton has been assigned to write the continuity.

"Cup of Life" Completed

Initial Showing at Pasadena House Said to Have Registered Great Hit

"THE CUP OF LIFE," Thomas H. Ince's latest special for Associated Producers release, was this week completed to the last detail and laboratory work begun on the prints in order that they may be in Associated Producers exchanges a fortnight prior to the release date.

"The Cup of Life" was offered at the Jensen's New Raymond Theatre, Pasadena, in addition to a regular evening program and without advance notice or advertisements in order that it might be put to the best of criticism by an average American audience. The results exceeded the most optimistic expectations of Thomas H. Ince as well as the members of his studio staff and the trade who were present declares a statement from Associated Producers. The powerful suspense of the drama is reported to have held the interest of a packed house from beginning to end while Hobart Bosworth's intense and human character portrayal of "Bully Brand" and Madge Bellamy's striking beauty made a distinct impression, it is stated.

Gauged by the impression created by its first public presentation, critics declare that "The Cup of Life" should prove to be one of the outstanding Ince features of many months, not forgetting the notable box-office success scored by "Lying Lips" and the more recent "Mother O' Mine."

A series of striking still photographs of unusual scenes of the drama are to be published by newspaper rotogravure sections in many key cities while other photographic and news features have been widely distributed to appear coincidental with the release date of the production.

"The Cup of Life" features an all-star cast including Hobart Bosworth, Madge Bellamy, Tully Marshall, Niles Welch and others. Roland V. Lee directed, under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince with J. O. Taylor at the camera. The original story by Carey Wilson, was adapted to the screen by Joseph Franklin Poland.

New Subject for Pyramid

Anthony Paul Kelly Story Will Be Filmed for Release at Early Date

WALTER E. GREENE, president of Pyramid Pictures, Inc., has announced that the first picture to be produced by Pyramid for early release will be "My Old Kentucky Home," an original story from the pen of Anthony Paul Kelly.

After the contract was signed, giving Pyramid the right to screen Kelly's latest, Ray C. Smallwood, who will be in charge of the first producing unit for Pyramid and his assistant George A. McGuire, conferred with Mr. Kelly so that work can be started at once. Mr. Greene announced that an all star cast would be employed to play Kelly's characters as moulded in "My Old Kentucky Home." Kelly is considered one of the screen's most successful authors.

In securing Mr. Kelly to write an original story Pyramid is keeping its faith with exhibitors with their promise to give only the best. The title "My Old Kentucky Home" and the commercial value of the name of Mr. Kelly linked as its author, and further commercialized by the standard of the motion pictures produced by Ray C. Smallwood in the past, is positive insurance that the first picture given by Pyramid to the trade world must be a commercial and artistic success.

In speaking of "My Old Kentucky Home," Kelly said, "I am glad to be in a position to work hand in hand with Mr. Greene and Mr. Ray C. Smallwood. They are men who know their business. The story itself is a human document of thrills, action and love. I am certain that Pyramid will have in it a super feature that will be a great financial and artistic success."

In addition to writing this original story, Mr. Kelly has been signed by Pyramid to prepare the story for the screen. In this manner he will be in constant touch with Mr. Smallwood and will materially assist him to make for Pyramid a bigger and better product.

"Chic" Sales in four of the roles he will take in "His Nibs" to be released by Exceptional Pictures

"Chic" Sale Picture Finished

Second Production of Exceptional Co. is Named "His Nibs"

ALEXANDER BEYFUSS, vice president and general manager of Exceptional Pictures Corporation recently announced the completion of the second Exceptional Picture the title of which is now announced as being "His Nibs." This production, said to be a distinct departure from the accepted construction of the photoplay, stars Charles "Chic" Sale, one of the best known character actors on the American stage today, and conceded by many as the foremost exponent of rural character portrayal.

This is the first intimation given the trade that the title "His Nibs" applied to the second Exceptional Picture, it having been withheld in the first announcement of this new producing organization, because of a "teaser" campaign which was being run in one of the motion picture trade journals.

Chic Sale plays seven different characters in this novel feature offering, ranging from youth to old age, and so fine a delineation is there in each of these characters, that each one of the seven people he portrays (male and female) stands out as a distinct accomplishment.

In the development of the play, the introduction of the various parts is so logically carried out, and the theme into which they are woven is so novel, that the first public showing of "His Nibs" appears destined to create a new motion picture star literally overnight.

In the story, "His Nibs," played by Mr. Sale, is Theo Bender, owner, manager and operator of a motion picture "palace" in a rural community, and the action of the play permits this lovable old man to delve into the worries of exploiting a theatre, the cutting, editing and titling of "movies," and the making of pictures, in a manner to bring the humor of these situations straight home to the public. The methods of this quaint old man, "His Nibs," are so novel and yet so obvious that the most hardened film technician and the newest picture patron will alike grasp his unique humor, each from his own angle.

As an example, "His Nibs," in editing certain of the action of the play, does it simply by eliminating such parts as have possibly appeared in other films, for instance the hero going to the city in the train, and tells his audience, through the booth window, that he did not think it necessary to show those scenes because they have seen others like it before. His methods of titling are just as novel.

It is evident that unusual thought and technical consideration has been given to this second Exceptional Picture; in fact, the conception and working out of the theme, together with the building of the production, has taken in all practically eight months. The idea is fundamentally to be credited to Mr. Sale himself, Arthur Hoerl, being associated with him in the careful planning of each scene and sequence and in the final conception of "His Nibs" as it will be presented to the public.

Alexander Beyfuss, when disclosing the title "His Nibs," stated that he expected to announce within the very near future, the booking of this film into one of the big New York theatres, where it would immediately demonstrate a real box-office value similar to the manner in which the first exceptional picture, Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures" was introduced to the public at the Capitol Theatre, New York.

The fact that Charles "Chic" Sale, is one of the best known actors on the American stage today, having toured the entire country for a number of years, as well as having appeared in several New York successes, assures his first motion picture offering of the unqualified endorsement of the exhibition through the country, and it will earn this approval by its unique merits as a money-making and unusual attraction.

Wm. Mong to Do Script for Frothingham

William V. Mong, who has gained such an enviable reputation as a character actor in productions during the past few years that his writing ability has almost been forgotten, has been selected by J. L. Frothingham to prepare the scenario and continuity on "The Daughter of Brahma," which he has selected for his third production to be released by the Associated Producers, Inc.

256 Big Houses Book "The Old Nest"

The first of the Goldwyn big fifth year productions whose release is to be preceded by an unprecedented national advertising campaign in the big-circulation magazines, "The Old Nest" had been booked in 256 of the country's leading motion picture theatres up to August 15. Additional bookings are being received daily at Goldwyn headquarters. The picture will be released September 11th.

The majority of the bookings are for one week's showing of "The Old Nest"; some are for from two to four weeks.

Beyfuss Announces Policy

His Company Will Only Produce and Will Make "No Glowing Promises"

ALEXANDER BEYFUSS, vice president and general manager of Exceptional Pictures Corporation, in a statement issued this week announces the policy of this new organization.

"Exceptional's policy is a very simple one—direct and to the point," Beyfuss stated. "Our business will be to produce pictures and we will not enter the distribution field because it is felt that there are at present a sufficient number of capable distributing organizations to handle all the product which is necessary for the exhibitors of the United States.

"Realizing, however, that there is and always shall be a great demand for exceptional, worth-while pictures all our efforts, resources and the experience of our organization shall be lent to the building of product such as we feel is desired by the exhibitors of the country.

"Exceptional is confident that its output shall be ably handled in distribution and will not become associated with this branch of the industry except in the event that its product is not presented to the theatre in a manner in which it is the exhibitors' right to expect.

"In deciding upon a policy of production only, we intend to follow this through along lines which deviate somewhat from the general practice, that is, we will make no glowing promises of the pictures we expect to make. Work will have been definitely begun or even completed and arrangements for a demonstration of its box-office value will have been made, before we shall feel justified in announcing our efforts to the trade. Then, and only then, in our opinion, shall any statement be worth-while or of value to the industry.

"Our initial steps have followed out this policy: two productions were completed and ready for the market before a statement of any nature whatsoever was made in connection with them. Furthermore, the first Exceptional Picture, Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures," without even the aid of distribution affiliations was booked in the world's largest theatre, the Capitol, New York, where it shall first demonstrate its value before distributing arrangements are made.

"And in continuing we prefer that each succeeding offering be an agency in the formulating by the industry of the definite opinion and approval of Exceptional Pictures and the Exceptional organization.

Trade Showing of Serials

N. Y. Exhibitors Throng to See Pathe Serial "Hurricane Hutch"

EXHIBITORS and their friends, of New York and New Jersey filled the Town Hall, on West 43rd Street, New York City, almost to capacity at the special showing of the new Pathe super-serial, "Hurricane Hutch," produced by George B. Seitz, and starring Charles Hutchinson, Pathe's famous "stunt man." The first few episodes of the chapter play were shown.

The showing was arranged and held under the direction of William E. Raynor, Branch Manager of the Pathe Exchange in New York City, and a suitable musical setting was especially arranged for the presentation. Before the serial episodes were screened Victor M. Shapiro, Pathe's Exploitation Manager, made a short address, explaining the exploitation possibilities for the serial. Mr. Shapiro pointed out the fact that "thrills were a tonic for human nature," and that George B. Seitz had demonstrated his ability as a "thrill doctor." He also called the exhibitors' attention to the fact that the serial is "censor proof," inasmuch as there is nothing in the chapter play to be disapproved by the most severe censor.

Preliminary to the showing of the serial, the latest animated cartoon of the "Aesop's Film Fables" was thrown on the silver sheet, followed by "Netting the Leopard," the first of the new series of animal short subjects showing the exploits of Major Jack Allen, the celebrated big game hunter. After the presentation of "Hurricane Hutch," the latest Harold Lloyd comedy, "I Do," closed the bill.

"Fauntleroy" Issued Soon

Mary Pickford's Latest Picture Most Costly Film Star Has Made

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY is now ready to make his bow on the screen. The last scene for Mary Pickford's film version of Frances Hodgson Burnett's universally loved story was taken a week ago, and Jack Pickford and Alfred E. Green, who were the directors of this feature, brought the finished picture to the United Artists office early this week.

The United Artists announces that "Little Lord Fauntleroy" will be released in the near future. Practically all first run contracts have already been closed and the present high pressure of business seems to indicate, according to Hiram Abrams, that a Fauntleroy stampede is on amongst exhibitors.

It is claimed by the United Artists that "Little Lord Fauntleroy" will go down on record as being the greatest heart story ever told. Its appeal will reach young and old alike, it is declared, as pathos and comedy are interwoven throughout.

Mary Pickford has probably never done a photoplay in which so little location work was required as in "Little Lord Fauntleroy." With the exception of a trip to Burlingame, Cal., where the castle exteriors were made, the entire picture was "shot" on the Brunton lot in Los Angeles, which has been the headquarters for the Pickford force for the past three years. This has not meant, however, that "Little Lord Fauntleroy" is an economical picture. On the contrary, it is by far the most expensive cinema undertaking Little Mary has ever attempted, it is declared.

Story Competition Opens

Goldwyn and Chicago News Sponsor Plan; Prizes Aggregate $30,000

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and the Chicago Daily News are sponsoring a motion-picture scenario competition just inaugurated. The contest is now open and will continue for a period of twelve weeks. Prizes aggregating $30,000 are provided for in the competition. Here are the awards as described in a statement from the Goldwyn office in New York:

The first prize, $10,000 in cash, with a splendid production by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; the next ten prizes, $1,000 each; and the next twenty, $500 each.

By an arrangement entered into between the Chicago Daily News and Goldwyn Pictures Corporation the latter has the right, aside from producing the winner of the first prize, to select for production any or all of the other prize-winning scenarios. This must be done within six months of the close of the contest, otherwise the Chicago Daily News can make such disposition as it wishes of the scenarios.

The contestants will receive daily instructions on what a scenario should be, and how it should be prepared, from some of the biggest men in the motion picture industry, including David Wark Griffith, Rupert Hughes, Samuel Goldwyn and Paul Bern.

The merits of the scenarios entered will be passed upon by a committee of five judges, all of them prominent in the motion picture or the literary world. Part of them will be named by the Chicago Daily News, the rest by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

First announcement of the contest was made on Wednesday, August 24, when a three-column advertisement appeared in the New York Times and other newspapers.

Brown Joins M. H. Hoffman

To Handle Publicity for Tiffany Productions and Mae Murray

SOUTHARD BROWN has been engaged by M. H. Hoffman, General Manager of the Tiffany Productions, to take charge of the publicity and advertising department, and at the same time act as assistant to Mr. Hoffman.

Mr. Brown, who is one of the best known publicity men in the independent field, for several years past has been closely connected with Mr. Hoffman.

His fitness for his new duties is fully attested by the remarkable work done while associated with M. H. Hoffman, while the latter was in charge of Pioneer. In addition to handling the publicity work for the Tiffany Productions, Mr. Brown will also act as press representative for Miss Mae Murray.

As is well known, the productions with which Miss Murray will make her bow to the American public in the double role of star and producer, are by far the most ambitious in which she has ever appeared.

The first task confronting Mr. Brown is the exploitation of Miss Murray's latest production "Peacock Alley."

"Molly O" Unfolds Intensley Dramatic Story

THE synopsis of "Molly O" Mack Sennett's production featuring Mabel Normand follows:

Molly O, daughter in a family which ekes out a precarious existence through cleaning jobs done by the father and washing done by the mother, starts the ball rolling by pasting her own photograph over a question mark used by a sensational newspaper to indicate the young woman rumored to be engaged to the very wealthy, handsome and likable Dr. John Spencer Bryant. She studies the photograph of the doctor to such extent that later when she sees him making a call, feels almost as if she knows him, and tries to attract his attention. He smiles at her amusedly.

A neighbor's baby falls ill and Molly O calls Dr. Bryant. He gives her a lift in his automobile to her home and the ride starts trouble for both of them. Molly O's father sees them and roundly upbraids her on the grounds that association with a swell like that doctor can bring no good to his daughter. He brings up the matter of marriage to his assistant.

The doctor encounters his trouble when Molly O's mother selects the newspaper on which she has pasted her photograph to cover the wash which goes to the home of the doctor's fiancee. She has also seen the two of them riding together. Molly O delivers the wash and the denouncement which the fiancee makes of her indicates to the doctor the kind of woman he is engaged to.

The doctor accompanies Molly O home from church and her father makes no secret of the fact that he wants him to stay away from his daughter. The antagonism only increases their attraction for each other and Molly resolves to attend a big charity ball at which she knows the doctor will be present. She purloins a gown belonging to the doctor's fiancee, which her mother has just finished cleaning and makes a sensation.

The fiancee recognizes the gown and demands that Molly O remove it. The doctor comes to her aid and the fiancee offers him his ring back. The doctor gladly accepts it.

Molly O seeks a barn nearby for the purpose of changing into her ordinary apparel before going home. She is attacked there by her father's helper and the doctor comes to her rescue and takes her home. Her father when he sees her partially disrobed wearing the doctor's overcoat orders her from his house.

The next morning the father and his helper go to a mansion to give it its weekly cleaning. There they discover Molly O in negligee and the doctor in a dressing gown. The old man calls a policeman only to discover that the couple have been married the night before.

Marriage however, only starts their real troubles. The added prosperity which the marriage brings to Molly O's family proves too much for her brother and in an effort to shield him Molly O is forced into a position that is possible of only one interpretation on the part of her husband that she is unfaithful to him. Despite the fact that his love has grown after marriage he casts her off.

This gives Fred Manchester, who has secretly admired her, his chance. Working through her brother he entices her on board a blimp and speeds away with her. The brother horrified, runs to the doctor, makes a clean breast of the real events which the doctor has misinterpreted.

The doctor gives a chase in an aeroplane and the fight and rescue that follow brings the picture to a dramatic and happy conclusion.

"Molly O" Production of Staggering Cost

"MOLLY O" the Mack Sennett production which is announced for release on the fall schedule of Associated Producers, Inc., is claimed as probably the most costly production of its kind that has been produced during the past year. Mr. Sennett has made no announcement of the actual outlay of money which the completion of "Molly O" has demanded, but the known costs of the factors entering into it makes it almost a staggering total, without the incidental expenses which no one but the producer can know.

Despite the huge cost there is nothing extravagant about the attraction. The mere hugeness of it, as it was planned by Mr. Sennett called for a cost that is four or five times greater than the actual outlay on advertised "lavish" productions. Determined to make it a successor to "Mickey" that would eclipse that success as a box office attraction Mr. Sennett planned big from the start and kept to that program.

The two first moves made by Mr. Sennett shouldered him with a financial burden that was tremendous. Without attempting to negotiate with Mabel Normand, whom he had selected for the leading role, the producer telegraphed her an offer in entire keeping with the bigness he had planned for the production. The figure has not been made public but Miss Normand has remarked "It astounded me as much as did the first telegraphed offer of salary which Mr. Sennet telegraphed me. That time he said $125 a week and I accepted on the idea that he had written $25.

F. Richard Jones, director of "Mickey," was another person Mr. Sennett had decided upon. Mr. Jones was under contract to D. W. Griffith. Mr. Sennett went into negotiations for his services in the same big way that had characterized his treatment of Miss Normand and within a few weeks Mr. Jones was back on the Sennett lot.

With the star and director all ready actual work on the production was started. Both were consulted as to sets, continuity and everything else connected with the production. The story carries the heroine from poverty stricken squalor to luxuriant abundance and the settings gave opportunity for the most splendid equipment ever afforded a production.

Experts were called in for the making of the settings. They were given carte blanche as to cost but Mr. Sennett himself put on the restriction they were always to be kept within the bounds established by the theme of the story and he supervised the plans to make certain that this edict was obeyed.

Three months is considered ample time for the filming of a production but "Molly O" was actually in the process of "shooting" for just six days less than ten months. In spite of this there was not an idle day at the studio during the entire time. Work was progressing on it all the time, but Mr. Sennett's insistence upon "bigness" in even the smallest details resulted in a carefullness of studio work that has ever been accorded to another production.

In "Molly O" Sennett Attains an Ideal

Back of the announcement by Associated Producers, Inc., of the release of Mack Sennett's "Molly O" with Mabel Normand on the fall schedule is the story of how one of the best known producers of motion pictures has attained an ideal. Laugh producers are far more scarce in the motion picture industry than are the men capable of producing tensely dramatic stories, so that Mack Sennett has been kept busy at the work that the public demanded of him. Despite

Once he strayed out of the field of straight comedy. Those in the industry did not take kindly to it. Mack Sennett should stick to straight comedy was the opinion, but when the production finally reached the public it was seized upon as one of the greatest ever made. "Mickey" is still remembered as being the greatest box office attraction that has ever been released in America, for Mack Sennett's first production outside the straight comedy field was "Mickey" and his star Mabel Normand.

Despite the enormous success of "Mickey," Mr. Sennett was not satisfied. The story of "Mickey" was not exactly the one that he wanted and he bided his time. A year ago it arrived under the title of "Molly O." The instant he recognized it as the story he had been searching for he lost no time in procuring the services of Miss Normand for the leading role and in bringing F. Richard Jones, director of "Mickey." back to the Sennett lot.

Three scenes from the J. L. Frothingham production, "Pilgrims of the Night," to be distributed by Associated Producers, Inc. The story was adapted from the novel "Passers-By," by E. Phillips Oppenheim

An Opinion of "Molly O" by Mack Sennett

"MOLLY O" is the personification of Optimism; its heroine is so full of "pep" that there wasn't any actress in the world that could play the part except Mabel Normand, who came back to the Sennett regime a greater, finer, more brilliant and winsome a star than ever. And one purpose animated her; it was to see whether Mack Sennett could produce another "Mickey."

We have reason to believe that "Molly O" is a "greater-than-'Mickey'-picture."

It ought to be. It has the same persons engaged in the same capacities that went into the success of "Mickey"—star, director and producer; it is the product of ripened experience, it cost more money and consumed more time; it employs more players; it covers a deeper range of emotions and it tells a keener story. "Molly O," the embodiment of the Spirit of "I Will" struggles up from the dreary slums of society and by virtue of that which is within her, assumes her rightful place in society by the side of the man of her choice, who, like another Cinderella, she meets at a grand ball. Lavishness of production, a mint of money, the best effort that the Sennett organization could command in all its branches and engage in every ounce of energy and every foot of resources in its thirty-five acres of studio territory, are in this picture, "Molly O," and in it in such a way that it all shows. It will compel and convince by the very might of its size; it will beguile and thrill by the power and urge of its story.

It is the writer's expression of faith—faith in the public and faith in the picture industry."

Five A. P. Releases Are Booked by Hearst

Five productions distributed by Associated Producers, Inc., have been bought for one of the most unusual motion picture theatres in the country, according to word which was received from the Los Angeles exchange by General Manager Al Lichtman. The production will be shown in the private theatre maintained by William Randolph Hearst on his ranch at San Simeon, Calif.

The Associated Producers' productions booked are "The Ten Dollar Raise," "Home Talent," "Made in the Kitchen," "She Sighed by the Seaside" and "Love's Outcast."

Exhibitors' Box Office Reports Will Appear in Next Week's News

Contracts on "Molly O" and "Hail the Woman" Must Bear Time Stamps

TO avoid any discrimination or favoritism in the acceptance of contracts, General Manager Al Lichtman, of Associated Producers, Inc., sent telegraphic orders to exchanges this week that all contracts on "Molly O," the Mack Sennett production with Mabel Normand and "Hail the Woman," the Thomas H. Ince special must bear time stamps. This step was necessary because already disputes as to priority of contracts has arisen in regard to the productions, and the inquiries and general interest which has been displayed by exhibitors caused apprehension that more might occur.

The first mix-up occurred in Pennsylvania where a salesman out on the road sold "Molly O" at about the same time when an exhibitor in the same territory called at the exchange office and contracted for the same pictures. The situation was a difficult one to adjust as neither exhibitor had any great time argument in his favor. The exchange manager forwarded both to the home office where General Manager Al Lichtman suggested a compromise, and adjudication of it is being carried through at the office of the local exchange.

Another arose out of a booking for a chain of houses in the East. A scrutiny of the contract showed that it called for bookings in a house which was in direct competition with that of another theatre, the manager of which had contracted for the same series of pictures. In this case there was no time priority in favor of either party, and it was this case that caused Mr. Lichtman to issue the order regarding the time stamping of all contracts.

"The exhibitor interest that has been displayed in these two productions and the competition that has arisen for them," said Mr. Lichtman, "is such as to indicate that many more such mix-ups will occur unless some step was taken to prevent them. A dispute about the priority of an exhibitor claim is an unpleasant matter, and especially obnoxious to Associated Producers which is striving to be absolutely fair to every exhibitor, booking each production singly."

"Silent Call" on A. P. List

H. O. Davis, Producer; Laurence Trimble, Director; Jane Murfin, Author

H. O. DAVIS, producer of the Laurence Trimble-Jane Murfin production, announces the completion of "The Silent Call" for distribution by Associated Producers.

The cutting and titling of the features is expected to take about a month so that a completed print will probably be received by the distributing company, the latter part of September.

"The Silent Call" represents the producing of a few of the newly organized triumvirate in the motion picture field, Laurence Trimble a well-known director and Jane Murfin, a well-known author of scenarios and feature plays are associated with Mr. Davis in the production of "The Silent Call." Mr. Trimble is one of the veteran writers and directors of the screen world. Originally a writer of stories for Vitagraph over a decade ago, he soon came to direct his own pictures with this company. He produced several novelties among them "Storybook Land Pictures for Children," "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "Jealousy," the production with no subtitles, only one scene and only one actress. He directed the last two Olive Thomas productions.

Miss Murfin is the best known for her work as a speaking dramatist, although she has also written a number of successful photoplays, original stories as well as adaptations of her own dramatic works. Her most popular spoken dramas include "Information Please," "Daybreak" and "Lilac Time" which were written in collaboration with Jane Cowl.

Mr. Davis who represents the business experience of the new combination was wth Triangle as director general in the hayday of its career. At present, in addition to being the producer of the Laurence Thimble-Jane Murfin productions, he is general manager for Mack Sennett.

"Mother O'Mine" Scores Heavily in Duluth

The Garrick theatre of Duluth, Minn., has written o the Associated Producers, Inc., announcing that Thomas H. Ince's "Mother O' Mine" did capacity business for the entire week of July 30th and established the biggest box office gross which the theatre has experienced since early last winter.

"Foolish Matrons" Held Over by Symphony

"The Foolish Matrons," the latest Maurice Tourneur production for distribution by Associated Producers, Inc., has been retained for a second week by the Symphony theatre in Los Angeles. The Tourneur production was put into the theatre for its first run without any special exploitation or advertising.

Star Triumphant under Sennett's Banner

MABEL NORMAND, the star of "Molly O," has attained every triumph of her motion picture career under the direction of the comedy king.

There are four big outstanding features in her screen career. The first was the abandonment of her decision never to enter a studio again after her first experience; the second her appearance in the old Keystone comedies; the third her part in "Mickey," and the fourth her selection for the leading feminine role in "Molly O."

Mack Sennett was the cause of all four of them. Miss Normand after a rather precarious career as a model for illustrators acted upon the advice of a friend and sought a part in one of the productions being directed by D. W. Griffith. One day convinced her that there were easier ways of earning $5.00 than appearing before a camera for the length of time required of actresses in the old days. So she stayed away.

Then she met Mack Sennett. Mr. Sennett informed her that she had violated all the ethics of the picture profession by not returning to the studio to finish the production and advised her to try it again. She did with the result that she stayed in pictures.

Strong Supporting Cast Seen in "Molly O"

Seldom has a star been surrounded by a more congenial cast than that engaged to support Mabel Normand by Mack Sennett in his production of "Molly O" which has been announced for October release by Associated Producers, Inc. Two factors entered into the selection of the actors and actresses who appear in the more important roles—the prime one of course being their ability to portray the role, but secondarily their temperament was given careful consideration.

By this process it fell to Jack Mulhall to be chosen for the leading male role to play opposite Miss Normand. Lowell Sherman was selected as the leading "heavy." Jacqueline Logan appears in the role of an entirely new style of "vamp"

A subtle, suave, gentlemanly crook has an important part in the story; and this part has been entrusted to Ben Deely. For the role of Molly O's brother, a weakling, not incorrigibly bad, Albert Hackett was selected. In the roles of her father and mother appear George Nichols and Mrs. Anna Hernandez.

One of the cleverest characterizations in the entire production was entrusted to Eddie Gribbons.

Perhaps the high quality of the entire cast is best exemplified by the fact that Frank Bond appears as the master of ceremonies at the grand ball which is one of the most lavish as well as important in the development of the story.

"Molly O"—in the center the man who made it, Mack Sennett; above and below him, Mabel Normand, the star; three scenes from the production and a bird-eye view of the Sennett studios on the Coast where it was made. The feature will be distributed by Associated Producers

Paramount Signs Victor Fleming to Dire ct

Victor Fleming, one of the best known and most successful directors in the industry, has signed a contract with Paramount and has been assigned to direct Agnes Ayres in her first starring picture "The Lane That Has No Turning," by Sir Gilbert Parker. This announcement was made at Hollywood last week by Jesse L. Lasky, who stated that work on the new picture would be started at the Lasky studio as soon as Miss Ayres completes her work in George Melford's production "The Sheik," in which she is featured with Rudolph Valentino.

Fleming received prominence for his work as director of Douglas Fairbanks, his first picture with Fairbanks being "His Majesty, The American." This was followed by "When the Clouds Roll By" and "The Mollycoddle." He was also associated with Mary Pickford for a time and more recently with Constance Talmadge.

Complete Cast of "The Foolish Age" Named

Director William A. Seiter of Hunt Stromberg Productions has announced the following cast for "The Foolish Age" which is the first of the R-C Pictures, starring Doris May:

Doris May as Margy Carr; Hallam Cooley as Homer Dean Chadwick; Otis Harlan as "Old Top" Carr; Arthur Hoyt as Lester Hicks; Lillian Worth as Flossy; Bull Montana as Bibbs; Spike Robinson as Cauliflower Jim; and Babe London as "Fatty Olga."

"The Foolish Age" is from an original story by Hunt Stromberg. It will be released in "National Joy Week" which begins October 16.

"Handcuffs or Kisses", Due September 10

As the successor to "Remorseless Love," the current Elaine Hammerstein release, Selznick has supplied exchanges with "Handcuffs or Kisses" in readiness for release September 10th. In this feature, directed by George Archainbaud, the leading man is Robert Ellis, who is also a member of the Selznick directorial staff. Thomas Edgelow's story, first published in Young's Magazine, provided the basis of "Handcuffs or Kisses."

Fox Sees Big Comedy Year

EVERY indication points to the fact that the coming season is to be the greatest comedy year since the Fox Film Corporation has made this feature an important part of its annual program.

Heading the comedy organization is Clyde Cook, who has been hailed by reviewers as a second Chaplin. One year ago this comedian was practically unknown except as an eccentric of the music halls. With his addition to the Fox program and his elevation to stardom in such successes as "The Jockey," "The Guide" and "The Sailor," Cook has gone to the very top as an entertainer and is now popular all over the world as one of the leading comedians of the screen.

Material has been obtained for him for the approaching season that will greatly enhance his value to the program of any theatre and add further to his fast growing popularity, it is declared. His first release of the season will be "The Toreador," which will be available on September 18. Those who have seen it, state that it surpasses his other successes. Cook will make about seven comedies during the season.

The new comedy star is Al St. John, who has been leading man and featured player of the Fox Sunshine Comedies. Hereafter St. John will make comedy features for Fox. He will also make about seven special comedies. His two first releases are "Small Town Stuff," on September 4, and "The Happy Pest" on October 4, both two-reel specials.

Fox Sunshine Comedies will be continued with new players added to the cast, and it is hardly necessary to draw attention to these two-reel entertainments. The releases planned up to date include "Ain't Love Grand," August 14; "The Devilish Romeo," August 28; "One Moment Please," September 11; "The Book Agent," September 29, and "The Singer Midgets' Sideshow," October 9.

There is probably not a spot in this country where the Mutt and Jeff cartoons are not known. They will be issued in 500 foot reels, and Bud Fisher, their creator, promises some especially interesting and lively subjects during the coming season.

Urban to Issue Four-Reeler

"The Four Seasons" Presents Beautiful Views of Natural Scenery

CHARLES URBAN is just putputting the finishing touches to a series of four reels to be called "The Four Seasons." For the first time he will issue a subject which in its entirety contains more than a single reel, for "The Four Seasons" will be released as a four reel feature.

The theme was conceived by Raymond L. Ditmars and directed throughout by him. Indeed, many of the more difficult scenes were personally photographed by him with cameras of special mechanism. The four reels assembled are from an accumulated file of more than 40,000 feet of film.

"The Four Seasons," as the title indicates, treat of spring, summer, autumn and winter, with a reel devoted to each. The main idea back of the entire subject is to clearly portray in beautiful and unusual scenes the lessons of the weather, incidentally demonstrating the possibilities of anyone definitely forecasting many weather conditions.

Animals play an important part in the picture, illustrating the ways and moods of the seasons by their habits and Nature's treatment of them. The whole is linked together by an interesting story.

"The Four Seasons" is really a year's biography of Nature; it has compelling beauty and an interest that goes far beyond an appeal to the mere lover of nature. Dr. Ditmars is a trained observer and he has brought all his skill and knowledge to translate his observations to the motion picture screen that will make them crystal clear to the millions among the motion picture audiences.

Mr. Urban will release "The Four Seasons" as a special feature among the Urban Popular Classics, published by the Kineto Company of America.

Russell Completes Feature

"Shadows of Conscience," Seven-Reeler, Ready for Distribution

RUSSELL'S Productions have just completed their special feature, "Shadows of Conscience," a seven-reel production, which is heralded as one of the big independent pictures of the year, and B. D. Russell has arrived in Chicago from the coast with the negative, which is now at the Burton-Holmes Laboratories for the final cutting and making prints.

The story was specially written by Francis Powers, author of "The First Born," collaborating with John P. McCarthy, who also directed the picture, and whose "Out of the Dust" was one of the real screen successes.

The story, which starts in a Wyoming town in 1879-80 and closes ten years later in California, is said to be of unusual dramatic strength and drawing power, and is headed by Russell Simpson. Great pains have been taken to assure historical accuracy both as to costumes and settings.

Others in the cast are Landers Stevens, Barbara Tenant, W. Bradley Ward, Nelson McDowell, Ashley Cooper, Ida McKenzie and Gertrude Olmstead.

B. D. Russell reports that more than one hundred and twenty thousand feet of film was shot in making this feature, and that when cut to the seven-reel length, at which it will be released, it offers the exhibitor one of the strongest, most gripping, and beautifully presented romantic pictures of the early west yet screened.

Distribution plans for this special feature have not been announced as yet, but it is understoood that offers have been received for the picture from some of the largest state right organizations in the country.

Chas. Burr Issues Statement

Discusses Distribution and Exhibition of "Burn 'Em Up Barnes"

IN a statement issued this week by Charles C. Burr, president of Mastodon Films, Inc., and the producer of the long popular Torchy Comedies and of Johnny Hines's most recent and ambitious feature production, "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," Mr. Burr effectively sheds light upon some mooted points regarding the distribution and exhibition of this romantic comedy.

"Contrary to the impression prevalent in some quarters," states Mr. Burr, "Mastodon Films, Inc., has not entered into any distributing arrangements with any organization, individual or group of persons for 'Burn 'Em Up Barnes.' Nor are the pre-release showings of the production, now being staged in several cities, to be construed as meaning that the picture is being State Righted.

"At the moment," the statement continues, "the status of this Johnny Hines feature offering is not to be defined and the object of the showings, which is fully in accord with modern practice, is to definitely determine and establish its value as a box office attraction.

"Since its inception 'Burn 'Em Up Barnes' has been offered in a group of carefully selected theatres, ranging in type from the 'small town' house to the 'big city' theatre, with exploitation and without, accompanied by personal appearances of the star and otherwise, and in fine its presentation has been varied as widely as circumstances would permit of.

"In each instance its reception has been gratifyingly enthusiastic and the attitude of the audience, press and trade is unmistakably one of complete and unanimous approval.

"The schedule of pre-release showings, soon to be concluded, will be confined to this already determined and diversified group of theatres.

"At the conclusion of these arrangements and the completion of the compilation of the data provided by them, definite announcement will be made of 'Burn 'Em Up Barnes'' ultimate disposition."

Cuneo Will Make Eight "Different" Westerns

A radical departure from the usual production of Western pictures is to be made by the Doubleday Production Company, making the new series of eight five-reelers, starring Lester Cuneo, announces that company.

Mr. Cuneo has all the abilities of a full-fledged Western star and in addition has had an abundance of dramatic experience on the legitimate stage. Human interest, big dramatic moments and excellent plot will blend with the elements of the regulation Westerns to furnish thrills, and the producers also aim to surround Cuneo with excellent supporting casts. Mrs. Wally Reid is playing opposite the star in "Behind the Mask," the present production, and in addition to her appearance little Billy Reid, the four-year-old pride and joy of the Reid family, will also have an important role.

The Cuneo company is finishing location work at Sunland, California, and will shortly commence interior work at Warner Brothers' studios in Hollywood. Irving M. Lesser is distributing the entire series of the eight Cuneo specials and claims they are selling faster than he anticipated.

"Tarzan" Serial His Best

Director Robert F. Hill Believes He Has Never Equalled New Serial

ROBERT F. HILL, under whose direction "Adventures of Tarzan," the latest chapter play to star Elmo Lincoln, was recently completed on the Pacific Coast, believes this production to be the crowning achievement of his directorial career.

Hill, who will take a short vacation before starting a new production, recently declared himself as follows regarding "Adventures of Tarzan": "I am delighted at the opportunity afforded through the medium of the trade press to give the exhibitors of this country my opinion of 'Adventures of Tarzan,' which has just been completed in the studios of the Great Western Producing Company. I have specialized in the direction of chapter film plays for many years and I believe that in the serial I have finally achieved my dream of what should really constitute this peculiar form of screen entertainment. Suspense, strength in episode climaxes, variance of locales, melodramatic situations and novelty of story are the prime requisites for a successful serial. 'Adventures of Tarzan' possesses all of these in abundance. Picturized from the 'Revenge of Tarzan,' by Edgar Rice Burroughs, this serial embodies all of the mystery, the charm of action for which Mr. Burroughs' novels are noted. The author has been of invaluable assistance to me throughout the entire production in securing the proper jungle atmosphere, garbing the various characters correctly and in injecting the proper suspense. Mr. Burroughs spent many days on location and in the studios wiith us in this work. His expression of keen approval during a recent screening of 'Adventures of Tarzan' has well repaid the expenditure of time and effort. My confidence in the reception which exhibitors will accord this serial is intensified by the remarkable work of Elmo Lincoln, the star. I have directed Lincoln in several serials during the past five years, but have never seen him equal his performance as the ape man of the jungles."

More Territory Sold on "Tarzan" Serial

Louis Weiss, secretary of Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, reported this week the sale of another territory for "Adventures of Tarzan," starring Elmo Lincoln. "Lying Truth" Distribution

Announcement to Be Made Soon, States Jasper, Back from Trip

JOHN J. JASPER, general manager of the Marion Fairfax Productions, has returned to the Coast from a seven-week trip through the East made especially to arrange distribution for "Lying Truth" and future Marion Fairfax Productions, and will shortly make announcement concerning distribution arrangements.

In addition to spending several weeks in New York, Mr. Jasper made trips to Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, and in returning to the Coast spent time in Cleveland, Grand Rapids, Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, Denver and Salt Lake. As a result of his trip he is in a very optimistic mood.

"Business is going to be exceptionally good for the theatre men this winter," Mr. Jasper says. "The extremely hot weather this summer has caused many to be pessimistic, but this feeling will disappear with the arrival of cooler days in the fall. The farmer is going to be prosperous because of his bumper crops and this condition is going to reflect to a greater part of the industrial world. The East is hit harder than any other part of the country, and as one goes West the condition brightens continually. The brightest spot, without a doubt, of the entire nation is Los Angeles at the present time."

Concerning distribution of "Lying Truth," Mr. Jasper stated that he was still conferring by wire with distribution organizations and the final negotiations will be concluded within a few days.

Built on Specifications

"Tarzan" Serial Developed in Manner Suggested by Exhibitors

AS an example of the close co-operation which should exist between the production and exhibition factors of the motion picture industry, Louise Weiss, sponsor for "Adventures of Tarzan," cites the methods used in producing this serial.

According to Weiss, several thousand exhibitors were queried prior to the turning of a crank, in order to ascertain what style of chapter play would best suit the requirements of their patrons. An analysis of the replies showed a strong demand among exhibitors for wild animal serials, as they have come to be known. Going further with his research work before starting production, the executive of Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation learned that the presence of a well konwn serial star for exploitation purposes was desired by the majority of showmen throughout the United States and Canada. The necessary elements as outlined by the response to his questionnaire proved to be as follows: a star of established standing in a story of the jungle providing opportunities for the plentiful use of wild animals and a variety of locale.

It was to meet these suggestions that Mr. Weiss purchased the famous story by Edgar Rice Burroughs, entitled "The Return of Tarzan," from which the serial was picturized. His selection of Elmo Lincoln, the originator of the character of the ape man, naturally followed and in order to insure the presence of sufficient wild beasts of the jungle Weiss augmented the large collection of animals at the studios of the Great Western Producing Company by securing the services of a prominent circus owner, who placed his entire menagerie at the disposal of director Robert F. Hill.

As an opening shot under his management, Mr. Leichter has booked the production for a three weeks' engagement at the Liberty theatre, Jersey City, from Sept. 12th to Oct. 1st. This, in the opinion of many prominent film men, is declared to be a record achievement, in that the Dempsey-Carpentier fight pictures played the much-exploited city only one week.

Mitchell Leichter has just returned from the West Coast, where he spent the past five years as exploitation manager for some of the industry's largest film concerns, his territory being a large one, taking in all the principal cities and towns from Vancouver in the north to Los Angeles in the south.

"Heartsof North" Premiere

Tivoli Theatre, of 'Frisco, to Run Brandt-Davis Production

THE Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, one of the most exclusive theatres on the West Coast, is to witness the grand premiere of "The Heart of the North"—the new feature of the Canadian Northwest produced by Joe Brandt and George H. Davis under their new producing organizations, Quality Film Productions, Inc. The picture is to be State Righted for September, and features Roy Stewart, who is supported by Louise Lovely. The announcement of this premiere comes as evidence of the Tivoli management's endorsement of September as Independence Month.

This big feature booking, it is announced, is especially unusual, in that the management of the Tivoli requested this feature for the week of September 18th, after seeing the film on the West Coast, immediately following its completion, even before it had been given final editing, and without any sales, exploitation, or advertising drive upon it. All Star Features Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, who have secured the rights in their territory to "The Heart of the North," have wired Mr. Brandt that feature bookings of the same calibre as the Tivoli showing have been secured in Oakland, Stockton, San Jose, Fresno, and every other key city in their district.

D. S. Smithhisler and G. E. Darland, managers of the Billings theatre, at Enid, Okla., have been temporarily enjoined by the court from changing the name "Billings." The new managers claimed that the name hurt their business, while the owners claimed that the name "Billings" was a trademark and could not be legally changed. The result of the suit is being watched for with much interest.

The Palace theatre at Newkirk, Okla., has reopened, after having been dark for the past two months. "The Kid" was the initial picture shown at the opening.

KANSAS CITY

Phil L. Ryan, franchise manager for Associated Exhibitors, Inc., was in Kansas City last week on an inspection tour of the exchanges and for a conference with Samuel Harding of Kansas City, president of Associated Exhibitors, who has returned from the Pacific coast. Mr. Ryan, who has just completed a tour of the nine exchange centers, said that box office receipts have increased from 15 to 20 per cent in the last two weeks and that better business conditions are undoubtedly in sight.

CANADA

The Allen theatre, Toronto, Ontario, head house of the Allen string of fifty odd theatres across Canada, is once more away to a fine start, after having been closed for several weeks to permit the installation of a stage on which to present prologues, ballet numbers and vaudeville specialties. It is interesting to note that Herb Jennings has been selected as the manager of the Allen theatre.

It has been finally decided to name Loew's latest theatre in Montreal, Quebec, "Loew's Court Theatre." This was formerly the Theatre Francaise, a large amusement house in the heart of the French section of Montreal. There is now little trace of the old theatre, however, the structure having been rebuilt throughout and much modern equipment added. For some time it was proposed to call it the "Metropolitan Theatre."

Announcement has been made that the new house will be opened in September. The policy will be to present moving pictures exclusively and special attention will be paid to orchestration and prologue features. It is planned to change the program three times weekly and Sunday performances will be featured.

In honor of the first visit to Toronto, Ontario, as Canada's Governor-General by His Excellency, Lord Byng, the Strand theatre presented a double bill consisting of two British productions during the week of August 29. Lord Byng formally opened the Canadian National Exhibition on August 27 and was present in the Ontario capital for several days after that. Manager Robson therefore hit upon the plan of hooking up with the historic occasion by presenting a British program at the Strand, consisting of "The Mystery Road" and "The Princess of New York."

"The qualities which induced Mr. Fox to promote the young actress to stardom before the close of her first year in pictures include native intelligence and histrionic ability, beauty and charm of manner, health and courage, and determination," declares the statement from the William Fox offices.

A year ago she accompanied her father on a trip to California and there met Maurice Tourneur, who invited her to visit his studio. The visit resulted in the offer of a small part in the cast of a photoplay and she accepted.

Days passed and Tourneur had not found an acceptable leading woman. He decided to try Miss Bedford, who proved satisfactory and was given the role. Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to April 9, 1921.

Miller Establishes Record in Taking Most Rapid Pictures

Using Ordinary Camera, 200 Exposures Per Second Are Made

Tiry Miller, head Rothacker camera-
n, has established another world-recl—the most rapid picture ever made
h an ordinary motion picture camera.
The 8 to 1 ultra-rapid camera makes 3 exposures per second. Miller has ored a 12 to 1 picture, or over 200 exsures per second. According to the ll & Howell Company this is the fastest ture ever made with an ordinary nera.

aphed the film of the lowest depth on
:ord by the U. S. Bureau of Mines.
ortly before that he obtained the first se-up of boiling metal in a steel fur-ce.

Engineers came to William H. Straf-
th a problem in metal testing. They nted to see what happened during the ts and when the metal gave way under strain.

Miller and Strafford had a Bell & How-geared up to 8 to 1, the ordinary ultra-id speed. But that was too slow. The gineers figured on paper that the nera would have to speed up to 12 to just fifty per cent faster than the usual w motion camera. With the aid of ll & Howell engineers the feat was entually accomplished.

Miller relates: "We finally ran the n from sprocket wheel to shuttle and om shuttle to sprocket wheel through ecially made chutes to prevent the beat-g of the film during the terrific speed d to prevent jerking of the film in the uttle."

In a statement J. H. McNabb, Bell & owell general manager, said: "The rk of accommodating our regular pro-ssional Bell & Howell Camera for the ception of the ultra-speed attachment take pictures at better than 200 exposes per second presented quite an engiering problem, and only through the genuity of Albert S. Howell was this tachment worked out so that pictures uld be made in the highly satisfactory anner in which the Rothacker camera-an obtained them.

Tiry Miller

"When the Rothacker cameraman first came to us with the problem that they required between ten to twelve times the normal speed, we were very skeptical of being able to accomplish it with our ultra-speed mechanism, due to the fact that our engineering department designed and perfected the mechanism for the taking of pictures at only eight times normal speed. However, it was not long before our experimental laboratories produced the special chutes, which eliminated all loop strain to which the film is subjected at this extremely high rate of speed.

"The results have certainly exceeded our expectations, because it seems almost inconceivable that an ordinary motion picture camera could be geared up to this extreme rate of speed and take pictures that are so perfect as to be classed in quality with the performance of the camera operating at the normal speed of sixteen pictures per second. It looks very much like accomplishing something that borders on the fringe of impossibility, and I believe that this feat may be claimed as the world's record in the taking of ultra-speed pictures with an ordinary motion picture camera. We are not saying that pictures have not been taken at a greater speed than this, because special cameras have been built for the exclusive taking of ultra-speed pictures, when the mechanism was constructed with special reference to the speed and duty to be imposed upon the travel of the film; but we do claim that it is the first camera that has been equipped with an ultra-speed attachment that has taken pictures at a speed of over 200 exposures per second without damaging the mechanism nor injuring the camera in any respect. The fact that Miller's camera today, after taking over 10,000 feet of negative at extremely high rate of speed, is as good as any of the new cameras which are now being turned out by our factory is a very high testimony of the material and workmanship which are incorporated in the manufacture of our instrument.

"Some conception may be had of the speed of travel of the various mechanisms in the ultra-speed attachment to the camera, when considering that the main shutter shaft travels at a speed of approximately 12,000 revolutions per minute, which means that the peripheral speed of the shutter is about three and one-half miles per minute. The fact that a mechanism can travel at this enormous speed without injury to any of the working parts, or, in fact, without the mechanism flying to pieces, is most remarkable; and in explanation of it we must say that this is another feat of our engineering department and experimental laboratories in devising a running balance for these parts, so that the camera would reflect no undue vibration. To do this, some very elaborate tools were constructed, which permitted the balancing of the shutter at ultra-high running speed; in fact, the shutter shaft and cam of the camera were

Century of Baltimore Marvel House of Golden Screen

Two Million Dollar Theatre the Product of Experts

One of the classiest motion picture theatres south of the Mason-Dixon line, which can compare favorably with anything anywhere dedicated to the gold screen, is the new Century at Baltimore, Md.

The job of making it thus was no sinecure. Experts in every line were consulted before a spade was pushed into its foundation. Hoffmann-Henson Co., of Philadelphia, were the architects. When the word "Go!" was given, there was no stopping 'em. Came the day that saw materials, equipment and box-office ready to turn to and do their share, under a tutelage of a house staff of 100 persons, toward replenishing the coffers of the company. Predictions that the Century will walk away with the gold ribbons of Baltimore filmdom are freely made.

There's the true motion picture atmosphere in the theatre. Restful, inspiring, it's an aristocrat that gathers its own with one embrace and mothers at the same time thousands of ordinary folks who hanker after the impressive, the long-wished for array of the rich man's gorgeous worldly goods. Cooled in midsummer by gigantic fans that do not distract, the temple is made comfortable in winter by three boilers of tremendous size. You can be at ease in any chair in the shrine, from the seat directly under the projection room near the ceiling to the rows where diamond-studded skirts adorn the audience and including the elite mezzanine loges.

This house represents the idealism applied to the industry in enterprising and thoroughly practical methods by Charles E. Whitehurst of Baltimore and his Baltimore associates. With him, F. William Bolgiano, Julian S. Stein, George F. Smith and Edwin L. H comprise the active officers. These and Lo Deal, J. H. Whitehurst, Fred G. Boyce, Jr., Webster Smith and Howard R. "We've tried to look into the future," says E. Whitehurst, the Baltimore M. P. magna "and we are confident the theatre is far ahe in everything."

Two convertible ns, one east and one west, blaze with the cur- nt feature, and below is a metal marquee der which at night white-globed lights beam. Verda antique marble in the vestibule and ket offices and marble showcases for litho- aphed posters attract the eye. Three leaded ined art glass windows representing Music, medy and Drama are between four columns ilt along the Ionic style and open panels top e windows. Overhead is a pediment faced th an Alto Relievo, depicting various arts, d from two of the columns the marquee is spended on iron supports. Looking backward e sees C-E-N-T-U-R-Y in white inside letter- g with big electric bulbs reaching way above e roof. Other features of the vestibule are all tile flooring done into a mosaic pattern; erda antique marble wainscoting; light grey iling having two attractive cluster lights, and three three-sheet frames.

Circassian walnut is the material of which three double doors are made that lead into the lobby which measures 21x74 feet, with two inclines. One, seven feet wide, runs down under the foyers to elevators and the other, 14 feet wide, goes to the foyer. Verda antique marble tops a railing of wrought iron that is on the right-hand side of the foyer incline and the lobby measures about 30 feet in height. Hidden lights at the ceiling, three large chandeliers and 14 cluster brackets placed between mirrors cast a mellow glow here. The base of the walls and the two pilasters which are between the mirrors are made of black and art marble. Each mirror is made up of 25 smaller ones measuring 12x18 inches, placed in a wood frame and the arch in which the mirror rests contains a bas relief design in fresco. Flowers, with rampant lions, decorate the border over the pilasters against purple. Tope velvet covers the floor.

The foyer is 32x32x28 feet. Ots staircase, 12.6 feet wide, of white blue veined art marble, leads to the promenade of the mezzanine and there is a brass railing in the center. The wainscoting is of black and gold art marble. Circassian walnut faces the walls and there are seven panels for as many mural paintings, the work of R. McGill Mackall, Baltimore artist. In the wall facing the stairway is one of the painting measurements 8.6x28.6 feet, while the other six, each 8x10 feet, adorn the side walls. All are based on Greek mythology, representing wood nymphs, centaurs and fawns, and cost $25,000. A portico inside the center entrance of the mezzanine holds an electric fountain. Silver and brown tapestry velour drape archways which have balustrades of white blue veined art marble. Grey and white tiles make the floor. Three elevators, each measuring 8 feet square with a capacity for 4,500 pounds, can take 100 persons a minute to the roof theatre from the foyer, which also boasts of a Louis VI high-back bench.

Built to resemble an L, the Century has its entrance at 18 West Lexington street and runs through to Clay street. Its seating capacity is close to 4,000, which, with provisions for a hand-painted roof theatre for features, make a total of close to 7,000. Its cost amounts to about $2,000,000.

On the main floor, part of the auditorium measuring 100x160 feet, one sees five wide aisles. Chairs are done up in blue velour. The color scheme in general is mulberry, gold and old rose. Pilasters holding shaded bracket lights decorate panels done up in mulberry tapestry and a gold figure design. Three inverted bowl lights are under the balcony and

Selecting the Screen for the Motio Picture Theatre

Suitable Projection Surface an Essential for Good Results

By Grant Heth, Minusa Cine Screen Company, St. Louis, Mo.

In reproducing the motion picture, research has determined that no part of the appliances required occupies a more prominent position than the screen. It is the essential that determines the final result, be it good or bad.

It is for this reason that vast sums of money have been expended in an effort to create the perfect projection surface. Theory after theory has been traced to a hopeless end, with but few exceptions, and if the record of more than a dozen years of successful screen building counts for anything, together with the fact that many of the world's finest and mostly costly motion picture theatres have been equipped by our company, it is to be presumed that their theory and construction of a projection surface is well advanced toward perfection. Their theory is as follows:

Each and every screen is built to the specifications of the theatre in which they are to serve, as light conditions must be taken into consideration if color harmony in light rays is to be hoped for, therefore, does it stand to reason that a screen surface 12 x 16 feet, producing a perfect picture at 150 feet on D. C., would produce the same results on A. C. at 100 feet on, say, a 9 x 12 foot surface? The color characteristics and nature of A. C. and D. C. light are essentially different. The size of the picture and length of throw are different. Shouldn't the screen be different as well?

We know it should. Experiments have shown that the color of the screen surface must match perfectly the color characteristics of the projected light at the "point of contact." Thus we eliminate, absolutely, the glare so apparent on many silver and imitation gold fibre screens.

This glaring light is especially rich in short ultra-violet rays, which are most active and intense, and consequently most irritating to the eye, through their action on the focusing muscle (cilliary), the marvelous photographic plate (retina), which under these conditions must telegraph messages to the brain far more frequently than usual. This is the scientific reason for "eye-strain."

Everyone who has taken a walk on a sunshiny day, when the ground was covered with fresh fallen snow, can recall the glaring reflection caused when the brilliant yellow or golden sunshine struck the equally brilliant white snow; you also recall how it almost blinded you. That is exactly what happens when the light from a projection machine strikes a screen surface which fails to match it perfectly in color. The terrible glare produced by such a screen not only is very injurious to the human eye, but at the same time causes a "veil" to appear over the picture. This veil, or in real "excess reflection," caused by a nega or yellow-colored light coming into t tact with a positive or white-colored s face, just like the sun shining on snow, absolutely kills the greater part the perspective and depth of your pict image. Brilliancy at the cost of a los perspective and detail is entirely un sirable.

Increasing or decreasing the amper proportionately increases and decre this haze or reflection. This result is common on gold screen surfaces un certain conditions of projection, unles colored background underneath the face finish is used. Our method of pr ing these assertions is to photograph light rays from the projection mach from a side angle as they strike screen surface. When the proje light from the arc strikes a surface of actly the same color as it is, there is solutely no refraction or fuzz registe on the plate, or photograph.

This is not a complicated scien theory; anyone with a slight knowle of the color characteristics of proje light knows the spectrum of such ligh composed of the three primary col red, blue and yellow.

YOU run the biggest features you can lay your hands on. You cover your signboards with posters. You blaze the names of headliners in big electric lights.

But do you realize that the front of your building itself has immense advertising possibilities—real, permanent advertising values? Do you realize that its appearance affects patronage? Do you realize that it helps determine your standing in your own industry, and with the general public?

Look at the Orpheum Theatre, New Orleans. There's no question where it stands. Up top—with the best in the city! There's no question about the patronage it gets. The best in New Orleans! Its beautiful Terra Cotta facade, with its gay, decorative frieze and its symbols of music, drama and comedy, indicates the quality and the spirit of the performance within, and literally lures the crowd to go inside.

The beauty of this facade is the beauty of Terra Cotta. In color the background is a delicate pink, while the five panels, the ornamental frieze, and the other details, are all a riot of harmonious oriental color. In form, too, as well as in color, Terra Cotta knows no limits. It interprets the simple as well as the ornate, always with finesse and beauty.

Yet Terra Cotta is not expensive. Its cost is moderate.

Proper Interior Illumination of House Explained in New Movie Booklet

Selection of Screen to Eliminate Eye Strain Also Treated—Results of Exhaustive Tests

A booklet entitled "The Motion Picture Theatre, Its Interior Illumination and the Selection of the Screen," which has just been published by the Eastman Kodak Company, gives the results of exhaustive tests made at the Kodak research laboratory on the proper amount and distribution of the interior illumination of a motion picture theatre and the selection of a suitable projection screen. When Mr. Eastman, in connection with his gift of a School of Music to the people of the city of Rochester, conceived the idea of an endowed motion picture theatre, it was found that little accurate information was available concerning these two important factors in the design of any theatre. As a result the problem was turned over to the Kodak research laboratory to determine the best possible conditions of interior illumination and to find the projection screen which was best suited to the installation.

While these tests were carried out with the expressed purpose of making this endowed motion picture theatre a model theatre in every detail, the results nevertheless represent an exhaustive treatment of the subject and will apply to every theatre. It was found, for example, that by proper handling of the distribution and intensity of the lights it is possible to increase the amount of general illumination of the interior to the point where ordinary print may be read at once upon entering the theatre. The increased lighting, when properly distributed, resulted in an improvement in the quality of the projected picture and diminished the amount of eyestrain and sensation of flicker. In the better lighted theatre, it is entirely feasible to sell advertising space on programs, and an equally important consideration from the theatre owner's standpoint is the increase in box office receipts which naturally results from the more pleasing illumination afforded and the greater visual comfort.

The choice of the projection screen is also an important factor in eliminating eyestrain. The booklet contains the complete reflection characteristic of some twenty different types of screen together with the names and addresses of the manufacturers. A full description is given of the significance of the results and also a simple scheme whereby it is possible to determine from the floor plan of the theatre the screen which is best suited to that installation.

The booklet is written without the use of technical or scientific terms. It is published especially to enable the motion picture theatre owner or manager to arrange with the architect and illuminating engineer that the optical properties of the theatre may be raised to the same high standard of excellence as the picture. A testing department is maintained at the laboratory where the complete reflection characteristics of samples of projection screens can be measured on a specially constructed instrument, a nominal charge being made.

To Erect Theatres in Michigan City

After long negotiations for the purchase of property at Michigan City, Indiana, the Michigan City Theatre Corporation has acquired a site, and announcement has been made that work on the construction of a house, to be called the Tivoli will be started at once. Plans are being drawn by Architects Newhouse and Bernham of Chicago. The theatre will have a capacity of about 1600. It is planned to have office rooms and shops on the second floor of the building.

Large Movie House for New Britain

Fred C. Walz, Hartford, Conn., architect, is preparing plans for a large and modernly equipped theatre building, to be erected by S. Shenberg at New Britain, Conn. The entrance of the theatre, which will have a seating capacity of 3,000, will be on Main street, while the theatre building proper will be in the rear. Plans are also included for adding two additional stories to the present one-story building on Main street in front of the theatre, the second story of which will contain 27 offices and the top floor a large assembly hall. The Main street building and the new theatre site occupy the area upon which the historic Landers homestead was until recently located—AGARD.

A New and Better Method of Laying Linoleum and Cork Carpet

HARDLY less important than the quality of the materials themselves is the manner in which Battleship Linoleum and Cork Carpet are laid. If this work is not done properly, maximum service from the floor is impossible.

When we placed an unequivocal money-back guarantee on all Gold-Seal Linoleums and Gold-Seal Cork Carpets, we took the first great step toward complete user satisfaction.

Now we have taken the second and final step. We have worked out a method of laying these Gold-Seal products which insures maximum service on the floor.

This new method was developed by our experts after consultation with experienced architects and floor-covering contractors — after many months spent in thorough investigation of the results obtained by various methods of laying. From the mass of accurate information thus secured, the new Gold-Seal Specification for Laying was evolved. It is clear and exact in every detail, and covers every ordinary condition. In the event of unusual conditions, not covered by our specifications, call upon our flooring experts for free assistance and co-operation.

When you incorporate this new specification in your flooring contract you are assured of two things—(1) the highest grade materials —Gold-Seal products backed by an out-and-out money-back guarantee—(2) that these materials will be laid by a method that makes perfect results a certainty.

Why not be sure? Let us send you copies of the Gold-Seal Specification for laying Battleship Linoleum or Cork Carpet.

Danger of Faulty Perspective in Use of One and a Half Inch Focus Camera Lens

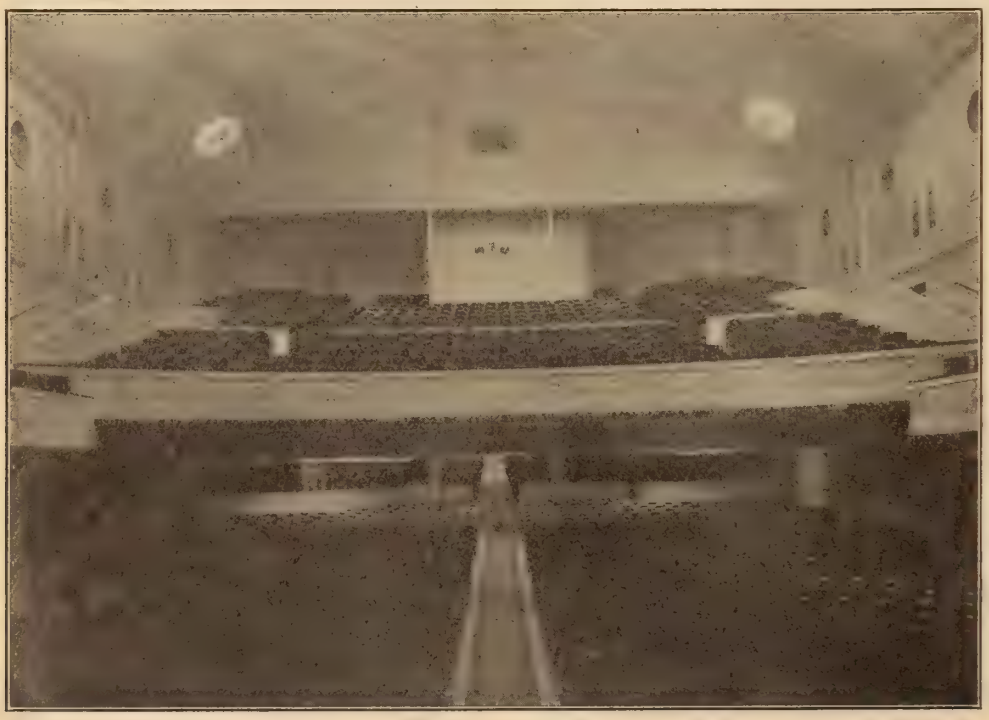
Wide Aperture Taking Lenses Embracing Large Angle of View Will Make Film Picture Unnatural

By Colin N. Bennett, F.C.S., F.R.P.S.

A cosy corner in Greater Crystal Palace theatre, Christ Church, New Zealand. Not far behind the American metropolitan theatres in style

In the early days, kinematography was blessed by a limitation imposed upon lens makers whereby they found it impossible to supply us with extra-wide aperture taking lenses embracing at all a wide angle of view. From the first we could have had a lens working at F6.5 that covered an angle of forty degrees, but the F6.5 lens was too slow. We had to stick out for F4.5 at the very least, and F3.5 if possible.

So we got lenses which gave us our required rapidity though covering an angle of less than thirty degrees. Those were miserably narrow angles we got with our two-inch, two-and-a-half-inch and three-inch kine. camera lenses. They were not at all what some of us had been accustomed to in still view work. Nevertheless, we put up bravely with our disability and soon we (metaphorically) scratched our heads on finding how much nicer and more natural were scenic views thrown on the projection screen than those others of the same beauty spots previously photographed by us on plates with our still cameras, and of which the prints were stuck in our show albums. Was the difference all decided by presence or absence of movement? Far from it, much of the distinctive charm of all kinematography has arisen from the very circumstance of our having generally in the past been forced to use taking lenses having focus of two or two-and-a-half inches and upwards.



Main view of house looking from stage, Greater Crystal Palace theatre, Christ Church, New Zealand

Unlike our beautiful forty to fifty degree mid-rapidity still view lenses, these kine. lenses have possessed the inestimable quality of seeing things very much as they are seen by our own natural eyesight. Our eyes embrace a view angle not usually much over sixteen degrees. This angle exactly corresponds with the one subtended by a three-and-a-half-inch lens over the area of a kine. film picture. A two-and-a-half-inch lens subtends an angle with the film of about twenty-two degrees, still not enormously greater than our own natural viewing angle. For that reason, and for that reason alone, have moving pictures themselves been so uniformly natural in their rendering of prospective. Who has ever seen glaringly unnatural perspective rendering in a film picture? Yet the circumstance that it is not seen is entirely to the credit of the lens, and not to the credit of the cameraman in the least. All this applies more or less to all lenses of two inches focus and upwards..

Today we seem to be entering upon an era of the increasingly general use of the one-and-a-half-inch focus kine. camera lens. With its popularization for moving picture photography, that long unbroken immunity of ours from faulty perspective rendering stands in danger of breaking down. The one-and-a-half-inch lens subtends across the width of a film picture an angle of thirty-seven degrees, enough to be mischievous on occasion, and enough to be subtly less natural on all occasions in close perspective rendering than those longer focus lenses we worked with in the past. Admittedly, along with its disability the one-and-a-half-inch lens brings to us an enormous corresponding advantage of a very practical kind.

At an aperature of F4 it allows of being worked at one single fixed focus for all objects between infinity and rather under ten feet from the kinematograph camera. The bare idea of working with a camera having a wide aperature lens which allows of us setting it once for all, and subsequently never having to bother about focus again for all ordinary scenics, topicals, studio long-shots and three-quarters, is a thought full of welcome relief from

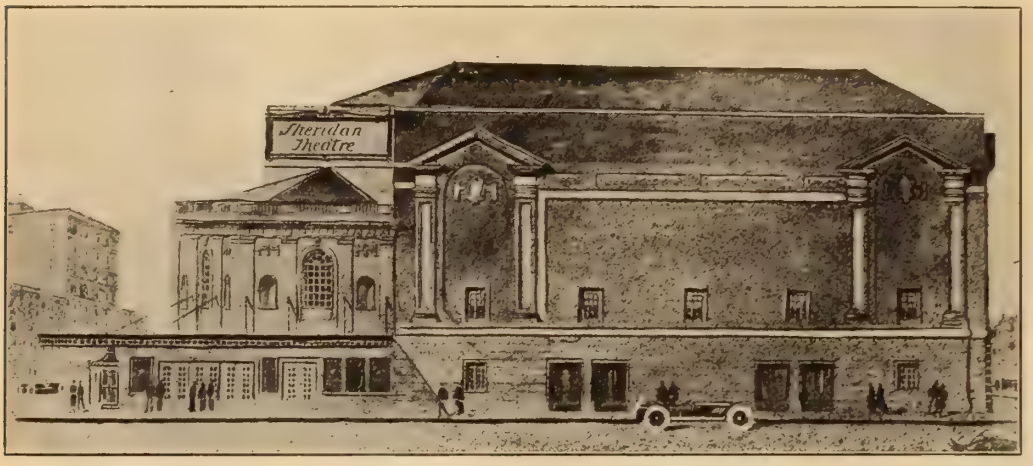
New Triangular Sheridan Theatre of New York Embodies Many Unusual Features

Cross-ways Sunk Below Level of Seats Eliminates Disturbing Patrons

The completion of the Sheridan Theatre, on Seventh avenue, at Twelfth street and Greenwich avenue, marks the first invasion in Greenwich Village by a motion picture theatre. In fact, this is the first theatre especially erected for pictures south of Forty-second street.

Max Spiegel, president of the Sheridan Theatre Co., thinks the Village needs the youngest and most vigorous art taken into the large family of arts already settled there, and so at a cost of $700,000 put up this temple to the silent drama which covers an entire triangular block.



Sheridan theatre, New York

There is a large sixty-foot dome over the auditorium, decorated in the early Italian Renaissance, which style is carried out in the entire building. One of the newest innovations is the cross-way which traverses the width of the theatre and allows the late arrivals as well as the early departures to exit and enter the theatre without disturbing those already seated. This is done by having the cross-ways sunk below the level of the seats which border them, and thus are below the vision of patrons already seated.

The first seat is forty feet from the screen and the theatre will accommodate 2,700. The general tone is green, ivory and gold.

Edwin T. Emery has been appointed managing-director and already has cornered the chorus market by picking the prettiest and most attractive girls for ushers. This was done that the new idea of uniforms might be carried to the best advantage, for the ushers are to wear Beau Brummel breeches, strapped tightly under the instep. With this is worn a velvet artist's smock and a velvet artist's cap. Mr. Emery has many other novelties to introduce which will soon make the Sheridan a mecca for the uptown theatre folk as well as form a community centre in the Village.

The Sheridan is Simplex equipped.

Fox Invades Coast Field

The William Fox interests will construct a million-dollar picture house at Broadway near Nineteenth Street, Oakland, Cal. According to the A. C. Blumenthal Co., of San Francisco, who represents the Fox interests, the house will be opened in about six months. Plans are being prepared by Weeks & Day and Maury Diggs, architects.

New Chicago Theatre to Seat 5,000

The theatre under construction at North State and Lake Streets, Chicago, Ill., will be named The Chicago, according to the announcement of Sam Katz, president of Balaban & Katz. The new house will be one of the largest in the world, having a seating capacity of 5,000. The Chicago will be opened early in the fall.

Selecting the Screen

Of course, the various combinations of these three colors make green, orange, violet and a score of other tints and shades. Just use your own knowledge of projected light and remember our reference to the sunlight striking the snow.

Here's the proof: Throw your light frame down on your screen and freeze your carbons; you can read the color scale just as easily as we can. At 5 feet the light color is violet, 25 feet purple, 50 feet red, 75 feet orange, 100 feet dark yellow, 125 feet light yellow, 150 feet very light yellow, 175 feet white yellow. Thus you can easily see how the various sizes of pictures, various lengths of throw and the known variation in color characteristics of A. C. and D. C. light change the color of the projected light at the point of contact.

In addition to this, wide house conditions require expert color shading. More than sixty distinctly different formulas, ranging in surface color from a dark reddish gold to a very light shade of yellow, are used to meet the various conditions described. The surface color of the screen we build must match perfectly the color of the light at point of contact. The texture of surface finish must vary from a fine grain to a roughness that will harmonize and utilize the side angle reflection which practically eliminates the fadeaway and distortion when viewing the picture from an extreme angle.

others further back, while generally the cove system is employed in the cornice, each side of the proscenium arch and the base of the major dome that represents Music and Drama.

The top of the stage frame and cycloramas on each side are draped in mulberry, trimmed with gold. The box seats are upholstered in art needle tapestry. Six Ionic columns, tinted in sienna with big pilasters at the corners, are under the half circle over the stage.

Chris Evenson of the house staff simply dotes on the mezzanine. The promenade is 42 x 97 feet and a well, 18 x 38 feet, opens in the center into the main floor. Built on the order of a pergola, the well has large Ionic columns surrounding it and a wrought iron art designed railing. Tope velvet covers the promenade, which is furnished in Louis VI, Needle Point and Old English furniture. Lace, with a border of gold-edged mulberry velour, hangs from the windows in the rear. Pilasters, potted plants and a cove lighting system, with a large chandelier, help to make the place one of soft beauty. Restrooms for men and women measure 12 x 30 feet each and are equipped with suction fans.

Measuring 18 x 24 feet, the projection room is over the balcony. On one side is a rest room and on the other a rewinding room that is 6 x 8 feet. Three Baird Projection Machines of 3,000 feet capacity, two rheostats, for either high or low amperes, and one ammeter, are used. They are operated from three wired direct current of 120-140 voltage. There are two Spot Lights in the room.

To the Rembush Crystal Gold Fibre Screen, the throw is 145 feet. The screen is 16 x 21 feet and receives a picture 19.6 x 14.6 feet.

A feature of the projection room is a switch in the wall that controls machines, lights and motors.

In less than two minutes the air in the house is changed by the Monsoon system of fans which throw 1,000,000 cubic feet of breeze. Used either for exhaust or suction, two fans, 12 feet each in diameter, driven by a 30-horse power electric motor, are behind the lattice work in the proscenium arch. In the same space also are two 7-foot diameter fans for only blowing in. In winter heated coils can be used to warm the air.

Thirty 16 inch six blade noiseless oscillating fans are in the auditorium. The mezzanine promenade 5-foot diameter exhaust fan serves also the balcony. Over the mezzanine ceiling are twin 5-foot fans for seasonal use and there are twin 7-foot fans, driven by 10 horse power motors, in the top of the auditorium. All are speed controlled.

"The results are highly gratifying," declares J. F. Dusman, who was in charge of the electrical work. "Numerous compliments have been paid to the engineer for his innovations, especially regarding the stage switchboard. This is operated from back stage, controls all the auditorium lighting save safety and projection room lights, has rubber silencers, with a spring, which assure noiseless and positive action and has all wiring in metal boxes and pipe work.

The stage lighting is in amber, red, white and blue, while that for the house is in red, blue and amber. A branch panel switchboard is in a check room under the stairs in the foyer. It controls the house lighting and has a monitor double throw automatic switch for emergency, which, in connection with either the north or south side supply of the house system, nullifies the effect of a blown fuse or similar happenings.

"Some idea of the size of the Century can be conveyed when one thinks of the fact that the main steel girder weighs 40 tons and was shipped to Baltimore in four parts," said William M. Whitehurst, son of the president of the company who is chief assistant to his father. The young man, with Mr. DeHoff, takes a great pride in the playhouse and both of them stress the bookings as "always the best to be had."

Three large boilers are in the Century's heating plant. Their installation was a feat, it is

Operating Advantages of GE Compensares

1. Steady, strong arc.
2. Easily operates two arcs at the same time for change-over.
3. Quiet arc strike and quick settle-down.
4. Self-regulating arc voltage.
5. Current stays at set value.
6. Current easily raised and lowered.
7. Cannot be damaged by short circuit.
8. Fading made easy.
9. Not affected by changes in current conditions.
10. Quiet in operation.

GE Compensarcs Insures Ideal Screen Illumination

Excellence in screen illumination is measured partly by the brilliancy but particularly by the constancy of the light. Steady light is dependent upon steady current. GE compensarcs maintain the current at a set value, thus eliminating flickering or variations in intensity.

To maintain this constant screen illumination, however, it is necessary to raise or lower the amount of current delivered to the projection machine, on account of the varying densities of films. A colored film, for instance, will require much heavier current than the average, while a cartoon will require much less. With the GE compensarc, the current can be set at the proper rate before the film is started by the turning of a single knob on the panel.

Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable—GE offices or distributors everywhere for prompt deliveries and service

Crandall Theatrical Enterprises Resume Their Expansion Program

House for Colored Patrons Being Erected— Plans Also Being Made for $500,000 Theatre

The expansion of the Harry M. Crandall theatrical enterprises in Washington, D. C., temporarily given pause during the war and the period of business abnormality that folled the signing of the Armistice, has been resumed with a vengeance.

Two new building projects are occupying the attention of the Crandall organization at present. Crandall's Lincoln theatre, a house for the exclusive patronage of colored residents of the Capital, who have never been afforded adequate facilities for enjoying photodramatic entertainment, is already in course of construction at the corner of Twelfth and U streets, Northwest, exactly in the center of the most densely populated colored district in the city. In addition to this undertaking, announcement was made from the offices of the Crandall company last Saturday of the purchase of the Sacred Heart Church property at the corner of Fourteenth street and Park Road, Northwest, for the erection of the largest residential theatre in the National Capital, to cost approximately $500,000. The purchase price of the ground, with its present improvements of church edifice and rectory is said to have been in the neighborhood of $200,000. The Sacred Heart church holdings thus acquired by Mr. Crandall form the ninth link in his chain of photoplay houses in Washington has a frontage of 200 feet on Fourteenth street and 100 feet on Park Road, occupying practically the entire Fourteenth street block between Park Road and Monroe street, the most choice site in the city for its contemplated purpose.

The plans for the new theatre, which have already been prepared by Reginald W. Geare, the Washington architect who also designed Crandall's Metropolitan, Knickerbocker and York theatres in the Capital, Crandall's Strand in Cumberland, Md., and Crandall's Apollo in Martinsburg, W. Va., call for an auditorium with a seating capacity of 2,000 on one floor.

The entrance to the theatre will be directly on the corner of Fourteenth street and Park Road, thus permitting electrical announcements visible from both directions on both streets.

The lobbies will be spacious and the equipment the most beautiful and most modern to be had. The lighting system has been especially devised and exclusively designed for the house and the most efficient heating and ventilating plants will, of course, be installed.

In addition to the theatre, the new building will house ten stores, facing Fourteenth street and extending from the Park Road corner to within a few feet of the corner of Monroe street.

The most notable innovation connected with the latest Crandall project lies in the novel use to which the sub-street level of the theatre building will be put. The entire area under the auditorium of the theatre will be devoted to billiard, pool and bowling parlors, which will be operated on distinctly new lines for the enjoyment of both ladies and gentlemen. It is probable that the store frontage will be surmounted on the Fourteenth street side by an immense assembly hall and ballroom.

The success of the new Crandall theatre is virtually assured by reason of Mr. Crandall's ownership of the Washington franchise of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and the power to buy advantageously in the open market possessed by the Crandall organization which is the largest motion-picture exhibitor organization in the Washington territory, operating twelve theatres at the present time.

The opening of the new house with two blocks of Crandall's Savoy theatre will not occasion the abandonment of the Savoy. Both theatres will be operated as individual units in the Crandall chain and each will display the foremost pictures made with full orchestral accompaniment.

Music is to be made a distinctive feature of the program policy of the new theatre, which will have the finest symphony orchestra ever placed in a residential house.

The new Crandall enterprise, it is confidently believed, will have the effect of appreciably stimulating business activity and property values in the section of the Northwest Washington of which the corner of Fourteenth street and Park Road may be said to be the hub. It is pointed out that the opening of Crandall's Knickerbocker theatre at Eighteenth street and Columbia Road, Northwest, inaugurated a business development in that locality that has not yet run its course. The spread of business in four directions from the Knickerbocker corner has resulted in material advances in property values. It is held that the same expansion and proportionate increase in values will follow the erection of the new Crandall house at Fourteenth street and Park Road, which is now close to the northern physical boundry of the upper Fourteenth street business district, but in trade volume and active growth actually the center.

Construction work on the ninth Crandall theatre in Washington will be begun immediately upon the vacation of the property by the church.

While the name of the new playhouse has not been definitely decided upon, it is probable that it will be known as Crandall's Victoria.

Crandall's Lincoln theatre, like the new fourteenth street project, will embrace more than the mere erection of a place of theatrical amusement. The theatre proper will be the handsomest and most commodious house for colored patronage in the Capital and will adhere to a first-run policy that has never been possible in the cases of the pitiful little "shooting galleries" into which the colored populace heretofore has been forced. Here, too, will be installed a large symphony orchestra recruited from the best colored talent in the Capital. Over the auditorium will be a mammoth ballroom capable of accommodating huge crowds and, as in the case of the Victoria, other levels in the building will be devoted to billiard, pool and bowling parlors.

Crandall's Lincoln theatre will be under the personal management of Rufus J. Byers, the best known, most experienced and most capable colored showman in the District of Columbia. It will be ready for dedication to the uses of the public in December, construction work being rapidly carried on under the supervision of Reginald W. Geare, the designing architect.

A. E. Milligan, proprietor of the Liberty moving picture theatre, Schuylerville, is starting to construct a new house in that town. The theatre will have a capacity of 600.

Attractive Rialto theatre at Deer Lodge, Montana

All Latest Devices in Deer Lodge House

With the completion of the Rialto theatre at Deer Lodge, Montana, Manager Hansen, a well known Western distributor associated with the industry for many years, is well satisfied that his latest theatre was modernly equipped in every detail.

The Rialto is a highly attractive theatre, having a seating capacity of a little more than nine hundred, and for neatness and completeness of equipment it is on the par with any moving picture house in the country.

In building Mr. Hansen enlisted the services of Benjamin F. Shearer, President of the Western Theatre Equipment Company, in order to have an entirely modern projection room. The projection room of the Rialto is fitted out with Simplex equipment.

Two of the latest type motor driven machines, along with a transverter and Gardiner screen, were installed. Mr. Hansen is well pleased with his projection room equipment.

Rush Work on Pittsburg Theatres

The Rowland & Clark Theatres have announced the completion of the purchase, last week, of the property at 335-337 Fifth Ave., Pittsburg, occupied by the Clinton Hotel, at a price reported to be in excess of $600,000. The deal was closed by James B. Clark of the R. & C. Theatres and Walter M. Wechler of New York.

Plans for the new structure have been completed and contracts awarded by W. E. Snaman, the architect, for one of the most beautiful smaller type houses in this country. Work on razing the present building will commence about the first week of September.

It is contemplated to have this theatre open for the public by about January 1st, which will place a precedent in the records of theatrical construction. The theatre will be under the management of the R. & C. Theatres who at present control the following theatres: Liberty, Savoy, Regent, Plaza, Belmar, Strand, Arsenal, Oakland in Pittsburg, the Rowland and Colonial in Wilkinsburg, The Strand of Erie, The Star and Regent theatres of New Kensington, and a number of other large theatres throughout this territory.—WHEELER.

Odds and Ends

The King theatre, formerly owned by William Batsel, at Sherman, Tex., has been reopened by H. O. Jones, who recently purchased the theatre.

The Majestic theatre at Rotan, Tex., recently installed its own light plant on account of failure to obtain satisfactory service from the local power house.

The Welch theatre at Welck, Okla., was purchased last week by J. B. Grindle & Sons. Col. W. E. Bonner, the former owner is going to resume farming.

The local office of Associated Producers is now in their new home on Main street, Dallas, Tex., sharing one-half of the new exchange building occupied by Robertson-Cole branch.

balanced, while running, at a speed upwards of 12,000 R. P. M., and this accounts for the fact that there is no vibration in the camera while operating the ultra-speed attachment and that the operation of it is performed by one man without the assistance of any one steadying or holding the camera or the tripod. Without this fine degree of balancing it would be impossible to attain the speed of 12,000 r. p. m. with any instrument without causing so much vibration as to make it impossible to crank or without having a specially built support to hold the mechanism on the ground. Consider, on the other hand, that the pictures Miller made were with the ordinary tripod, the ordinary camera, and without any assistance.

"I have seen the results of Mr. Miller's work and I must say that I have never seen anything to compare with them anywhere. The photography was as clear, sharp, and steady as that of any normal speed work ever screened. I think the Rothacker organization should be complimented on producing such a high quality of work at what would ordinarily be considered an impossibility with a normal operating camera."

Danger of Faulty Perspective worry and harassment to any cameraman. All of us shall appreciate how great that measure of relief might, on occasion, be.

Still, before becoming wed to the one-and-a-half-inch lens, it would be well also to remember that with the obvious gain in simplicity of working there is that slight, yet none the less definite loss of one major essential to pictorial quality which in the past has been a very great, though a totaly undeserved, asset of the moving picture man. Some day we may see the coming of the one inch F4 kine. camera anastigmat. I pray that day may be far off. When it arrives it will bring with it a lens which, even for close-ups, need never, after its initial setting, be focussed at all. At the same time, it will bring the total loss of that natural view angle which all along up to now has counted for so much more than we ever realized.—Kinematograph Weekly, England

Improve Kinema

Many improvements have been made at the Kinema since its management was taken over by W. W. Whitson, who also operates the Plaza and the California. The interior has been refinished, redecorated and refitted. Two new Powers machines have been installed. Potted plants and palms have been arranged about the house, and indirect lighting has been installed. Russell Rogers has general charge of this and the other houses belonging to Mr. Whitson—S. D.

Work on Dallas House Progressing

Work is proceeding rapidly on the Melba Theatre, which is being erected at 1911-1913 Elm street, Dallas, Texas. The building is expected to be completed and ready for opening by Christmas, George W. Hewitt, the contractor, reports. The building is being erected at a cost of one million dollars by John T. and Jesse Jones of Houston, and is intended to be the finest theatre west of the Mississippi River.

It will be six stories high, strictly fireproof and modern in every detail. The front will be finished in white brick, granite and terra cotta. The seating capacity will be 3,000.

Plans have been made for a formal opening Christmas Day.—Noble.

Many Southeast Houses Are Renovating

The Gem theatre, at Greenville, Tenn., is in the throes of a complete overhauling. Two Simplex machines, a Minusa screen, new lobby display and much fresh paint are all parts of the re-decorating program for this fine little house.

Mudd & Colley, prominent in the theatrical firmament of Birmingham, are installing elaborate new lobby displays.

Carson Bradford, well known in the Southeast, is rushing the work on his new theatre at Miami, and expects a theatre equal to any in the Land of Flowers.

Arthur Lucas' new theatre in Savannah is going to be "a thing of beauty and a joy forever." Mr. Lucas is head of the American Theatres' Corporation, and has some big plans for the coming Fall and winter in this territory.—Gaddis.

Defer Theatre Erection

Giving the continued high cost of building as the cause, Goldstein Brothers Amusement Company of Springfield, Mass., operators of a chain of theatres in western and central Massachusetts, has at least temporarily abandoned plans for construction of an elaborate motion picture house on the recently acquired Roberts lot on King street. Instead a frontage of stores will be put up jointly by the Goldsteins and parties from whom they acquired the property. The structure to be put up by the Goldsteins will have a depth of 40 feet and a deep alcove to contain the theatre, at some indefinitely later date.—Agard.

New Strand theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., latest of the chain of the West Coast Theatres, Inc.

With Oklahoma Movies

M. L. Sternburg, of Oklahoma City, has purchased the Dreamland theatre at Morris, Okla., from W. A. Wilson and is now in charge. Many improvements have recently been made in both the interior and exterior.

Roy Bettis, a salesman for Robertson-Cole, out of Oklahoma City, two years ago, has returned from the West Coast and associated himself with Vitagraph as salesman.

The Lewis theatre opened at Wynona, Okla., last week.

That the film industry in Oklahoma is picking up is evidenced by the fact that the exchanges are adding new salesmen and office force people. Former employes let out on account of business being quiet, have been re-instated.

Fred Morley and Paul Walker, joint owners and managers of the Beggs theatre, at Beggs, Okla., transacted business on Film Row in Oklahoma City the first of the week.

The New American theatre, Will H. Evans, manager, will open at Bonham, Tex., in the near future—Noble.

Take Over Texas House

Brockman Brothers have again taken over the Queen theatre at McKinney, Tex., and will operate the same. The theatre had been sold recently to K. D. Keating, who is retiring from the show business.

The F. B. Warren Corp. will move to their new home at 1812½ Commerce street, Dallas, Tex., the first of the week.

The interior of the Grand theatre at Conway, Ark., has been refinished and redecorated. The walls are painted gray with pink panels. A cream colored ceiling and dark oak wainscoting are also a part of the scheme.

B. W. Bickett is establishing a new movie theatre at Thibadaux, La., which, with the Community theatre, taken over at Donaldson, last week, will make a chain of 51 houses that Mr. Bickert and associates operates.

Lenses Stand Test

After submitting the new Paramount Condenser Lenses to a very rigid test the projection staff of the large Capitol theatre of New York City obtained good results and endorse the condenser. The lenses withstood amperage varying 140 to 150 for weeks without discoloration, and with a minimum of breakage due to sudden draft during experimental work. The tests were conducted under Chief Projectionist Arthur J. Smith.

Big Improvement Reported by Dealer

The accessory business is showing a marked improvement, according to Manager Benson, of the Amusement Supply Co., Chicago, who states that domestic inquiries and orders showed a decided increase in volume during the last month, and that foreign inquiries are coming in in surprising quantities, one of the most recent orders to be shipped out going to the Azores.

Among the theatres recently equipped by Amusement Supply Co. are the Palace theatre, Mendota, Ill., which put in a battery of two Motiograph De Luxe, and also purchased their entire booth equipment from the Amusement Supply Co. At the Palace, Astoria, Illinois, two Motiograph De Luxe machines, a gold fiber screen and entire booth equipment have been installed preparatory to reopening of the theatre by John Wharley. The handsome new Arcade theatre at Indianapolis is another house in which Motiographs have been installed and the entire equipment, including seats, was furnished by Amusement. The Regent theatre of St. Marys, O., another new house has had two Motiographs put in and the entire theatre equipment, including seats and a Hertner Transverter installed by the Chicago concern. This theatre is being erected by Thomas Broad and will be opened within a few days.

Remodel Hippodrome

The Hippodrome theatre, at Wilson, Okla., will be remodelled and refurnished throughout, arrangements having been made for a complete change in the building. One thousand opera chairs with air cushions will be placed in the theatre. A new floor and roof will be added, making a change from airdome to theatre, and electric fans installed.

Todd & Benson have leased the Majestic theatre at Magnolia, Ark., from Dale Dodson, and have taken charge.

George Edwards has opened his new airdome at Booneville, Ark.

The Big Bend theatre has been opened at Alpine, Tex., with M. M. Myers, owner and J. C. Scott, manager—Noble.

The Aris theatre, the latest addition to movie houses in Erie, Pa., opened recently. The new theatre has a seating capacity of 800 and was erected at a cost of $85,000. F. T. Egan is the manager.—Wheeler.

Screen Club Meeting

Two film managers of the Oklahoma City Screen Club talked at the last club meeting. Fred Pickrell, of Pathe, discussed the subject, "Have We Real Salesmen in Our Industry?" and H. W. Beddee, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, discussed, "Should Exchange Managers Co-operate with the Exhibitors?"

The luncheon was well attended notwithstanding the great heat and absence from the city of a large number of film salesmen—Noble.

New Newark Theatre to Cost $300,000

Ground has been broken by the Central Amusement Co. at Central avenue and South Eighth streets, Newark for a $300,000 moving picture house. It is planned to make the theatre a duplicate of the Rialto at Broad street, Newark. Frank Grad is the architect. The house which will seat 2,100 patrons, is being erected by Samuel Bratter and Samuel Pollock, who have twelve theatres, and Julius Amsterdam and Fred Nieberg.

Remodeled Kinema Theatre Opens

The re-opening of the Kinema theatre of the West Coast Theatre Companys, Inc., Los Angeles recently, was participated in by an exceptional gathering of screen notables who were very complimentary respecting the remodelling and redecorating of the theatre under the direction of Messrs. Gore Bros. and Lesser.

During the ten days the Kinema theatre was closed the entire decoration scheme was changed, the stage enlarged, new proscenium arch installed and material changes made in the lighting system which adds to the beauty and attractiveness of the house. In short, the theatre is new in every respect except the outer walls and the changes made are most attractive. The Kinema is the initial home of First National attractions in Los Angeles.

generally admitted. Vento Indirect radiators, the product of the American Radiator Company, which are connected with the fan system, pass the warm air into the auditorium.

Prof. E. V. Cupero in charge of the orchestra has 30 musicians under him.

"It has been figured that the Century's motion picture facilities, with the roof theatre that will be completed in the fall, will have a weekly capacity of 75,000 persons," said President Whitehurst. Then Mr. DeHoff added in an unobtrusive manner that the combined Whitehurst interests in a week can accommodate about one-half the white population of Baltimore's 750,000. Both men were seen in the offices, partitioned in compartments and furnished in quiet, practical style, which are back from the mezzanine floor.—COOPER.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

Pathe Review No. 120

(One Reel Subject—Released Through Pathe Exchanges)

THERE are some queer looking fish in this world. Pathe shows some underwater scenes in this Review to prove it. One looks like a Woolworth flowerpot and another like a dish of spaghetti. Next comes an interesting study of the cork-making process. Views are shown from the time the cork bark arrives at the factory, until they are ready to ship. The editor has nobly resisted the temptation to crack a prohibition joke in regard to the present small demand for them.

Other sequences include "The Cliff Road to Switzerland," which, in Pathe color, gives a fair presentation of the wonderful beauties of Lake Lucerne. Robert Aitken, N. A., a famous sculptor, is seen at work, and marble cutting and moulding with clay will be interesting sights for the uninitiated. Some slow motion scenes show animals running, ducks fluttering and lips snapping. It is a diversified and thoroughly interesting reel.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"My Lady o' the Pines"

(Holman Day Production—Two Reels—Released by Pathe)

THIS story of the machinations of an unscrupulous lumber camp foreman and his final undoing by the hero, in a short reel drama that should prove acceptable for the average program, and satisfy, if not enthuse the audience. The plot is not modern, but it brings in all the necessary characters—the girl, the hero and the conspiring lumberjacks. There is a fight over disputed forest land and eventually a battle between two gangs of workmen. More dynamite than fists is used, many sticks of the explosive being tossed about. There is also a well-made scene showing a race between two freight carriages. This story is set against a Maine background and has many picturesque exteriors.

Mary Astor, the leading lady, is an exceptionally pretty heroine. Huntley Gordon plays the leading male role. The picture was directed by Philip Carle and was made under the supervision of Holman Day. MATTHEW A. TAYLOR

"Snooky's Twin Troubles"

(Chester—Snooky—Federated Comedy)

"SNOOKY'S TWIN TROUBLES" presents Chester's well-known monkey-actor in a series of clever stunts and amusing situations. The fans that like animal comedies will probably find this one entirely satisfactory as a piece of entertainment. The last part has some thrills and gives the "humanzee" an opportunity for some intricate action.

The opening shots are palpably intended to show how well Snooky can "act." Then a story is launched in which the monkey shares honors with two attractive youngsters in the roles of Policeman Casey's twins. Town officers prize for the best twins. Villain abducts the twins and carries them off to contest where he poses as their father and presents them as candidates. Snooky, magnifying glass in hand, trails scoundrel and exposes him just as he is about to claim prize. Villain flees in auto with a trailer in tow; in the trailer are the twins, unobserved. Snooky pursues mounted on a donkey, and riding in true chevalier fashion. Villain discovers twins; he cuts the tow rope, and the trailer with children clinging to its side is precipated over edge of cliff. Snooky arrives, seizes loose end of rope, and stays descent of the trailer. Bull, fastened to stake, is grazing nearby. Snooky secures loose end of trailer rope to the rope by which bull is fastened to stake. Waves red handkerchief in front of bull, who charges, thus dragging trailer from its perilous position.

They're going to laugh; they're going to thrill a bit too at Snooky's closing performance. Length, two reels.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Pinched"

(Harold Lloyd Re-Issue—Two Reels—Released by Pathe Exchanges)

THE length of Bebe Daniels' skirts is one of the few things about this re-issue which betrays that the comedy is not new. Harold Lloyd was not as humorous in the days when he played with Miss Daniels and "Snub" Pollard as he is to-day, but "Pinched" is an excellent subject for any program. There is very often little or no excuse for some of the gags—the story being considered of little importance—but they are refreshing, laughable gags. The Lloyd personality is always in evidence.

"Snub" and Bebe are married. Lloyd, in trouble with the police, sheds his coat and spectacles, which are found and used by "Snub." In the complications which follow, Lloyd makes his way through the wall of his prison cell only to find that he has escaped into the police court. "Pinched" is far ahead of many of the slapsticks of to-day in originality of gags—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

Kineto Review No. 100

(Kineto Co. of America—Released through National Exchanges)

THIS review is sub-titled "Science at Home" and deals entirely with chemical experiments and a few of a mechanical nature. Everyone in the least way familiar with a chemical laboratory knows the peculiar and unnatural results when various chemicals are mixed. For example, the adding of thiocyanate of ammonium to a salt of mercury. The resudt is an expansion hard to realize. The sub-titles never depart from their strict scientific language.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"On Their Way"

(Hal Roach Comedy—One Reel—Released by Pathe)

EDDIE BOLAND buys a versatile Ford and takes his wife on a camping trip, and the result is a rapidly-moving slapstick comedy. There is some new business with the Ford, which is saying a great deal, for recently Henry has been used just as much by slapstick artists as the custard pie was in bygone days. The Ford contains all kitchen utensils, and underneath the rear set are the chickens who supply the eggs. Some gypsies and a gang of tramps provide the material for the slapstick. Eddie Boland is an active husband, and Ethel Broadhurst a pretty wife. The picture ends with a well-made wind storm. The wind blows the mud-guards off the car, then the body, and finally the chassis disappears.

—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Love Egg"

(Two-Reel Punch Comedy—Released by Educational)

THIS is a fast moving slap-stick two-reeler with Louise Fazenda, Chester Conklin and other erstwhile Mack Sennettians contributing about equally in the fun making.

There is nothing particularly new about the offering but most of the gags have been made to look original and even the chase stuff has new angles.

The tag of the picture contains some of as good trick thrill scenes as have ever been put in a comedy. Two aeroplanes apparently are flying one above the other. A dog jumps from one to the other and returns with the "che-ild" in his mouth. As a sample of trick photography it ranks with the best of the day.

The picture is suitable for any program. It may even give some of the less sophisticated a thrill in the sequence devoted to the aeroplane chase.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Spot Cash"

("Snub" Pollard-Pathe—One Reel)

THIS is a real funny "Snub" Pollard comedy with the star in the role of a country grocery clerk.

In the opening scenes Pollard is a very busy young grocer who introduces many innovations in dealing with his customers. These scenes are humorous and good for laughs anywhere.

For contrast a big man is introduced and when the opportune moment arrives the latter gets his gang together and removes most of "Snub's" goods to a vacant store next door.

When the customers arrive and he finds the demand exceeds the supply (and here a novel piece of business is introduced which is good for a few big laughs) he tears the wall apart and pulls the canned goods from the shelves and pleasingly supplies their desires.

The scenes that follow are full of "gags" and amusing moments which will make any audience forget the hot spell were they living in Africa.

Book this one and you will make no mistake.—FRANK LEONARD.

"A Country Chicken"

(Two-Reel Comedy—Released by Educational)

"A COUNTRY CHICKEN," while not an uproariously funny comedy, is an interesting concoction of reasonably new gags, in which Louise Fazenda, Chester Conklin and the erstwhile Sennett dog figure extensively. As a star the dog grabs the acting honors. Miss Fazenda and Mr. Conklin score, but it is the incident and action provided by the vehicle more than anything else which puts their scenes over. The picture is filmed in a fast and furious tempo and should interest all the fans who like slap stick. It is clean and contains nothing vugar.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"THE CUP OF LIFE"
(Thomas H. Ince-Associated Producers)

Colorful and Interesting in Every Department

THE Ince-Bosworth combination is at it again, which means that a picture is presented which carries all the earmarks of success. Not since "Below the Surface" has this duo co-operated and "The Cup of Life" is as brimful of action, incident, adventure and romance. It is a story of the deep and Oriental cunning, which assures the spectator of the fact that there is something doing every minute. While the plot sticks to the briny deep there is quite a suggestion of Jack London about it. But the author has not plagiarized because he has had the foresight to provide a series of melodramatic exploits which have none of London's marks upon them.

The photography is genuinely distinctive and will certainly impress everyone particularly in those scenes which have to do with pearl diving. In fact the opening shot is a thriller and suspense is real acute as Bosworth goes to the depths to kill a shark. Again the tinting of the night scenes calls for praise of the highest order. The plot develops around Kipling's memorable wheeze—"East Is East and West Is West," etc., when it strikes its stride and concerns the winning of a white girl who has been brought up since babyhood by a powerful mandarin. Bosworth again enacts a picturesque son of the sea—a skipper not quite as vividly brutal as his Sea Wolf, but one which is rugged enough to be remembered as one of his best portrayals. But sterling actor that he is, there is no question that he will have to share honors with Tully Marshall as the wily Chink, who demonstrates after a season spent in insignificent roles that, given a worthy role, he can put over character work in a class by himself. His Oriental is remarkably faithful and colorful.

The plot is a trifle hazy in regard to the skipper hiding his identity from the youth. But one has no time to pay attention to minor flaws, so adventurous is the line of action and so picturesque, the backgrounds. The scenes take one through a verisimilitude of life as it is lived in Singapore. There is no indication of studio sets about them. The result is the spectator is seeing lifelike adventure. The Chinese wedding scene is colorful to the extreme and the incident which presents the conflict of Occident versus Orient builds a good flavor of suspense. In all "The Cup of Life" is a picture above the average and well worth anyone's time. Madge Bellamy is a charming figure as the heroine, while Niles Welch acts the youth with plenty of romantic fervor. Rowland V. Lee directed and J. O. Taylor turned the camera.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Thomas H. Ince presents an alluring romance of two worlds in "The Cup of Life" by Carey Wilson which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— featuring an all-star cast which includes Hobart Bosworth, Tully Marshall, Madge Bellamy and Niles Welch. The picture contains elements that are certain to appeal to everyone. There is a tang of the sea about it which of course gives Bosworth a chance to show his skill at characterization. Also there is a melodramatic turn of events which have to do with Oriental cunning and intrigue.

Mr. Ince has spared no expense to give the picture a colorful production. Indeed the photography and settings are unduly rich and distinctive. "The Cup of Life" is brimful of adventure and thrills, romance and melodramatic action. Some of the incident concerns deep-sea diving, the killing of a man-eating shark, a man-to-man fight for the possession of a girl and other interesting details. Rowland Lee directed.

PROGRAM READER

The Thirteenth Pearl! What mystery lurked behind those magic words! What romance, and adventure and love! For when beautiful Pain, the adopted American daughter of a Chinese pearl smuggler, received the Thirteenth Pearl, she was to marry! This is the idea behind Thomas H. Ince's compelling drama of the Orient and the deep sea. You've seen Hobart Bosworth in fighting, crashing roles. In "The Cup of Life" he again demonstrates his remarkable talent for the interpretation of vivid, rugged studies. A distinguished cast assists him. It is a picture marked for its adventure and thrills. Come next ———— and see one of the best features of the season.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have the Ince-Bosworth combination working again. And you should bring their names out in your exploitation. Tell them that this duo furnished those clever sea offerings, "Below the Surface" and "Behind the Door." Bring out that the picture is sumptuously mounted and that it presents a highly colorful line of action. Bring forth that the spectator is in for a rich entertainment—a picture which will fascinate and intrigue and invite the highest praise. Your prologue can feature some quartette singing sea chanties, or a sea background. for variety you can put on an Oriental sketch. A scenic can feature life in the Orient. Play up the cast and sponsors.

CATCH LINES

See "The Cup of Life," a picture brimful of adventure and action, romance and thrills. Hobart Bosworth and Tully Marshall are in the cast.

"ACTION"
(Universal)

Action Melodrama Lives Up to Its Title

EXCEPT for the characterizations of Francis Ford and J. Farrel McDonald "Action" is pretty much western movie melodrama, but for the house that plays pictures of the "hard ridin', quick shootin'" type it should measure as a most satisfactory production.

Certainly it has the quality implied by its title. There are thrills galore with the energetic and supple "Hoot" Gibson living up to his reputation as a minister. His riding, although probably aided by clever camera work, may be counted on to bring the gallery out of their seats.

The picture is noteworthy too in a way. It brings Francis Ford, erstwhile star, to the screen in a character role and demonstrates him as a first rate actor and considerable of a comedian, and it presents Mr. Gibson in his first multiple reel feature. Clara Horton is also a member of the cast. This trio will probably mean considerable from a box office standpoint.

The story of "Action" is not so new or so very interesting. Three desert rats buy a ranch of a girl whose father has been killed. A gang of western crooks assume that there must be gold on the ranch or the prospectors wouldn't have purchased it and conspire to get possession of the property by having one of their number appointed guardian of the girl, since she was under age when she sold the ranch. The girl is sent to an eastern school, thus eluding the court order, citing her to appear before the judge. Gold is discovered on the ranch, the villains are defeated and the younger prospector (Hoot) and the girl (Miss Horton) decide to take each other for life partners.

Some very fine photography, more or less original incident, and a continuity that is flawless aids in making the picture interesting. Those who are looking for technical faults may object to excessive titles in the earlier reels, that attempt to be humorous, with what success depends on the viewpoint of the spectator. These titles do slow up the action and could have been cut down without destroying any of the story.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Francis Ford, world famous as a star and director in his own right, plays a remarkable character role in "Action," the speedy Universal photodrama which comes to the ———— theatre on ———— with Hoot Gibson in the starring role. The story was filmed at Universal City under the direction of Jack Ford.

Clara Horton, as the girl, is beautiful and clever, and combined with her good looks the rare gift of acting ability. Mr. Ford is "Soda Water Manning" and J. Farrell McDonald, the distinguished characer actor, as "Mormon" Peters, make their roles fairly live with their interpretations of the unique western characters. Others in the cast are William Robert Daly as "Plimsoll," Buck Conners, Charles Newton, Dorothea Wolbert, Jim Corey, Ed. Jones and Byron Munson.

PROGRAM READER

Hoot Gibson, the hard riding young Universal star, is scheduled to spur across the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— and keep moving until "Action," his new and smashingly dramatic western story, reaches its whirlwind finish.

"Action" could not have been a better story if it had been built to Hoot Gibson's measure. The story was originally written by J. Allan Dunn and read by thousands as "The Mascotte of the Three Star." Universal bought it, assigned Jack Ford to direct, and commissioned him to get together the best cast of players in the country for the supporting roles.

Clara Horton, the exceptionally appealing little emotional actress, plays opposite the star while the remainder of the cast will give theatregoers an opportunity to watch the best work of such popular players as Francis Ford, J. Farrell McDonald, Buck Conners, William Robert Daly, Charles Newton, Jim Corey, Kingfisher Jones, Dorothea Wolbert and Byron Munson.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill Francis Ford, Gibson and Clara Horton about equally prominent, Ford in a pleasing character role. Mention the stunts, and infer thrills in plenty. The scenic locations may also be given some space. For a prologue the usual western songs in front of a suitable drop will go good.

CATCH LINES

The Three Musketeers of the Desert—Virile, Vivid and Violent—untangle a difficult plot in "Action" with Hoot Gibson starred.

Desert suns, mountain peaks, silver rivers, moonlight and romance and he-men from out of the west. See the west in "Action" with Hoot Gibson in the title role.

"A WIFE'S AWAKENING"
(R.-C. Pictures Corp.)

An Average Society Drama; Entertainment of the Heavier Sort

THIS is a society drama built on a triangle theme. It will satisfy the audiences it is intended for, but is somewhat hectic and over-dramatic for anyone who prefers lighter entertainment. The interest is held to the end, despite the fact that no unusual situations are worked in, and there are a great number of scenes tense in themselves.

The three principals are William P. Carleton, Fritzi Brunette and Sam De Grasse, who play the former sweetheart, the wife and the husband respectively. "George Otis" is an unscrupulous business man, but his wife, loving him sincerely, has been blind to his faults. She aids him financially in his "business troubles," but when he demands that she seek aid from her former suitor, she objects. But her husband is adamant and orders her to go to the man's apartments late at night and beguile him into giving her money. Instead of going as directed, the wife goes to her mother. The wife alone cannot see the true character of her husband. But in the end, when he accuses her of actual wrong doing, she is overcome with revulsion and leaves him for ever. The husband brings the picture to a climax by rushing upon the other man and threatening his life. The picture story ends with the repentance of the husband. His wife is presumably to start divorce proceedings, which is the only thing to keep the production to end in the usual clinch.

There are artistic interiors and the society atmosphere of the story is well brought out. Fritzi Brunette makes a beautiful wife but is obliged to be so emotional that her acting becomes very strained. Sam De Grasse, as the husband, is immobile and stern, and William Carleton is a satisfactory all-perfect hero.

The fact that there is no comedy relief in the entire picture does not add to its entertainment values. It is exceptionally heavy drama which should, however, prove good variety if you have been running comedy-drama of Westerns. The production has been made entirely censor proof. It is based on the two-men-and-one-woman idea, but there is no delicate scene in it, although it is evident that the opportunity for such could easily have been made. "A Wife's Awakening" should be more popular in the smaller towns than in the cities. Devotees of the society drama will be entirely satisfied.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

As its feature attraction for ————, the ———— theatre announces "A Wife's Awakening," a gripping modern society drama, directed by Louis Gasnier, one of the foremost masters of screencraft in America. In the cast are several players who have themselves been featured in past productions. Fritzi Brunette, well known to all screen lovers, plays the part of the wife, and William P. Carleton is cast as the wealthy self-made business man. Sam De Grasse, one of the most experienced villains of the pictures, is cast as the deceiving husband.

"A Wife's Awakening" tells an exceptionally interesting story of a girl who marries the wrong man. But love is hard to kill, and even when her husband proves that his business methods are dishonest and that he cares more for money than the honor of his wife, she still remains true to him. But the breaking point comes at last, and the wife realizes that her love is dead.

The picture may be described as an unusual society drama which is certain to grip and hold the interest of an audience.

PROGRAM READER

What should a wife do when she discovers she has married the wrong man? This is the theme of the interesting drama which will be shown at the ———— theatre on ————. The production is entitled "A Wife's Awakening" and it was produced by Louis Gasnier, one of the foremost of America's directors. In the cast are such popular players as William P. Carleton, Fritzi Brunette and Sam De Grasse. The picture is brimming over with tense interest and excitement. It presents a vital theme in an entertaining manner.

You will want to be at the ———— theatre on ————, when "A Wife's Awakening" will be shown.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a society drama which has a title sure to attract a certain class. For their benefit boost it as presenting a vital theme in an interesting manner. Tell them that it is rich in society atmosphere and that a number of stunning gowns are worn. Fritzi Brunette is probably the best known name in the cast. Feature her if you prefer, rather than labeling it an "all-star cast." However, William P. Carleton is an experienced leading man and his name should have value. The same is true of Sam De Grasse, who is well known as a villain. You could run teasers such as "Should a wife ask favors from a former suitor, even to save her husband from bankruptcy?"

CATCH LINES

"THE SHARK MASTER"
(Universal)

A Rather Weak Story of the South Sea Islands

IF Frank Mayo had been given a stronger story and there were plenty of opportunities to make "The Shark Master" more appealing, he would have had one of the best pictures of his career.

Instead, the feature seems to simmer down to colorless scenes between the star and pretty May Collins, who is continually appearing in a costume that resembles a one-piece bathing suit.

The locale is laid principally in the South Sea Islands with the natives performing most of the time either in the foreground or in the distance.

"The Shark Master" is another illustration of the fact that locations, whether they are in the South Sea Islands or among the elite, cannot be featured to the detriment of the story.

Frank Mayo works as hard as he can to put over the rather tame situations, but receives very little aid from Miss Collins, who although pretty to gaze upon, is entirely lost when it comes to putting over her points. Her main attribute is her rather stout figure.

They didn't spend much on this picture and this can readily be seen.

A little white girl is cast upon the shores of an island in the South Seas, is adopted by the islanders and made tabu by the chief.

Twenty years later, when she has reached womanhood, a white man is cast upon the island's shore with the usual result, they fall in love.

But the white man never forgets the young woman he has left back in civilization, and when she comes to the island with her father and demands his return, he rejects her proposal and stays with the island woman and their child.—Frank Leonard.

"The Shark Master" describes the trials and tribulations of a white man who has become stranded in the South Seas and takes a native daughter as his wife.

But the young woman is not of native blood, for years before she was cast upon the shores on a raft and taken into the tribe.

Twenty years later the scene is shifted to the offices of the shipping firm of Marston and Dean, in San Francisco. June Marston, daughter of the head of the firm is engaged to marry young McLeod Dean, who is sailing for a last inspection of the firm's trading stations in the South Seas. On his return he is to marry June.

Dean sails, but the ship is wrecked and he is cast upon an island, where he is saved by the young white princess.

Many months later, June Marston and her father discover our hero and the young white woman living together on the island. June is determined to have the young man again, but is persuaded from her purposes when she sees that there is a beautiful child.

Exhibitor Comment—"An excellent picture, which, coupled with the popularity of Thomas Meighan, brought good houses during its run." "Well received, receipts pleasing." "Excellent business, as is usual when I play a Thomas Meighan picture. Do not consider picture up to standard set by 'City of Silent Men' nor was business as good. But nothing to complain of." "This picture did a satisfactory business for a week's run and pleased patrons." "Had great business with this picture. And it sure deserved it." "Pleased patrons although not type of picture usually shown at this theatre. Meighan admirably suited to part." "A good box office attraction." "Brought good attendance." "Fairly entertaining feature with average business." "Fine picture. Every one liked it. Business was very good considering the extreme heat." "The first three reels are very good; the rest is cheap melodrama. They seem to be making a mistake in putting this star in too many crook pictures. Business fell off because of the heat." "Good comedy which drew fairly well despite extremely hot weather." "Not as good as other Meighan pictures. Business was fair."

Weather had been exceedingly warm and many people out of the city along the beaches, but attracted pretty good business." "One of the very best to be seen in a long, long time. Receipts fair."

"Pleased very much. Really a good picture. But unequaled hot weather ruined business." "Only pleasing, receipts fair." "A high class picture which appealed to the thinking class. Did good business with it." "Very good show and business was quite up to the average, at least, despite inclement weather and the fact that so many people are out of the city on the Gulf beaches." "Ran with Harold Lloyd's 'Among Those Present' and held 'em out every night and every matinee. Result big week and satisfied crowds. Holding second week." "Title has box office value. Did good business. Audiences liked it." "Did very well at the box office and satisfied." "We are having too many productions on this same subject—why not a change? An average week's attendance." "Flashbacks" on Earlier Releases

"The Price of Redemption" (Metro)—"This is a big picture from a spectacular point of view, and Lytell's work is satisfactory, but it is decidedly draggy and has little to hold on the spectator's interest. Business was fair."

"Idols of Clay" (Paramount)—"Perhaps I'm wrong—this may be a great picture, but my patrons agree with me that it was the reverse. Consider it an average program picture, but by no means worthy of the featuring it has had."

"What's Worth While"—"This is a splendid feature picture and good box office attraction. We did big business for the week it played at our house."

"Peaceful Valley" (First National)—"The usual type of Charles Ray picture which drew well."

"The North Wind's Malice" (Goldwyn)—"Played to a capacity house for a week, principally because of the fact that Vera Gordon, who is featured in the picture, played in vaudeville here the same week, which resulted in some effective advertising."

"GARMENTS OF TRUTH"

Entertaining Farce-Comedy With Gareth Hughes as Star

THE sponsors behind Gareth Hughes' first stellar vehicle have hit upon the right kind of material for this talented star whose forte is the interpretation of whimsical studies of youth. There are moments in "Garments of Truth" which remind you of "Sentimental Tommy," a picture in which Hughes flashed his right to stardom. These moments occur when he is fabricating hugh lies through a highly sensitive, imaginative mind. There is no real plot development in the sense of the word. Characters and situations are not planted to arouse one's interest. Instead the picture gets off to a humorous start, picks up momentum and comes under the wire with a fine burst of speed.

Indeed there is not a scene which is not highly provocative of laughter. If the outburst of applause generated by a group of hard-boiled reviewers who sit in judgment on two or three dozen pictures a week is any criterion, then the offering is certain to score with any class of audience. Hughes is deserving of success. In fact he has a more logical right to stardom than many of his contemporaries who are posing as interpreters of the silent drama.

"Garments of Truth" is starting him off with flying colors because it seems as if it might have been written with him in mind. The opening shot reveals him putting over a modern Paul Revere, tearing through town in his flivver warning the countryside that the dam has burst and advising them all to flee to high and dry ground. Of course it is all a hoax—a hoax which develops into a farcical skein of hoaxes, but which has enough sober moments to provide a balancing note of romance and sentiment. He tells such whopping big lies—lies which furnish much amusement because of their ridiculous exaggeration and the manner in which they are elaborated—that the provoked citizens are on the verge of sending him to a reform school. His mother intercedes and takes him to a doctor whose fame is widespread through his skill at mental suggestion.

The picture takes time for breath at this moment, but when the boy comes home cured of his fanciful imagination, his efforts to tell the truth at all hazards causes as much trouble as when he was an Ananias. He shows up the hypocrisy of the natives in various ways and is instrumental in stopping progress at a time when the town shows a desire to awake from its lethargy. However, his imagination returns when he renews his romance—a condition of mind susceptible to sentiment. Hughes appears in several occupations and the humorous moments are so many that one never misses the faint note of romance at all. Let it be said that the star gives a clever performance—one perfectly shaded throughout. The story is quite original. And it offers snappy entertainment. A competent cast renders adequate support.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Gareth Hughes makes his debut as a Metro star in "Garments of Truth," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This offering was adapted from Freeman Tilden's story which appeared in a popular magazine and affords the new star a vehicle which is well suited to his personality. The story is of a satrical bent and revolves around a highly imaginative and romantic youth whose ability to tell whopping big lies precipitates a deal of trouble for the villagers in general and for young Lester Crope in particular.

To save him from the reformatory his mother takes him to a doctor who cures defective patients by mental suggestion. Lester comes home cured and develops into a stickler for the truth. His motto is the truth at all hazards. His imagination returns when he resolves to win the girl. This picture sparkles with keen humor and is always interesting. A large and capable cast renders adequate assistance.

PROGRAM READER

A highly amusing farce-comedy is "Garments of Truth" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— starring Gareth Hughes, the new Metro star. This picture is considered ideal for the expression of Mr. Hughes' personality since it permits him to portray a whimsical character. As Lester Crope he is possessed with a rich imagination which causes his townspeople and himself all sorts of adventure and trouble. But there is a cure for him through mental suggestion and when he returns home he is a stickler for the truth—so much so that the same villagers who were harmed by his colorful fibs wish that his imagination might take flight again. Mr. Hughes injects a deal of humor into the role and there is not a minute when the comedy moments slacken. Come and be royally entertained.

Does it pay to tell the truth? You wouldn't think so to see the trouble it caused Gareth Hughes in "Garments of Truth." Come and see this fascinating comedy.

"THE INFAMOUS MISS REVELL"
(Metro)

Entertainment Values Are Not Prominent Here

IT cannot be denied that Alice Lake has had more entertaining pictures than "The Infamous Miss Revell" which is cut from a conventional pattern and which follows a familiar line of action to its obvious conclusion. The star seems to be having a difficult time finding the ideal subject to fit her personality probably because she is an emotional ingenue. The title here would indicate a colorful character sketch, but as the story develops, what is flashed resembles a "pot-boiler" which is quite removed from realities. A humorous note is lacking which would have provided a happy balance. Instead a false heart touch is stressed in order to emphasize the keynote of pathos.

As the introductory scene is flashed one finds the star enacting a dual role—that of twin sisters who are having a difficult time bringing up a younger brood of children. At the moment when the cupboard is almost bare, one of the twins, goes to a lawyer under the impression that there may be some money left from the estate. It is when she is leaving his office that she encounters a situation which alters her entire life. This situation involves a man of wealth who is willing to provide for her under the condition that she pay the well known sacrifice. He doesn't offer this suggestion in so many words but through innuendo he asks her to act as his nurse. Thus it is that the poverty-stricken family registers contentment for the first time.

The conflict enters upon the benefactor's death, his heirs putting in a claim for his estate which has been willed to his newfound mistress and friend under the condition that she remain single. The love interest does not have much of a chance for development, but along about the third reel the nephew of the deceased is urged by his mercenary sister to seek a job as tutor to the young relatives of the fortunate girl. The youth's conduct is above reproach and the love call is heard by both. There is a twist, however, when the mercenary niece, remembering the clause in the will anent the pretty heiress remaining single, thinks the opportunity is ripe to put in a claim. The girl saves herself from this embarrassment, however, by declaring that the real heiress is dead and that she has substituted for her sister. Since the romance is progressing famously one can see that it is dollars to doughnuts that the rightful heirs will come into money and happiness. The story is of a single-track character and never leaves its groove. The double exposure work is commendable—what there is of it. However, it is a picture which never leaves a definite impression as to theme or situations. Miss Lake is caught in some attractive poses, but her emotional talent is not given much opportunity for expression.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "The Infamous Miss Revell," starring Alice Lake, Metro's young emotional actress. This is considered by those who have seen it to be an ideal vehicle for the expression of the star's personality and talent and affords her a role which is decidedly appealing. Miss Lake plays a dual role—that of twin sisters who have been victims of misfortune. As Paula Revell is forced to stay at home to mind the younger children, Julien enters the business world and encourages the advances of Maxwell Putnam, a man of wealth, to such a degree that she inherits his property under the condition that she remain single.

Meanwhile his heirs put in a claim for the estate. Realizing their efforts are hopeless in a legitimate manner, Lillian Hildreth encourages her brother, Max, to become the tutor of the Revell children and thus gain the affections of Julia. The romance develops a twist which reveals Max in love with Paula, Julien having died in the meantime. "The Infamous Miss Revell" is a charming picture and is well acted and directed.

"THE THREE MUSKETEERS"
(United Artists)

Doug's Masterpiece One of the Screen's Most Likeable Productions

"DOUG" has turned out his masterpiece. There will be very little difference of opinion on this question. "The Three Musketeers" is his most elaborate production, his most perfectly detailed production, and it is also Fairbanks in his most active, vigorous production. All the extravagance of an "Intolerance" would have been wasted if the picture did not allow this screen idol to fight over chairs, through doors, up and down stairs, and across roofs. His sets in "The Three Musketeers" are gorgeous, some of his photography most artistic, his atmosphere of seventeenth century France perfect, but the paramount feature of it is Fairbanks—Fairbanks the swordsman, rustic bumpkin, the picturesque courier, the lover.

He offers a new kind of thrill in filming the art of swordsmanship. There is no need of waiting for the climax to start the action. Every one of Dumas' incidents is used to allow him to flash the rapier. With every muscle quivering and every nerve taut, with teeth gritted beneath a waxed mustache, he fights in vivid close-ups and in long shots. He fights with a vigor that Dumas' D'Artagnan never hoped to attain. There is nothing of the dignified duellist about his action. All the thrills of leaping from chair to table are there, only swords are substituted for fists.

This is all by way of an appetizer. The climax starts when D'Artagnan and the Three Musketeers are dispatched to England to bring back the love-token which will save the Queen of France her honor. The spys of Richelieu beset every mile of the road. Then follows that series of adventures which made Dumas' work so enchanting and immortalized D'Artagnan as one of the most famous characters of fiction. Every bit of action is a masterpiece in itself. Fairbanks never for an instant fails to get and hold the interest and end it up with a thrill. He is identical with the D'Artagnan who lives in the memory of every reader of this famous novel. He is the swash-buckler, the high-spirited, daring, devil-may-care soldier of fortune. It is a role none other but he could fit so perfectly.

Edward Knoblock, who adapted the novel for the screen, has minimized the emphasis which Dumas placed on the court intrigue of Richelieu. But he gets in all the story, cleverly leaving the King and Queen and Richelieu occasionally to switch to Doug. If one thing more in this picture could be desired, it is more of Fairbanks, and even less of intrigue and fewer street scenes of Paris. Not that these latter are imperfect by themselves, but it is Doug's picture and Doug's triumph, and will be the most popular of his pictures because of his volative personality. A very capable cast, down to the most unimportant extras, has been selected. Particularly Nigel de Brulier is an impressive Cardinal Richelieu, Margaret De La Motte an appealing heroine, Mary MacLaren a gorgeous, queenly queen, and Adolphe Menjou a dainty, susceptible Louis XIII. Athos, Porthos and Aramis are Leon Barry, George Seigmann and Eugene Pallatte, respectively. They, and all the Cardinal's guards who supply the swordsplay, are able to make the duelling scenes perfectly realistic.

There is no need to prophecy success for "The Three Musketeers." It is Doug's masterpiece; all-perfect from an audience standpoint, and one of the most likeable pictures ever made.—Length, 12 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is considered Douglas Fairbanks' greatest picture is "The Three Musketeers," adapted by Edward Knoblock, the well known playwright and scenarist, from Alexandre Dumas' fascinating romance of the same name. This story has been translated in several languages and has easily been the most popular romantic novel ever written. It makes an ideal vehicle for the star who plays the swaggering hero, D'Artagnan, as if to the manner born. It is a picture which carries marvelous dramatic action which offers the spectator acute moments of suspense. It is also rich in spectacular appeal. Mr. Fairbanks is supported by a large and

"HICKVILLE TO BROADWAY"
(Fox)

Eileen Percy's Most Enjoyable Light Comedy

THIS light comedy is a pleasant surprise, coming after some very lukewarm offerings starring Eileen Percy. It is the best of the star's recent pictures for Fox, largely because the story is more clever and unorthodox and the supporting cast distinctive.

The story, as is indicated by the title, starts in a country village and then hops to the White Lights of New York. The star is cast as a typical small town girl, in love with the village druggist. There is some pleasant comedy here, especially when Rosemary Theby makes her appearance, playing the much-married, bored-to-death show girl, who comes to the country for a rest. They show a small town movie scene, which is a clever piece of comedy. Miss Theby enlivens this sequence until it is highly enjoyable. The rustic types are overdone, and Hickville proves to be a village that is far, far behind the times, but such falsities are necessary to preserve the comedy.

"Virgil," the druggist-hero, decides that he will take a fling at the high life in the big city before settling down to a humdrum existence in Hickville. So off he goes, followed shortly by his sweetheart, the star, who is induced to play the part of a chorus girl in New York in order to watch over her fiance. The show girl (Miss Theby) has an idea that "Virgil" is not all that he should be, and plans the whole scheme. The story, unfortunately, becomes a trifle confused at this point. The star, masked, is to substitute for a double, but no sub-title explains this an dit will be an astute audience which follows the action just at this point.

The story ends as the druggist proves himself a cad. The heroine finds another lover, a young artist, and there is a happy ending. The Hickville sequence is the more humorous. Miss Theby is largely responsible. She is perfect as the world-weary actress cast upon a desert of monotony. Eileen Percy is attractive in this picture and has no tendency to overact. She gets a lot of fun out of her part, when she portrays the inexperienced Broadway "vamp." William Scott plays the small town cad, and gets away with a somewhat difficult part in good style. Paul Kamp proves to be the ultimate hero, the wealthy artist.

The titles are once more on the punning style, but some of them are good for a healthy laugh. The picture should prove a satisfying light comedy in most houses.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is described as the most amusing comedy which Eileen Percy ever made is to be offered as the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. It is entitled "Hickville to Broadway" and it is clean, entertaining comedy from beginning to end.

Miss Percy is cast as a small town girl, engaged to a small town man, the village druggist. The druggist feels the lure of Broadway and decides to take a fling and sow some wild oats. But his pretty little sweetheart decides that he needs someone to watch over him while he sojourns in the city of White Lights, so she goes to New York and poses as a chorus girl. The picture is crammed with amusing situations, and every title is good for a laugh. It has the added boon of being built upon a startlingly new idea.

The story and scenario is by Carl Harbaugh, who also handled the direction. In the cast is Rosemary Theby, the popular beautiful actress who will be remembered for her work in the leading role of "The Queen of Sheba." She has plenty of opportunities in "Hickville to Broadway" to prove her abilities as a versatile artist.

"Hickville to Broadway" will remain at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

PROGRAM READER

A light comedy will head the bill at the ———— theatre on ————. Eileen Percy, the William Fox star, has made a fast-moving, rollicking comedy in feature length entitled "Hickville to Broadway" and it will be shown together with ———— on ————.

"Hickville to Broadway" was built solely for entertainment. It contains no moral and no message. But its story draws the characters that you all know in the small towns. It places a world-weary show girl in Hickville and it transplants a small-town sport to the City of Gay White Lights. The complications which develop form a succession of wholesome, rip-roaring comedy situations. Miss Percy needs no introduction. Her past pictures have established her as a most delightful screen star. In the cast of "Hickville to Broadway" is also Rosemary Theby, one of the most beautiful screen actresses of today, who played a prominent part in "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," the huge Fox screen spectacle which made such a tremendous hit in New York. Miss Theby is cast as the Broadway chorus girl who comes to Hickville to take the rest cure.

CATCH LINES

Pretty Eileen Percy comes again in a frolicking, good-natured light comedy, supported by a cast which includes William Scott, Rosemary Theby and John Lockney.

"ROOM AND BOARD"
(Realart)

Pleasing Little Picture With Star in Suitable Role

ABOUT every so often a picture, in which the heroine is an Irish colleen with lots of aristocratic ancestors and little money, and the hero, a rich young American, touring in Ireland, comes through. Usually they please the fans, especially the feminines, in spite of stories that are ultra convenient, plots that lack complication and endings that are obvious from the beginning.

All of which sums up "Room and Board" except that this latest Constance Binney vehicle has additional audience value in some of the finest scenic locations ever discovered in America. In fact it is scarcely believable that the picturesque backgrounds shown are American and not Irish. They look like the real thing even in the foregrounds.

"Room and Board" tells the story of "Lady Noreen," heir to an ancient Irish castle, and a mortgage who leases the property to a young American in order that she may pay some of her debts. She also disguises herself as a servant and serves the new master, and his friends including a young woman who desires to marry the American. An Irish bounder conspires to marry "Lady Noreen" and plans to buy the mortgage in hope of accomplishing his desires. He is beaten, literally, and from a financial standpoint by the American and after the clutch the picture is over.

Constance Binney is a pretty and attractive Irish lass, while Tom Carrigan plays the role of the American Harp who has gone back to the home of his ancestors. Both are adequate for the roles, although nothing unusual in the way of incident or characterization is provided for them to do. There is an occasional bit of comedy throughout the production and the titles aid in this connection being of the "Peg O' My Heart" order.

The photography is extra good and the direction excellent. Some very fine interiors that match with the scenic locations have been built.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The story of a poverty-stricken young Irish noblewoman who leases her ancestral castle to a wealthy American, to earn enough to lift the mortgage, is Constance Binney's latest Realart picture, "Room and Board," which will open a ——— day run next ——— at the ——— theatre. Tom Carrigan plays the American tenant, who, of course, sees right through the disguise of the Lady NoNreen, who is posing as one of the maids, and takes charge of her and all her many debts.

PROGRAM READER

"Room and Board," in which Constance Binney will be presented next ——— at the ——— theatre, is a Realart picture directed by Alan Crosland.

The story concerns the fortunes of an Irish noblewoman, Lady Noreen of Kildoran, whose father, a genial spendthrift, had always followed a deliberate policy of putting off the debts and worries of today until some vague tomorrow.

The settings for castle and Irish village, the fox hunt in which the old Earl loses his life,, the castle interiors, furnished with fine example of antique furniture, are all done on an elaborate scale, making "Room and Board" the most expensive as well as the most beautiful picture in which Realart has ever presented Miss Binney.

The role of the spirited little Irish heroine is one well suited to Miss Binney's personality and she is said to give a remarkably sympathetic performance as Lady Noreen.

SUGGESTIONS

In exploiting this, call attention to the Irish atmosphere of the story, possibly referring to the production as another "Peg O' My Heart." Give Constance Binney and Tom Carrigan equal billing. Make mention of the scenic locations and if you aren't too finicky about telling the truth, bill them as authentic scenes in Ireland. No one can prove that they aren't. For lobby display follow the suggestion of the press book concerning a painted Irish castle. Tie-up with newspapers on the rooms to let column will be possible. Signs of "Room and Board" placed about town on the fronts of houses during the night with no explanation would be sure of getting newspaper publicity if you aren't afraid of making some people sore.

CATCH LINES

Piquant Constance Binney as an impoverished young Irish noblewoman whose ancestral castle is covered with moss and mortgages.

Noreen waited on him while he waited for her to confess that she was the mistress of the castle and not the servant she pretended to be.

The story of a little Irish lady who took boarders to save her ancestral castle.

"ONE WILD WEEK"
(Realart)

Ingeniously Constructed and Genuinely Entertaining Farce Comedy

UNLESS it follows too closely on Bebe's "Ducks and Drakes" to which there is a marked resemblance, especially in theme, "One Wild Week" ought to find favor with audiences. The picture as an amusing and at times exceedingly humorous concoction of incidents in which the star is presented as an irresponsible goslin who has been tied too closely to the apron strings of a puritanically minded maiden lady, her guardian, until her eighteenth birthday, and who thereafter having secured a little freedom finds herself sent to a reform school for a limited period after having been falsely accused of picking pockets.

We have a suspicion that in the original this was intended as a serious story. At any rate the producers have been wise in developing it from a farce comedy angle. The leading role fits Bebe like a glove and in her supporting company are to be found some of the cleverest farceurs appearing in pictures.

The w.k. Bull Montana has a bit similar to that he played in "Crazy to Marry." Frank Kingsley is Miss Daniel's leading man, playing the role of a young professor who is a half "nut." May Kelso has the role of the guardian and gives a splendid performance. Herbert Standing is a judge, Edwin Stevens a lawyer and Carrie Clark Ward a cook.

Titles that earn a laugh now and then while supplying information, direction that gets the most out of each player and excellent settings and exteriors are entitled to a fair share for the picture's success. The photography is up to the mark.

"One Wild Week" is a screen adaptation of a story by Frances Harmer. It is skilfully constructed and presents a perfect continuity. The direction is by Major Maurice Campbell. A trick "blood pressure machine" invented by the "professor" is instrumental in producing a number of real laughs.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

Bebe Daniels, popular Realart star, will be seen here at the ——— theatre next week in "One Wild Week," a story by Frances Harmer, adapted by Percy Heath and directed by Major Maurice Campbell.

As a high-spirited orphan who is to inherit money but has been so kept down by the strict maiden aunt who brings her up that she "busts loose" the very day she is eighteen and gets herself into hectic adventures, Bebe Daniels has another role well suited to her talents.

Well-known film players who will be seen in support of Miss Daniels are, Frank Kingsley, Maym Kelso, Edwin Stevens, Frances Raymond, Edythe Chapman, "Bull" Montana and Carrie Clarke Ward.

PROGRAM READER

Frances Harmer's amusing story, "One Wild Week," which will open for a ——— day run next ——— at the ——— theatre. This is a Realart picture, with Bebe Daniels, the star, playing the role of the too-sternly brought up girl who makes a bolt for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness the instant she reaches her majority.

As an orphan who has been so cowed by her stern maiden aunt that she breaks loose and seeks adventure as soon as she attains her majority, Miss Daniels has another splendid "good-little-bad-girl" role, innocently getting herself into all sorts of unusual scrapes and extricating herself with great cleverness.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up Bebe and most of her supporting cast, all of whom have excellent reputations as players and many friends among the fans. Use stills showing humorous situations. Advertise as a farce comedy promising plenty of hokum fun and laying no stress on the story taken by itself. In newspaper advertising carry out the same idea with slang selling talk. For a prologue use a stone wall set with a trio of feminine singers and possibly a male vocalist on the stage as is suggested by the scene where Bebe and her friends escape from the detention home.

CATCH LINES

Pauline had plenty of Pep—her guardian was merely peppery.

Pauline had been brought up too strictly. That's what made her wild.

Getting all dressed up meant nothing to Pauline. She never had any place to go.

Dressing a girl like a Plymouth Rock hen won't stifle her peacock instincts.

"HEART OF THE NORTH"

(George Davis and Joe Brandt-State Rights)

An Old Plot Made Thoroughly Likeable by Action and Acting

QUALITY FILM PRODUCTIONS, INC., produced this feature which was made under the supervision of Harry Revier. It features Roy Stewart and Louise Lovely. In brief, it is an old story well told. Its action, its atmosphere of the rugged pine forests, and its suspense should overcome a mistaken identity plot which has been told a hundred times before.

French-Canadians and the Northwest Mounted make picturesque screen characters. They have been tried and proven many times. Inject in the picture the "Get-Your Man" slogan, and provided the direction is capable and the acting up to the mark, it is fairly certain that the feature will have a strong audience appeal.

"The Heart of the North" should be thoroughly likeable and prove a state right success. The twin brother idea has been enriched with some attractive incident, such as a forest fire sequence and a couple of robbery scenes. Two boys have been adopted from an orphan asylum—one by a French-Canadian bandit, who robs Indian trappers of their furs, and the other by a captain of the Northwest Mounted Police. Both follow in their father's footsteps, and manhood finds one brother greatly-feared outlaw, and the other a Mounted Police Sergeant, sent to apprehend him. The outlaw, dressed in uniform, commits a robbery, and his twin is suspected by all. He is even suspected by his companion with whom he has been at the time the hold-up was supposed to be committed. At least that is the way it will appear to most audiences.

The ending is theatrical, but well enough done. Double exposure is used as the brothers meet in the forest in the midst of a thunder storm. The hero does not relish the idea of arresting his twin, but he cannot forget his "get-your-man" oath. So they leave it to luck, loading only one gun. The outlaw is the lucky one, but lightning topples a tree over on his head just as he is about to do the dirty work. Roy Steward plays these two roles. He makes the outlaw an impressive character without exaggerating his acting. Louise Lovely is the girl. She is the daughter of an Englishman who is making a tour of the Mounted Police posts. It seems a bit far-fetched to have such a luxurious home at the outermost post of civilization.

The supporting cast is capable. The titles try desperately to plant the atmosphere of the North by wordy metaphorical phrases. The exteriors are all to be commended and greatly enhance the picture.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

For its feature attraction on ————, the ———— theatre will offer "The Heart of the North," a thrilling story of the Northwest Mounted Police, which features Roy Stewart and Louise Lovely. Both these players have a large following and are well known to all followers of the screen. Miss Lovely has been starred in a number of pictures, and has had an important part in such masterpieces as "The Old Nest" and others.

"The Heart of the North" is a vital, gripping story laid in the wildest sections of Canada. Some of the most beautiful scenery ever pictured has been filmed as a background for the action. The picture takes one into the heart of the wild forests of the North. The characters are all types of the rugged men and brave women who live in their primeval way among the Northern pines, and who eke out a living from their trade as trappers. Mr. Stewart plays a dual role. He is cast as a rough French Canadian trapper, and as his twin brother, a member of the Northwest Mounted Police. The story pulsates with action and is filled with romance. It is the kind of a picture which fascinates as it entertains. All the romance and adventure of that rugged country is brought before the audience.

"The Heart of the North" will enjoy a ———— day run at the ———— theatre beginning ————.

PROGRAM READER

From the breast of their dying mother, Old Father Ormounde, the French-Canadian priest, took the two twins. He buried the mother under the snows that covered the world in the far North, and took the babes to the Southland. There they grew to boyhood and were adopted by two different men. From then on the paths of their lives separated. Manhood found one a rugged leader of a bandit gang, who stole furs from the trappers, and the other a sergeant in the Northwest Mounted Police.

"The Heart of the North," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, is a virile story of Northern Canada, which brings to the screen all the romance and adventure of that land of rugged pines. In it are featured Roy Stewart, one of the most popular of Western actors, and Louise Lovely, well-remembered from her work as a star in a number of productions and a leading lady in as many more. These players are supported by a capable cast. ———— is the date. It is expected that "The Heart of the North" will prove to be one of the most enjoyoble pictures presented at the ———— theatre in some time. The film was made in the far North, where the story takes place, and some of the most beautiful scenery ever pictured serves as a background for the stirring action and romance.

"WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME"

(Harry Rapf-Warner Bros.-State Rights)

Modernized Version of Stage Play Makes Interesting Picture

THE old time theatregoers would hardly recognize the modern screen version of "Why Girls Leave Home," so up-to-date are the various situations, settings and technical details. This is a picture that we approached rather skeptically, with the idea that it might develop into a hackneyed, "sob-sister" composition of scenes. We even thought that we were in for a moral lecture—that a pictorial preachment would be offered with a deal of maudlin melodrama. However, it is quite a feather in the respective caps of Harry Rapf, the producer, and William Nigh, the director, that they have made a first rate entertainment from a play, the theme of which has been worked to death upon stage and screen.

After the first hundred feet the offering strikes its stride and builds a drama, the appeal of which carries much force and realism. Those in charge have approached their task with considerable insight—their perspective is as clear as the sunlight—with the result that the feature entertains beyond all expectations. There is no stressing of plot to introduce false theatrical touches. What takes place could reasonably happen and is undoubtedly happening in hundreds of homes everyday. The theme simply goes back to the principle of rearing a child and serves to teach parents the delicate task of bringing up children in as human a way as possible—which is to play with them and enter into their confidences, appreciating the fact that the undeveloped mind of youth is highly impressionable.

There is no recourse to platitudinous preaching, nor false sentiment. Every scene is clearly defined and has a definite place in the action and incident. The sponsors have given it a handsome production—one that indicates an expenditure of considerable money. The lighting of the several scenes in particular deserves commendation, and the atmosphere is always correct. So with the technical equipment above reproach, it has only been necessary for the cast to interpret the roles as closely related to life as possible. This they have done. Mr. Nigh has guided Miss Nillson and her competent assistants through their scenes so that every note is well emphasized. From the moment that the girl leaves the environment of her restricted home because of a stern and crotchety father to the time when a reconciliation is effected as he sees the light of understanding the picture holds one at strict attention because of its dramatic sweep, the suspense of the action and the intelligent portrayals of the cast. It is a picture which is certain to be heard from in box office receipts.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "Why Leave Home," adapted from the popular stage success which has appeared before a million people. A large and well known cast interprets this pictorial adaptation of the pitfalls which surround a girl when her parents, through failing to understand her, cause her to find outside associations. It is a picture which is filled with dramatic ingredients. The notes of sympathy, cruelty, love, sentiment, mother-love, pathos and humor are finely balanced here—notes which are duly emphasized and given exceptional expression by the cast that includes such favorite players as Anna Q. Nilsson, Maurine Powers, Julia Swayne Gordon, Kathryn Perry, Claude King, George Lessey and Dan Mason. There is a valuable lesson to be gained from the moral, and there is no question of its appealing to every class of picturegoer.

PROGRAM READER

An adaptation of a former stage success which has appeared throughout the length and breadth of this continent is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "Why Girls Leave Home." This is a picture which is certain to appeal to every type of patron. IIt is a feature which is crammed with dramatic highlights—which take on the form of romance, sentiment, sympathy, pathos, mother-love and other ingredients. A large and popular cast interprets this entertaining picture—a cast including Anna Q. Nilsson, Julia Swayne Gordon, Maurine Powers and many others of equal ability and popularity. William Nigh directed.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have an old time stage success to use for exploitation. You can tell your patrons that it is an adaptation of the widely popular play of the same name which has been seen by thousands of theatregoers throughout the land. Make much of the lesson to be learned from the moral. Tell that it offers a valuable lesson for all parents and children who are inclined to search too readily for pleasure. Play up its dramatic highlights. Distribute teasers and play it up as one of the exceptional pictures of the season—one that is certain to afford vast entertainment. Play up the director as one of the best in the field and exploit the cast which contains many who have been starred.

When thousands of dollars have been expended in the careful production of a masterpiece, how essential it is that the prints lose none of the elements for which the producer has labored.

Only technical familiarity with the requirements of the producer and the exhibitor can qualify the character of the prints. Their brilliancy and clear definition is vastly more important to the producer than the cost.

Rothacker prints are not as expensive as their quality would indicate and they continue to satisfy the most rigid requirements, not through any special act of Providence, but because to this end our entire organization bends its every effort.

"The Heart of the North," a treat—the kind of entertainment that invites patronage—packs a thrill at the rate of five to the reel. Roy Stewart's characterization work of art—photographically a gem. Duel in rainstorm far more exciting than that spectacular race in "Thunderclap." If you enjoyed the fights of real men in Curwood pictures, if you were thrilled by the forest fire in "Ninety and Nine" or in "The Storm" you won't be disappointed in this one for it carries thrill, punch and vim.

Despite all the advertising and claims no other company has yet released or scheduled for September release as big a box-office picture as "The Girl from God's Country." That's a broad statement and the picture backs it up.

QUO VADIS

["Whither Goest Thou?"]
By HENRY SIENKIEWICZ

Lots of exhibitors said: "Quo Vadis" is a re-issue. We'll wait and see it before booking.

Then they waited. The picture arrived. It turned out to be twice as big a picture in the re-edited form now as it was eight years ago, when it earned $2,000,000 for George Kleine.

Still some exhibitors played safe. They booked it on a straight percentage and we received twice as much from them as our share as we had asked them as flat rental or guarantee.

Now—

The best exhibitors in the country are playing "Quo Vadis" and cleaning up with it.

Think of a picture being twice as good as it was eight years ago!

In the Words of D'Artagnan—"Marvelous"!!

Douglas Fairbanks in
"THE THREE MUSKETEERS"
United Artists

DIRECTOR ..... Fred Niblo
AUTHOR ..... Alexandre Dumas
SCENARIO BY .....Edward Knoblock
CAMERAMAN ..... Arthur Edeson
AS A WHOLE.....One of the biggest attractions ever offered
STORY.....Great—holds with thrilling episodes every minute
DIRECTION ..... Excellent
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ..... Excellent
CAMERA WORK ..... Excellent
STAR.....His finest piece of work
SUPPORT.....Admirable all the way down the line
EXTERIORS.....Full of atmosphere; some very wonderful
INTERIORS ..... Splendid
DETAIL ..... Nothing overlooked
CHARACTER OF STORY.....D'Artagnan wins out over the Cardinal, who plots the downfall of the Queen of France
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION....About 11,700 feet

Douglas Fairbanks might have done long ago that which he achieves in "The Three Musketeers"—the production of a double length picture, the commercial worth of which can only be compared with legitimate attractions of the highest order and the tremendous picture productions of the past. That he held from doing so for such a long time displays a rare business sense. It seems, indeed, that he could not have selected a more propitious time for the uncovering of his masterpiece. For New York has already given the actor-impressario and his production a tremendous, astounding tribute.

Masterpiece his version of the Dumas work is from whatever angle one selects to approach it. Its story is clear and progressive. The staging and costuming are marvelous. The titles are few and simple—always to the point. The dramatic clashes and suspense of the story have received such appreciative treatment that their power is nothing short of sweeping.

As for the incomparable star, he is at his dashing, romantic best. His D'Artagnan is not so typically Fairbanksian as to appear out of place in a costume drama, replete with the romance and intrigue of the old world, yet there is undeniably the much sought after Fairbanks personality, set off to ideal advantage, which is what his legion admirers demand.

Fairbanks proves a brilliant swordsman and duellist. In his frequent encounters with the Cardinal's guards, he uses his weapons like chained lightning—or rather the element unchained. And too he invests the scenes of these encounters with some typical but altogether unusual acrobatics that are sure to set packed houses a-cheering. The fight in the apothecary's shop where he leaps from the shelves to the counter and seems fairly to fly through the air at his opponent is a striking case in point.

In the romantic interludes of the story Fairbanks makes his D'Artagnan display the method of Romeo combined with the speed of a twentieth century lover. The scenes with Constance are as romantically thrilling as any ever pictured on the screen.

The long thrill of the production, D'Artagnan's furious ride from Paris to Calais and thence to England to obtain the jewel from the Duke of Buckingham that will, if returned in time, maintain the honor of the Queen before King Louis of France, is a superb work of picture building. How D'Artagnan and the three Musketeers, Athos, Porthos and Aramis, battle gallantly with the opposing guards of Cardinal Richelieu, set to block the success of the venture, forms a series of pictures matchless for their suspense and thrill.

The two interviews of D'Artagnan and Richelieu are further evidence of the craft that has gone into the production. They have all the suspense that courses through them in the original Dumas.

What appeals strongly as a masterly stroke of showmanship—and sacrifice—on the part of Fairbanks, is his willingness to sacrifice himself for the sake of the story. There are times when it would have been easy to alter the course of the plot sufficiently to permit more of the star. But here, it appears, is a production made with a mind clear and unsubjected to stellar prejudice.

As for the production work itself it remains to be said that this contributes its share along with the other factors. Some of the long shots, notably the harbor of Calais and the view of the palace from the river, will keep the wiseacres guessing a long time "how it was done."

The cast is admirable throughout. Leon Barry, George Seigmann and Eugene Pallette have the endearing roles of the musketeers and seem to live them. The work of Nigel de Brulier as the plotting Cardinal stands out as perhaps the best sustained and dramatic performance of all. Adolphe Menjou is excellent as Louis and Mary MacLaren as the Queen shows real skill. Marguerite De La Motte makes a most attractive Constance and plays with feeling. Others in the long cast who contribute to the general worth of the production are Thomas Holding, Boyd Irwin, Sidney Franklin, Charles Belcher, Charles Stevens, Willis Robards, Lon Poff, Barbara Le Marr and Walt Whitman.

Final Analysis of This Spells C-A-S-H—Loads of It!

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Once in a great while there comes a production that needs no analysis other than the statements "Great" and "Grab it." "The Three Musketeers" is certainly one such. It is a magnificent achievement, artistic certainly, and unless all signs fail, it is far more than probable that it will go down in screen history as one of the three biggest money-makers of the age. Long after other pictures of today, and tomorrow, have ceased to be heard from, "The Three Musketeers" will be as great a box office attraction as it is at this moment.

There are mighty few stories that would add box office value to the name of Fairbanks. "The Three Musketeers" is one of these. There are hardly any others that can be called to mind. But "The Three Musketeers" certainly accomplishes that. With the star's name and the name of the great Dumas work, with all the possibilities that such a combination suggests, there will be no keeping the crowds away.

DETAIL .....Splendid for the most part
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Tragedy of the double standard of morals.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 12 reels

A climax in which the terrific force of the elements are masterly employed for a sustained effect caps D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East," a picture of many sides and of many extremes. This climax is nothing if not tremendous. It surpasses in suspense and power the gathering of the clans in "The Birth of a Nation," the triple parallel climax of "Intolerance" and the rescue of the imperiled heroine in "Hearts of the World."

There, practically unconscious is Anna. And off on the river banks beating wildly in the terrific snow storm is David. As he finally approaches the ice-caked river, led there by pieces of Anna's apparel, the ice starts to crack and to flow. Slowly the piece which holds the helpless form of Anna crumbles away and starts plunging, hurtling down the river to the falls below. David, frantic with the realization of Anna's peril, darts and leaps from one treacherous piece of ice to another, slips and is half-submerged, regains his footing and goes on, each frenzied bound bringing him nearer the girl dearer to him than life himself.

With this situation, the suspense of which Griffith has emphasized to its fullest extent by the use of quick flashes and taking full advantage of the terrific and relentless power of the ice flow, the spectator of "Way Down East" looks upon the thrill of a lifetime. The audience at the 44th Street Theater on the opening night was quick to catch the tremendous power of it. Hardly had the battle between David and the elements begun when a ripple of applause and hopeful cheers started. And when at last David snatched the girl from the ice just as it was about to carry her over the falls and into the jaws of death and then started his battle back against the current, the entire house was on its feet cheering madly.

The scene is realism itself, and with its tremendous power it has the added merit of unusualness. Such a background has never before been provided for a thrill. And it is all so effectively staged that the fact that Anna will eventually be saved, a knowledge that is obvious, is completely lost sight of through Griffith's skill. Here, indeed, is the last word in theatrical effect.

In the production of the whole work Griffith has, with but few and generally minor exceptions, shown himself at his best. The first part of the picture, its first five reels, concerns itself with the tragedy of Anna's life, the which Griffith points out, is the supreme tragedy of womankind. But even in such scenes of ordinary clay as Anna's marriage betrayal through the mock marriage, her utter despair when Sanderson reveals to her his baseness, and then the tragic episode in which she herself baptizes her dying child, Griffith has shown himself the master.

This first half of the production is a powerful tragedy, the outstanding points of which are the acting of Lillian Gish as Anna and the effects secured by Griffith and his photographers. Anna is without doubt Miss Gish's greatest character. She sounds a marvelously effective note of tragedy throughout her characterization and her scenes of sustained emotion show her and her teacher at their collective best. Then, too, Griffith has emphasized the absolutely hopeless plight of the girl to a degree that is truly penetrating. In doing this both his knowledge of dramatic values and his acquaintance with the force of atmosphere come to his aid. The desolate appearance of the country hotel which conceals Anna's tragedy is, for instance, outstanding.

There is some magnificent color work in the early scenes of the ball at which Anna meets Sanderson. They are few and, despite their excellence, seem out of place, serving rather to jar the spectator out of the illusion rather than to foster it, with their striking contrast with the scenes of plain tints and tones.

Perhaps Griffith goes too far in his scene suggesting Anna writhing in the pains of child-birth. As far as carrying out his idea goes it serves its purpose with a vengeance, but realism must stop somewhere, and it might as well stop at the bedside.

The latter half of the picture adheres closely to the original play. Here there is more variety, more straight melodrama, the effects always accentuated by Griffith's careful handling except in the comedy relief scenes. These, while perhaps they were in spirit with the stage piece, are hardly fitting in a production of the generally artistic finish accorded the picture. The antics of Hi Holler and Reuben Whipple are well enough, but it is the Martha Perkins, the Seth Holcomb and the Professor Sterling who stand out like sore spots. Griffith certainly should have toned their actions down and not attempted slapstick play with them. If it had taken effect it might have served its intended purpose of comedy relief, but even so the ethics would have been wrong. The real comedy relief of "Way Down East," the picture, is in the good old barn dance scenes, the Virginia reel and the polka, and in the pretty little character of Kate Brewster so well interpreted by Mary Hay, with but some few errors on her part as regards clothes.

The romance between Anna and David, the squire's son, develops very prettily through this latter portion. Then in turn comes the discovery of Anna's past and her denunciation of Sanderson. This scene is splendidly played by Miss Gish. She rises to it magnificently. And after this her flight in the storm and her glorious rescue by David.

For their work at the camera G. W. Bitzer and Hendrik Sartov deserve superlative praise. There are splendid lightings, these often concentrated on Miss Gish. But it is in the filming of the rural landscapes that they have surpassed all others in the art of photography. These are beautiful, often as breath-taking as the melodrama.

Richard Barthelmess is the David of the story and he gives a fine and skilled performance. Lowell Sherman is excellent as the villain, Sanderson. Burr McIntosh has his original role of the squire, and Kate Bruce appears as his wife. They are both splendid. Creighton Hale might have done more had the character of Professor Sterling contained more scenes like the barn dance bit. Others are Mrs. Morgan Belmont, Mrs. David Landau, Josephine Bernard, Patricia Fruen, Florence Short, Vivia Ogden, Porter Strong, George Neville, Edgar Nelson and Emily Fitzroy

The Biggest Box Office Attraction of the Times

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Probably motion picture exhibitors won't have a chance to book "Way Down East" for some time, as it will first be played as a road show in the larger cities. But remember this: when you finally have the opportunity to book it—that it is one of the biggest things ever seen on the screen. It looks as if it would run "The Birth of a Nation" a close race for box office honors and when, some many years hence, all is said and done and counted, it won't be at all surprising if it surpasses it.

The biggest thing about "Way Down East" is that it is lasting. This has been proven by the famous old play, and this play never reached the public finished off as artistically and as powerfully as Griffith's picture. It's an entertainment that people have gone to see again and again. And they will continue to do so. Even beneath the surface of the purely melodramatic play rested elements that brought the crowds back whenever it was presented.

And these elements Griffith has brought out more forcefully and with greater respect. These combined with that thrill of thrills with which he concludes his entertainment are what will make the picture live as long or even longer than its noted predecessor.

In other words, it is the entertainment that is the predominant thing about "Way Down East."

And with all this it has its years of running on the stage behind it, the name of Griffith, the names of the principal players, the artistry with which it is generally presented. Certainly it is the biggest box office attraction of the times.

STORY.....Handled with fine appreciation; smooth to the last foot and intensely interesting.
DIRECTION .....Fine
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Excellent
LIGHTINGS .....Generally excellent
CAMERA WORK.....Good
STAR.....Gives a superb characterization
SUPPORT.....Well known players do excellent work.
EXTERIORS.....Some very beautiful
INTERIORS.....Just right
DETAIL.....Very good
CHARACTER OF STORY.....British minister strengthens Empire by winning control of Suez Canal.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....about 7,000 feet

"Disraeli" looms on the screen as one of the greatest high class attractions of the times. If George Arliss and his associates intended it to win new followers of the screen they may rest content that they have accomplished a worthy purpose. For they have presented a picturized version of a play renowned the world over for its delicate subtleties and shadings, and retained practically all the delightful worth of the original work.

The characterization rendered by Mr. Arliss as the Jewish Prime Minister of England, forced to play a lone hand against Russian diplomacy and intrigue to gain possession of the Suez Canal to perfect his Queen's empire, is one of the finest pieces of acting the screen has ever reflected. Here is a star who plays with his whole mind. The closeups reveal, not so much Arliss in his perfect makeup of Disraeli, but a picture of the inner workings of his brain, all the delicate quick changes of thought revealed in unmistakable action.

The scenarist and director have maintained the thrill and suspense of the original work to a perfect degree as well as the delightful spirit of comedy. No laugh or smile or thrill is lost, the actors are playing for them every instant. This is revealed in the fact that the characters actually speak the lines used as subtitles. This results in a perfectly coordinated, smooth-running story. Kolker's work, doubtless aided not a little by the star himself, is usually on a very high plane. A slight tendency to play important action in deep shots is the only lapse he suffers.

Disraeli, a middle-class Jew, has become the English Prime Minister for Queen Victoria and has incurred the enmity of nobles and racial snobs. He knows that Russia is angling for the Suez Canal and realizing that unless England secures it the strength of her empire will be lost, he plays a lone game for it and eventually wins. In his final hour of honor at the court those who stood against him claim the honor of having helped him.

Reginald Denny and Louise Huff, who furnish the romantic interludes of the story, are both good, the former particularly so. Miss Huff suffers some inconsistent lighting. Frank Losee as the patriotic Jewish banker is another who adds to the picture as does Edward J. Ratcliffe as the bank governor. Margaret Dale, Henry Carvill, Grace Griswold, Mrs. Arliss and Noel Tearle complete the capable cast.

Here's a Real One to Stop Complaints of Mediocrity

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You exhibitors who have been complaining about the lack of good pictures, chalk "Disraeli" down on your schedule as an answer to your calls. Then write "MUST" after it and allow for double or triple your usual run.

As said, it's a mighty high class attraction and you can bank on big business if you advertise and exploit it properly. The star himself and the name of the play will certainly draw them in.

Don't be afraid of any propaganda in it. There's none either from England or the Jewish race. It's pure, undiluted entertainment, an entertainment that is by turns going to amuse and grip the great majority of audiences with its subtle comedy and its intense situations.

"THE SON OF WALLINGFORD"

Written and directed by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester

"THE SON OF WALLINGFORD"—published in abridged form in Collier's Weekly; brought out in book form and enjoying a tremendous sale; syndicated to thousands of high-class newspapers throughout the United States and Canada—the story of "THE SON OF WALLINGFORD" has become known and admired by millions. Now, the picture is ready.

Many months were consumed for the filming of "THE SON OF WALLINGFORD." A good-sized fortune was spent on the elaborate and mammoth sets, which included an artificial lake, with its dams and sluiceways; oil derricks, a complete city, modern in its appointments, and a pageant modeled after the gorgeous East Indian durbars. The authors had attained fame through their famous character, J. Rufus Wallingford, but they wanted to write a bigger, a better, a more human Wallingford story—one that was in no way a sequel to any ever written before—with some of the same characters and some of the new ones. The result is the Vitagraph super-special, "THE SON OF WALLINGFORD."

The exterior sets represent some of the greatest engineering feats in film history; thousands of players appear in some of the big scenes. "THE SON OF WALLINGFORD" is a big money picture for exhibitors. It is what the public wants—something different.—Eight reels.

"THE HEART OF MARYLAND"

The Vitagraph special productio "The Heart of Maryland," is the result of such combination. It was one of the greatest stage succe ses of a few years ago. As a screen production it even greater. "The Heart of Maryland has every requisite for the perfect picture play- love, romance, exciting situations, novelty in stor beautiful scenery and splendid acting—and Vit graph has not failed to take advantage of eve opportunity.—Seven reels.

"DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES"

By E. W. Hornung Directed by Tom Terriss

Adapted to the screen by Lillian and George Randolph Chester

Every individual thrill described in the internationally famous book by E. W. Hornung, author of "Raffles," has been transferred to the moving film and given life. The ship explosion with all its accompanying hazards, the wild fight at Rattray Hall, the mysterious shadower, all are faithfully portrayed in this Tom Terriss masterpiece.

It is the exceptional story—it begins where most stories end, with a great thrill which, for sheer spectacle, has never been eclipsed. Love, suspense, mystery, action—this picture is fairly crammed with it.

The cast is an all-star one, headed by Catherine Calvert. Percy Marmont and Holmes E. Herbert appear as the lovers, and not until the last few feet does the spectator know which wins the hand of the heroine. It is that much different from the average film. G. V. Seyffertitz appears in a villainous role, which he makes stand out. Hundreds of minor players help to make this picture one of the really big films of its period.—Seven reels.

"TRUMPET ISLAND"

By Gouverneur Morris Directed by Tom Terriss

Adapted to the screen by Lillian and George Randolph Chester

Here is a mammoth super-feature in all that the term implies. It cost more than a quarter of a million dollars to make this production, yet no elaborate scenes are merely hauled in. Each setting has its place. The wild midnight orgies of one of Fortune's favorites come as a natural sequence to the almost squalid scenes in which we find the hero before wealth is his.

"Trumpet Island" is a powerful story, which achieved success in the printed page, before it was ever thought of for a film. But on the screen, with its greater scope and the opportunity for sheer spectacle, the story stands out as one hundred per cent entertainment. Dignity, splendor, magnitude and emotional acting mark this ultra-production. "Trumpet Island" is a picture of contrasts. One's fancy is whisked from the artificial atmosphere of the palatial super-hotel, with its champagne suppers and its dancing coryphees to the clean-breezed desert island, bought by the jaded newly-rich youth in order that he might forget the wasted months and become a man. Wallace McDonald and Marguerite de La Motte head the all-star cast.—Seven reels.

"THE COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOONE"

By James Oliver Curwood Directed by David Smith

The story begins on a transcontinental train snowbound on the edge of the arctic. A young man who has "lost himself," is running away from the misery and tragedy of a shattered romance. Then follow thrill on thrill, adventure topping on adventure in that vast white arena of the frozen north that breaks the hearts and sinews of men. It is a smashing story of surprise and suspense, of primitive men, beautiful, courageous women, fierce huskies and malemutes, a thrilling fight between two grizzly bears, a grueling battle between men for the possession of a woman, the flight with the girl, the last stand—and then a thundering climax beyond all anticipation. A masterpiece of fiction writing turned into a masterpiece picture play. Niles Welch and Pauline Starke have the leading roles.—Seven reels.

ALICE JOYCE

"THE INNER CHAMBER"

By Charles Caldwell Dobie Directed by Edward Jose

CHARMING Alice Joyce is a revelation in this splendid new picture. Her beauty, her poise, her admirable restraint in scenes which might easily be overacted, have made her one of the foremost figures of the screen, but seldom has she risen to such emotional and dramatic heights as in this tense story which was adapted to the screen by C. Graham Baker. It is a powerful society drama, replete with action, and requiring exceptional acting. Such noted actors as Holmes E. Herbert and Pedro de Cordoba are seen in the star's support and the production is on a massive scale. The story is new and unhackneyed and provides Miss Joyce with one of the best roles in her career.—Six reels.

"THE SCARAB RING"

By Harriet Gaylord Directed by Edward Jose

Circumstantial evidence, which depends entirely upon the ownership of an ancient Egyptian scarab, is the theme of this splendid Alice Joyce production. It is a play of high social life, presenting the star in the type of role in which she is at her best—one to wealth as well as to the manner born. It has mystery. It has love. It has big scenes and tense situations. It is unique. And it is presented in a lavish manner with an exceptionally well balanced cast. Unquestionably one of the biggest and best pictures Miss Joyce has made in several months.—Six reels.

"THE SPORTING DUCHESS"

From the play by Augustus Harris, Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton
Directed by George Terwilliger

This play was a sensation when produced on the stage, both in this country and abroad. It was the talk of two continents. In the elaborate screen version, Alice Joyce appears as the Duchess of Desborough, happy in her possession of perfect love, but finally trapped into unhappiness through her envious enemies. The climax of this picture, on which more than $200,000 was expended in production, is tremendous. The running of the historic Derby, in which Clipstone, the duke's famous thoroughbred, wins victory for himself and happiness for his master and his mistress, climaxes a most unusual motion picture. About four months were required to produce this epic of the screen.—Seven reels.

"HER L AND MASTER"

By Martin Morton Directed by Edward Jose

Another Frohman stage success brought to the screen with most successful results. Alice Joyce gives two distinct characterizations, each as different from the other as day is from night—the one, "Indiana Stillwater," a breezy athletic daughter of a Middle Western self-made man; the other, "Lady Canning," prim and repressed, as befitting the lady of one of the oldest mansions in England. Holmes E. Herbert is seen as her leading man.—Six reels.

"COUSIN KATE"

By Hubert Henry Davis Directed by Mrs. Sidney D

This is an excellent picturization of Charles Frohma noted Empire Theater success, in which Ethel Barrym starred. The film excels the stage version in many respe Scenes hinted at in the stage version are visualized in the scr presentation. It is a very pretty love story, deftly handled one of the greatest woman screen directors. Its heroine is author of startling books on love—which she doesn't knov thing about until, finally, she meets the right man. Five re

"THE VICE OF FOOLS"

By Francis James Directed by Edward Gril

The story of members of an ultra-fashionable set who all infatuation to get the better of common sense. The the usual enough in itself, is handled in such a way as to make picture nothing short of unique. There is no "triang Rather, it is a quadrangle—composed of two men and t women. Alice Joyce, in the role of Marion Rogers, is s as a daughter of the idle rich class.—Five reels.

"THE PREY"

By Joseph Le Brandt Directed by George L. Sar

Forced into a marriage with a man she detests, through t that the man will expose an unfortunate act of her brot the woman decides to pay—quietly. But Fate had decr otherwise. The crashing scenes which follow the wom quiet sacrifice prove that wrongdoers cannot permane prosper. Beautiful sets, gorgeous costumes and a strong make this picture one of the best of its type. The cast cludes Henry Hallam, L. Roger Lytton and Roy Appleg —Six reels.

"DOLLARS AND THE WOMAN"

By Albert Payson Terhune Directed by George Terwil

There is something decidedly human about this play, wh a noted film authority called particularly timely in this when living costs strike home to nearly every family. A Joyce appears at first as a young married woman who not know the value of a dollar; later, through vicissitude, learns her lesson only too well and goes a bit too far in econ for happiness. The picture ends happily; both husband wife learn that through their sacrifices a greater love is n possible. Robert Gordon appears as Miss Joyce's lea man.—Six reels.

"SLAVES OF PRIDE"

By William B. Courtney Directed by George Terwil

In "Slaves of Pride," Alice Joyce portrays the role society woman with a warmth of love hidden by her exterior. She is married to a wealthy but "self made" inordinately proud of his power among men. Her strugg keep from being the mere chattel of a man of wealth, to woman who really loves and is loved, offers her rare op tunity for dramatic triumphs. The production is elaborately mounted. A notable cast includes Percy Marn G. V. Seyffertitz, Templer Saxe and Louise Beaudet.— reels.

CORINNE GRIFFITH

"MORAL FIBRE"

y William Harrison Goadby Directed by Webster Campbell

VERYBODY will enjoy Corinne Griffith as Marion Wolcott, a little country miss who sees her idolized brother made the plaything of a sophisticated woman of the world and who a few years later, as a beautiful young girl, goes to New York to "get even," and Catherine Calvert as Grace Elmore, the young society matron who didn't really mean to harm the boy. What a combination! These stars, both beautiful, but of different types, famous for their gowns and their ability to wear them, both actresses of marked ability, make "Moral Fibre" one of the biggest pictures of the year.

"WHAT'S YOUR REPUTATION WORTH?"

y Helidore Tenno Directed by Webster Campbell

"This is a case in ten thousand; it is a tragedy," said Justice ierney recently in the course of a divorce case before him in ie New York Supreme Court, "and yet a few days ago I saw s exact parallel told on the screen. It was 'What's Your eputation Worth?' and the woman deliberately endangered er reputation to help a friend." That is exactly what this ew Corinne Griffith picture play is, one in ten thousand. Unsual, yet true to life; vivid and virile, yet clean and wholeome, it has stirred up interest and favorable comment throughut the country and Canada and has been acclaimed as one of e best pictures in months.—Five reels.

"IT ISN'T BEING DONE THIS SEASON"

Thomas Edgelow Directed by George L. Sargent

The New and the Old World meet in this novel photoplay, e action being equally divided between this country and yria. Miss Griffith is noted on the screen for her beautiful owns as well as her beauty and acting, and in "It Isn't Being one This Season" she has ample opportunity to display all ree. The story is unique, full of surprises and one that the ot is not apparent from the very beginning. Vitagraph has ven the picture an elaborate production and surrounded the ar with an excellent cast, including Webster Campbell as the ading man.—Five reels.

"THE BROADWAY BUBBLE"

Leigh Gordon Giltner Directed by George L. Sargent

Corinne Griffith has splendid opportunities to show her vertility in this clever picture, assuming two separate roles—in sisters. One is high in New York's social life, respecting it not loving her husband. The other is a small town stenogpher. The latter goes to the city to impersonate her more rtunate sister while she has her "try out" on the stage. The sters meet frequently, and some remarkable double exposures ake this possible.—Five reels.

"THE WHISPER MARKET"

W. E. Scutt Directed by George L. Sargent

Romance, adventure, tropical locale, smuggling and thrilling situations interwoven into a dramatic story—this is "The Whisper Market," in which Corinne Griffith stars. As the ife of an American consul at Rio de Janeiro and the silent rtner in a modiste establishment she has ample opportunity live up to her reputation of being the best dressed woman the screen. The wife becomes involved in a blackmailing heme and mixed up with smugglers. A raid is made by merican Secret Service men headed by her husband while e is in a compromising position. How she escapes and ings the plotters to justice makes a thrilling photoplay.—ve reels.

"DEADLINE AT ELEVEN"

By Ruth Byers Directed by George Fawcett

A newspaper story with all the real atmosphere of a newspaper office—a treat seldom accomplished successfully on either stage or screen. Miss Griffith is seen as a young woman of wealth, disgusted with the shams of society, who seeks to make her own way as a reporter. She clears up a murder mystery, finds a husband in a fellow reporter and quits her job.—Five reels.

"BAB'S CANDIDATE"

By Forrest Crissey Directed by Edward H. Griffith

The little town had a village pauper, living on the township because he had a grudge against some of its people. He was a lawyer and had ability. Bab's sweetheart, also a lawyer, was a candidate for the State Senate, but Bab believed that his election would ruin his career. He had the backing of Bab's father, a United States Senator. Bab ran the pauper against her lover and elected him. How she did this is shown in this splendid comedy-drama, which just bubbles over with surprises. Such sterling actors as George Fawcett, Charles Abbe and Webster Campbell are seen in support of the star.—Five reels.

"THE GARTER GIRL"

By O. Henry Directed by Edward H. Griffith

Although many of the short stories by this master of fiction have been produced on the screen by Vitagraph as two-reel gems, "The Garter Girl" is one of the few that have been presented in full five-reel feature length. It is too big for a film any shorter than that. Based on "The Memento," it is full of the romance of a country town and the glamor of the theaters of New York's famous Broadway. It is one of Corinne Griffith's best.—Five reels.

WILLIAM DUNCAN

"STEELHEART"

ANY stories of Western life have been brought to the screen, and there has yet to be recorded a case where a Western motion picture has not been a welcome and popular success—where it has been well done. In "Steelheart" William Duncan makes one think of the real Westerner and the real West. This screen star has been hailed as the logical successor of a great delineator of Western life who but recently announced his retirement from the screen. "Steelheart" should firmly establish Duncan as the greatest star of Western drama now before the public. He is an accomplished actor, a talented director, an athlete, an exponent of realism, and he knows his West. There is enough action in "Steelheart" for five motion pictures. It is without question the greatest Western feature production in which William Duncan has ever appeared in the whole course of his brilliant career.

"WHERE MEN ARE MEN"

By Ralph Cummins Directed by William Duncan

"Where Men Are Men," as the title indicates, is a stirring story of the West and is a typical Duncan production, presenting that accomplished and sturdy actor in the type of character in which he is at his best. Nearly all the action takes place in the Death Valley gold section of California during the gold fever. The beautiful scenic backgrounds and melodramatic story, together with a splendid supporting cast, make "Where Men Are Men" one of the best plays of the year. Edith Johnson appears with Mr. Duncan as co-star.

EARLE WILLIAMS

"BRING HIM IN"

By H. H. Van Loan Directed by Earle Williams and Bert Ensminger

THIS rugged tale of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police shows Earle Williams in a role that is distinctly novel for him. Although he has appeared in outdoor characters with success in such well-known plays as "The Wolf," he has been identified with the polished, dress-suit type for years. It is in the trackless wastes of the Northwest that this wholesome melodrama is scened—up north of 53, where the scarlet-coated guardians of the law know but one rule—to get their man—to "bring him in." There is drama here, and action. Stories of the Northwest Mounted seldom fail to be popular, and "Bring Him In" is one of the best of its kind. There is a strong love story.

"THE SILVER CAR"

By Frederick J. Jackson Directed by David Smith

"The best Earle Williams picture since 'The Fortune Hunter,'" is the unanimous opinion of all who have seen this splendid photoplay. As Anthony Trent, international swindler with £5,000 on his head, who "goes straight" and saves the honor of a British statesman and wins his daughter as well, Mr. Williams is at his best. A spectacular, melodramatic play, just jammed full of love, romance and adventure and thrills galore.—Six reels.

"IT CAN BE DONE"

By Frederick J. Jackson Directed by David Smith

Mr. Williams appears as the successful author of lurid fiction stories in this play. They sound so improbable that he is twitted with "They can't be done." The hero undertakes to actually live one of his stories and gets into serious difficulties. But he wins his point—and the girl.—Five reels.

"DIAMONDS ADRIFT"

By Frederick J. Jackson Directed by Chester Bennett

A romantic tale of San Francisco, the sea and Mexico. A child playfully places his mother's diamond necklace on a pet cat's neck and the cat escapes and lands on a ship bound for Mexico, and is found by the hero who is working as supercargo to prove to his father, the ship owner, that he can make good. He doesn't know that the necklace contains real jewels and gives cat and all to a beautiful senorita. What happens when he learns the truth makes the comedy-drama.—Five reels.

"THE ROMANCE PROMOTERS"

By L. H. Robbins Directed by Chester Bennett

Just the sort of a play in which Mr. Williams is at his best. Struggling as a county surveyor, the hero is engaged as engineer on the country estate of a wealthy man. His real j is to keep fortune-hunting suitors away from his employe daughter. He falls in love with the girl and she with him, t there is plenty of dramatic action before the denouement.—Fi reels.

"THE PURPLE CIPHER"

By Will F. Jenkins Directed by Chester Benn

A thrilling mystery play in which the solution does not co until the very end. The scenes are laid in San Francisco, pa ticularly in its Chinese section and many real Chinese men a women are seen in the play. How a United States submari upsets the plans of a band of blackmailers is one of the su prises.—Five reels.

"A MASTER STROKE"

By Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey Directed by Chester Benn

A story of high and low finance with most of Wall street le out. Fresh from college, with an abiding faith in himself, t hero is left in charge of his employer's office, with instructio to take no action in the business world while the broker away. He thinks he sees a chance to make a pot of money f his employer, is nipped and is saved from utter ruin only the cleverness of his secretary. So he marries her.—Five ree

"CAPTAIN SWIFT"

By C. Haddon Chambers Directed by Tom Terr

Captain Swift was a bush ranger in Australia, although gentleman by birth and instinct. He robbed only the ric There was a price on his head and he fled to England, whe he fell in love with a titled gentlewoman, and after many a ventures, won her heart and hand. "Captain Swift" is adaptation of the famous stage play of the same name by Haddon Chambers.—Five reels.

"THE FORTUNE HUNTER"

By Winchell Smith Directed by Tom Terr

Winchell Smith's famous stage success made into even better story on the screen, with winsome Jean Paige playi opposite Mr. Williams. "The Fortune Hunter" is a hum story, crowded with both humor and pathos, and yet filled wi dramatic action. Accepted generally as one of the best pictur ever made by the star.—Seven reels.

"A ROGUE'S ROMANCE"

By H. H. Van Loan Directed by James You

The scenes in this highly unusual picture shift rapidly fro underground resorts of Parisian Apaches to the fashionab shops of the Rue de la Paix. All of the scenes are laid France, and Earle Williams appears as a dashing French a venturer thought to have a heart of steel beneath his immac late dinner coat. In reality, while he preys on the ultra-ric he is helping the poor, the orphaned, the sick. "A Rogue Romance" is also a very pretty love story.—Five reels.

ALICE CALHOUN

"THE MATRIMONIAL WEB"

By C. Graham Baker — Directed by Edward Jose

DIRECTED by one of the best known directors in the United States, Alice Calhoun, in "The Matrimonial Web," shows that she has taken full advantage of her opportunity. Great emotional work is required of the star in this entrancing picture and wide contrasts in characterization. As the daughter of a revenue officer seeking to round up daring smugglers she mixes with society leaders at one time and explores the depths of the underworld at another. A love interest is interwoven, and the imax comes as a surprise. A picture you will like.

"PEGGY PUTS IT OVER"

By G. Burr-Lynner — Directed by G. V. Seyffertitz

A more perfect type for Alice Calhoun than Peggy Conrow, e heroine in "Peggy Puts It Over," couldn't be found. Miss alhoun is full of life and "go" and an adept at all outdoor orts. Just such a girl is Peggy of the story, who comes me from college a sweet girl graduate. She finds that her ther, who can control big men in the financial world, has en bested by some country folk when he attempted to make anges in their village. Peggy, nothing daunted, undertakes e job and puts it over, but not until she has undergone some culiar and unexpected setbacks.—Five reels.

"CLOSED DOORS"

Harry Dittmar — Directed by G. V. Seyffertitz

"Closed Doors" was written especially for Alice Calhoun Harry Dittmar and presents the young Vitagraph star in e role for which she is most perfectly adapted — at first a ung girl bubbling over with care-free joys of living and er as the beautiful bride of a year. Her faith in humanity ds her into dangerous paths and nearly costs her her husnd. Harry C. Browne is Miss Calhoun's leading man, and re is a splendid supporting company, including Bernard ndall, the noted "heavy" of the far-famed "Within the w."—Five reels.

"THE CHARMING DECEIVER"

Mrs. Owen Bronson — Directed by George L. Sargent

Miss Calhoun has a serious role in this tense story by Mrs. nson. The young Vitagraph star is closely associated with nedy-drama, in which her beauty, youth and vivaciousness are in perfect accord, but in "The Charming Deceiver" she shows that she also excels in emotional roles. While dramatic in its action, there is nothing of the morbid about the play, and it is clean as the proverbial whistle.—Five reels.

"PRINCESS JONES"

By Joseph Francis Poland — Directed by G. V. Seyffertitz

Alice Calhoun, Vitagraph's beautiful young star, was fortunate in the selection of this whimsical, entertaining comedy for her initial appearance in stellar honors. The theater-going public took her to their hearts, and ever since her popularity has been growing in leaps and bounds. Christened "Princess" by her devoted mother to offset the more common name of Jones, the little country girl is mistaken for a reigning Princess who is being sought by her loyal subjects and has some exciting adventures. She doesn't gain a throne, but she does find a husband.—Five reels.

ANTONIO MORENO

"THE SECRET OF THE HILLS"

By William Garrett — Directed by Chester Bennett

PERFECTION stamps this newest Antonio Moreno production. Moreno's handsome features and fiery Latin temperament are admirably suited to this romantic story of London and the hills of Scotland. Spurred on by a young English girl he has met under unusual circumstances, the hero seeks to find for her a treasure hidden in the Scottish hills through a cryptogram found in her father's effects. A group of crooks have the same object. The play has been elaborately produced, the mountain scenes in Scotland being particularly impressive.—Six reels.

"THREE SEVENS"

By Perley Poore Moore — Directed by Chester Bennett

Antonio Moreno's strong personality lends itself admirably to this tense and unusual story of prison life, and while the play is by no means propaganda, it has a strong appeal for prison reform. "Three Sevens" is Convict 777. The convicts in the State Prison rebel at the harsh treatment by the Warden and overpower their keepers. They hold their own Court and discharge those they believe entitled to freedom. There are many sensational scenes as "Three Sevens" recaptures the ringleaders. "Three Sevens" is also a love story.—Five reels.

¶ Every exhibitor subscriber on Motion Picture News' circulation books is a voluntary, paid-in-full subscriber—who buys The News because he wants it and reads it because he has paid for it.

¶ And there are eight thousand three hundred and forty of them —as shown by the latest A. B. C. statement to be filed.

¶ An exhibitor subscription list is so far ahead of the nearest competition that there is no comparison.

Advertising Supremacy Tells the Story: In this year, to date, The News is 388½ advertising pages ahead of its nearest competitor.

What's your biggest worry, Mr. Producer?

That next story, isn't it?

Why shop around? The Palmer Photoplay Corporation's unequaled facilities are at your disposal—the cream of the world's stories, ready for you to read—carefully selected originals—magazine fiction—stage plays—novels—stories backed by rare judgment of picture values.

THE PALMER INSTITUTION has saved the day for more than one producer. Directing every ounce of its energy toward the creation of better screen stories, it has in three years grown to be the largest clearing house for photoplay material in the world.

It has become the most unique and one of the most indispensable factors in modern filmdom. Visualize one hundred busy people, many of them trained intensively in but one phase of the work—screen-story values; imagine a constant flow of ideas and stories of every description pouring into this great clearing house from all parts of the world. That will give you some conception of the magnitude of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation.

Why we train Photoplaywrights

If you have thought of the Palmer organization as merely a "correspondence school" you have a vague idea of its scope, service and chief purpose.

Its Department of Education is for the training of new photodramatists. It is under the supervision of Cecil B. De Mille, Thos. H. Ince, Jesse L. Lasky, Frank E. Woods, Frederick Palmer, C. Gardner Sullivan, Allan Dwan, Lois Weber, James R. Quirk and Rob Wagner. This department is but an adjunct to the big idea back of the Palmer organization.

The future Jeanie MacPhersons, Frances Marions, C. Gardner Sullivans, Rex Beaches, Mary Roberts Rinehartses and Rupert Hugheses are numbered among the earnest, cultivated men and women who are now studying photoplay writing through the Palmer Course and Service. This department is the only school teaching any subject by correspondence that compels its students to pass a literacy and psychological examination before admitting them to training. We first discover natural talent, then develop it. Unusual screen material is the result.

The three prize winners in the J. Parker Reed, Jr., $5,000 scenario contest were Palmer students. They won against a field of nearly 10,000 scenarios entered.

But the big idea of Palmer service to producers is to judge every story—published or original—upon its merits as a screen story. No partiality is shown Palmer students.

Our relations with Big Authors

Recognized authors—hundreds of them—have found in this organization the service they have long sought. They like a straight commission of 10 per cent on sales—never any more—with its assurance that they will receive all but the 10 per cent, and no less. It is good business—a square deal for buyer and seller.

Some day you will need a good story for your next production. It will not cost you a cent for this service; the author pays the commission, you know.

Get Together

We've Got To, Eventually—So, Let's Go!

ONE of the brightest signs of the times we have recently noticed is the growing belief among exhibitors, distributors and producers that some sort of a joint committee, fairly representative of the three branches of the industry, is at last necessary and possible.

This committee will not deal with rentals, advance deposits, uniform contracts, theatre or exchange ownership, nor with any of the commercial problems regularly arising out of the business relations of one branch with another.

But it will deal with censorship and all other legislation threatening the life, health and progress of the industry as a whole; it will concern itself with constructive matters involving the industry's good name; it will speak to the public with the voice and authority of a united industry.

A united industry!

If that one step is accomplished every single individual in this industry, irrespective of any other consideration, can well shake hands with himself and say that a very simple, sensible, profitable and honorable step forward has been taken.

THE writer was one of those who helped at the birth and development of two Associations designed to unify the industry.

He can say with positive knowledge that the motives of the founders of each organization were wholly unselfish, devoid of politics and aimed only at the common good. But these motives proved to be utopian—sadly utopian.

It did seem at the time that the members of the three interdependent branches of the same industry could belong to one Association, meet on the same floor and settle their differences—like men.

But they couldn't.

The industry was too young; still is too young.

Sometimes these things will be done—by men. Today the effort is hopeless.

The writer, speaking for himself, has dismissed all thought that for the present the National Association, or any other organization, can weld and hold together the industry's three branches.

But, assuredly, some unification is possible between the existing organizations—a unification simply for common defense against outside invasion of our rights and properties. A unification to uphold the industry's good name and dignity.

Such a step is simple and elementary; its necessity is beyond argument.

Moreover, it seems to me, that every member has a right to demand that such a step be taken.

WE have today a National Association which is now functioning as a producers and distributors organization.

We have a National League of Exhibitors.

If the National Association is not all that it might be then the blame lies at the door of each of its individual members.

Calling each producer and distributor by name—and including ourselves as a trade paper member—we have simply this to say: the National Association is what each of you make it. If you don't attend meetings, if you don't pay your dues, if you resign without patience with and fairness to the broad cause, if you always put your own business interests or vanity or what not first and the major interests of your industry last—if in short you don't take the Association with the utmost seriousness, then you've no right to complain about your tax burden of seventy-five millions annually, the insulting and killing brand of censorship and the fact that the public, the legislatures and the banks regard you with consternation and contempt.

The Motion Picture Theatres Owners Association is the strongest, by far, National Organization of exhibitors the industry has seen. It is in fact the onlv organization thus far accomplished.

The work hasn't been easy; and it isn't finished bv any means.

Ask any State President. He will tell you the facts if he cares to.

Exhibitors are just as selfish and short sighted as the rest of us. They're willing to let George do it.

But among the good exhibitors there are enough men of brains and action to maintain a national organization which is on the job—and functions.

The menace now is that with increasing strength this organization may decide that it can act alone for a very large industry which produces, distributes and exhibits pictures.

It can't.

Commercially it can't. Every exhibitor in this country is dependent upon the capital, skill and enterprise of those who create and distribute the goods he sells to the public. He can't take their place. He will prosper as they prosper. He needs them just exactly as they need him.

As against outside matters, the exhibitor organization is not and never will be self-sufficient. The confidence and support of the industry's allies, the respect o fthe bank and the legislator, the fear of the politician never will be and never has been won by a house divided against itself.

That's beyond any argument large or small.

THE next step of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association, the next logical and broad-minded step in its admirable growth, the next unselfish, manly act, is the extension of its hand to the National Association.

And the next step of the National Association is the solidification of its potential strength to the point where it can give this hand a grip so firm that both hands will stick together in any crisis.

This gripping of hands means simply the formation of a joint committee with full power to speak and act for an industry.

That's all.

It's as simple as it is inevitable.

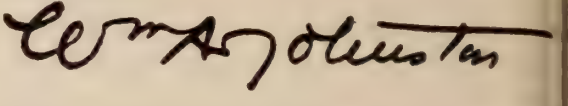
WE are standing on the threshold of our toughest year. If we don't fight as never before—a hundred, a thousand times harder—we'll have censorship to follow New York's lead in every state in the Union.

Other considerations have GOT to be put aside.

The industry is at stake. And this goes home to every exhibitor who wants the cooperation of his bank, the respect of his community, the security of his investment and the perpetuation of his business.

Mr. Cohen says he welcomes cooperation. The National Association, we believe, wants it. Every man jack in this business wants—and should demand it.

Let's go!



Eastman Answers Cromelin on Film Imports Topic

ANOTHER letter on the import tariq question has been received by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS from George Eastman, of the Eastman Kodak Company, in answer to the statement of Paul Cromelin, of Inter-Ocean Film Corp., which was published in the issue of August 27th. Mr. Eastman seeks to bear out his original statement that war conditions formed practically an embargo on film importation into this country during 1914 to 1917. His letter follows:

"Certain statements regarding raw motion picture film made in the letter of Mr. Paul Cromelin, president and general manager of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, which was published in your issue of August 27, 1921, necessitates a reply.

"Figures were quoted from the official reports of the Department of Commerce regarding the importation of raw motion picture film into this country during the five years, 1914-1918, but no mention was made of the countries from which these imports came. These Government records show that of the total imports of approximately 260,000,000 feet during these five years (as quoted in the above mentioned letter) 225,824,677 feet of this film were imported from France, or over 86 per cent. The following table shows the imports of this film for the four full war years:

"Imports of Motion Picture Film, Sensitized, Unexposed.

	From France.	From all Other Countries.	Total Imports.
1915	45,138,307 ft.	16,264,005 ft.	61,402,312 ft.
1916	58,217,224 "	273,564 "	58,490,788 "
1917	52,223,715 "	70,360 "	52,294,075 "
1918	45,077,632 "	2,385,083 "	47,462,715 "
Total 4 years	200,656,878 "	18,993,012 "	219,649,890 "

"If all this film had been placed upon the market, it would represent only a small proportion of the total film used in this country. It is, however, well known in motion picture film circles that practically all of the French film was imported and used by the maker and that it was not placed on the market. During the four full war years, only 18,993,012 feet came from countries other than France, and the large proportion of this came during the first year of the war. These imports from countries other than France represent practically all of the raw motion picture film that can be considered as being placed upon the market in this country. From July 1, 1915, to June 30, 1917, the amount of this film was negligible. These figures all bear out my original statement that 'from the Fall of 1914 to the Fall of 1918, or even later, practically all foreign made motion picture film was kept out of the American market. No possible tariff could equal the embargo of the war conditions.'

"It is stated in the above mentioned letter that no raw stock was imported from Germany during the war or during 1920. It is true that no film was imported from Germany in 1920, but if the 1921 figures are investigated, it is found that Germany began sending film into this country in February, 17,585 feet being sent during that month. Since February, 1921, the German film has been imported into this country at a rapidly increasing rate, until in June, 1921 (the last month for which statistics are available) Germany imported into the United States 7,422,300 feet of raw motion picture film, which last mentioned figure was over 40 per cent. of the entire importations of such film for that month.

"We have never stated that Belgian and English film imported into this country was not coated upon American made celluloid base. We stated that all German and French film is made upon German or French made celluloid. The Government records for 1921 show that not one foot of English raw motion picture film has been imported into this country between January 1 and July 1 of this year; whereas, in 1920, 6,350,300 feet were imported. The Government records also show that in February, 1921, 7,156,680 feet of raw motion picture film was imported from Belgium, and in June, 1921, only 641,850 feet. These figures would indicate that German made film, coated upon German made celluloid, is driving out of the market the British and Belgian film. It is well known in the trade that a motion picture film manufacturer can produce his celluloid base cheaper than he can buy it outside other things being equal, the manufacturer who buys his celluloid base cannot successfully compete with the manufacturer who makes his own base.

"Reference to the earnings of the Kodak Company is the favorite resort of all competitors who wish to attack the company. One might infer from the above mentioned letter of Mr. Cromelin's that the earnings of the Kodak Company were derived entirely from the sale of motion picture film. Such an inference is, of course, erroneous, as this company manufactures and markets a large number of products other than motion picture film, such as cameras, photographic paper, portrait film, dry plates, sundry photographic materials and supplies for the professional and commercial photographer.

"I trust that you will see fit to publish this letter so that complete information on the questions raised in the letter will be given to all those interested."

First National to Distribute All of Associated Producers' Pictures

irst National to Absorb Associated Producers' Distribution System

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES will, as soon as the necessary machinery is perfected, tribute all productions of the Associ- d Producers. The contract, which ds for three years and provides for an ension by the exercise of the requisite ions, was signed last week in the Con- ss Hotel, Chicago, Robert Lieber, presi- t of the Associated First National tures, and Oscar Price, president of sociated Producers, being the signa- es for their respective organizations. der the contract the distribution system First National will entirely absorb that erto maintained by Associated Pro- ers. All contracts at present in force ween exhibitors and Associated Pro- ers will be carried out under the new angement, declares the statement just ued from First National headquarters connection with the new deal.

The negotiations which ended in the cution of this contract were begun by nuel Katz, of Balaban & Katz, First tional franchise holders for Illinois, Al Lichtman, general manager of As- iated Producers, about two months ago. ong the others present at various ges during the negotiations were Oscar ce, President of Associated Producers; bert Lieber, President of Associated st National; J. D. Williams, manager Associated First National; Harry O. walbel, Secretary-treasurer; Tromas Ince, Mack Sennett, Nathan Gordon, st National franchise holder for New gland; Abe Blank, First National nchise holder for Iowa and Nebraska, Bruce Johnson, head of the legal de- tment of First National; Moe Mark, L. Finkelstein, H. O. Davis, J. Parker nd, Jr., and E. M. Ascher.

Al Lichtman will continue as General nager of Associated Producers, and represent Associated Producers in all relations with First National. There be an Associated Producers' repre- tative in the First National exchanges oughout the country.

Practically no time whatever will be lost ffecting the transfer of distribution re- nsibility, so that it is confidently ex- ted that Associated First National will booking all Associated Producers' at- ctions on or before October 1st. While fundamental changes or modifications he First National distribution machin- will be necessary to handle the Asso- ed Producers' output; at least one cial innovation will be of interest to ibitors.

This is the opening of a new comedy artment, which will devote its attention lusively to comedies and will have a special sales force at its disposal, handling nothing but comedies. The Associated Producers' contribution to the Comedy Department will be twelve, two-reel, Mack Sennett specials a year and six special Sennetts starring Ben Turpin.

Mack Sennett and President Lieber of First National watching Thos. H. Ince affix his signature to the contract of the Associated Producers-First National deal

The Chaplin two-reel productions and the Buster Keaton comedies will, of course, come naturally within the scope of the Comedy Department's operations.

On account of existing contracts between Associated Producers and exhibitors, all Associated Producers' product released until January 1, 1922, including the pictures heretofore released, will be distributed entirely on the open market basis. These pictures are available to every exhibitor in the country.

After January 1, the pictures to be released will be distributed partially on the franchise plan and partially on the open market basis. Announcement of definite details will be made in due time regarding the method of releasing the pictures delivered subsequently to January 1.

Officials of both organizations were enthusiastic over the successful termination of the business sessions, and vied with each other in pointing out the significance of the realization of such complete cooperation between the leading independent producers and the foremost independent exhibitors of the country, as exemplified in the First National-Associated Producers' deal.

"There is no doubt that the Associated Producers' output will rank with the finest the motion picture field has to offer this year," said President Lieber in commenting on the consolidation after the contract had been signed. "The theatres which are fortunate enough to get First National attractions, consisting of the productions of First National's present group of stars and directors, together with the Associated Producers' pictures, the work of some of the best known producers in the country, will have a guaranteed supply of high-grade attractions such as will place them easily in the lead in their respective territories and further insure their future and standing.

"I feel that our assumption of the distribution of this important group of quality productions places First National not only definitely, but far in the lead of its competitors, and my only regret is that we have so few First National sub-franchises left to sell."

"The association of independent producers has secured an outlet for their pictures which promises adequate returns to warrant the making of the greatest of feature productions," said Thomas H. Ince. "Independent theatre owners throughout America and the entire world will now have a choice of splendid productions which have not heretofore been available for them. Forthcoming feature pictures of the producers who have been associated with me in the Associated Producers, Inc., will now reach a far greater and more efficient distribution than would have been

South Has New Producing Unit

Frank J. Carroll

BEHIND the announcement of the recent formation of the Cumberland Motion Picture Producing Company is the news that Frank J. Carroll, pioneer screen producer, has brought to the picture field the interest of a representative group of Tennessee business men and a plan to utilize on a big scale the picturesque backgrounds of the Cumberland mountains.

The Cumberland Company, although only recently organized, has already closed a contract for a lease on studio property at the Old Hickory Powder Plant, the Government's two-million-dollar war plant now controlled by the Nashville Industrial Corporation. The contract was closed through B. P. Morse, general manager of the Industrial Corporation.

At this plant, located twelve miles from Nashville, at Jacksonville, Tennessee, the new producing company will have facilities on a big scale for the location of studios and general offices. The property leased includes the large community theatre "Y" building, now operated by Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company. The contract also gives the Cumberland Motion Picture Company the right to use other ground at the powder plant for the making of pictures.

Frank J. Carroll, president and director of the corporation, was in New York during the past week arranging for the installation of studio equipment and conferring with leading players, directors and authors. Productions to be made will be on the "super" feature scale with which Mr. Carroll's name is identified, such as "The Cavell Case," and "For the Freedom of the World."

W. J. Wallace, of the Norwell & Wallace Lumber Company, is first vice-president of the Cumberland Motion Picture Producing Company. V. S. Tupper, the second vice-president, is president of the Nashville Chamber of Commerce. C. A. Conley, secretary and treasurer, is associated with D. D. Canfield in the Model Laundry, one of the biggest organizations of its kind in the South. The board of directors of the picture company likewise includes representation of the most prominent Nashville industrial organizations, for, in addition to D. D. Canfield, it also includes the officers already mentioned and J. P. Lawrence, of Herbrick & Lawrence, electrical and plumbing contractors; B. C. Edgar, of the Railway Light Company; L. M. Gibson, manager of the Maxwell House, and H. W. Spicer.

Alex J. Barthell, well known in Nashville, will be studio manager for the Cumberland unit. Mr. Carroll, who left New York late this week, expects to return to the film centre within a few days and at that time will make further definite announcement regarding the production plans of the company.

Mr. Savini states that the Monarch Film Company, of Memphis, Tenn., is also trying to locate this man, as well as the Associated Producers Exchange of Atlanta. It is requested that any exhibitor knowing the whereabouts of Merryman wire Mr. Savini at once at his expense.

Musicians' Strike is Still in Force; Kansas City Exhibs Win Point

dianapolis Musicians Out Rejecting 20% Cut; Arbitration in Buffalo

DVICES from various centers throughout the country indicate that the musicians' strike is still in ce with here and there evidences of gress towards an amicable settlement. Kansas City those in charge of the mu- ans' walkout decided to yield a point he exhibitors and authorize the resump- n of orchestral service in the five big vntown picture theatres. In Indiana- is on Sunday evening union musicians uck in wholesale fashion when the old eement expired and a new contract pro- ing for a 20 per cent reduction was re- ted by them. In Buffalo the musicians' ge controversy has been submitted to a rd of arbitration.

After two weeks of wrangling, the Mu- ans Protective Association has yielded other point to Kansas City exhibitors l decided to place orchestras in the five downtown motion picture houses. The strike on the part of the musicians s August 17. Since that time first run atres have been without orchestras.

The dispute centered about the lapse of e in the expiration of the old contract ween musicians and exhibitors August The new contract provides for the ne wage scale but calls for a six hour instead of five hours and a half. The nt at issue was whether the musicians uld work six or five and a half hours ring August. The last dispute involved pay of the organists. Each theatre two organists and the musicians' or- ization contended that one of the or- ists should be considered a leader and eive 50 per cent more pay. The ex- itors stood their ground, refusing to be tated to, and the musicians yielded.

Numerous letters of alleged threats and rnings, regarding the playing of music the theatres of the smaller towns of ssouri and Kansas, have been received exhibitors during the past two weeks, s declared.

The first notice is quoted: "If you are ng music in your theatre you are violat- the law." This was followed by an- er card, quoted as follows: "You are l violating the law if you are using sic in your theatre."

Many letters of complaint and inquiry ve been received by Lawrence Goldman, unsel for the Motion Picture Theatre vners of Missouri, from exhibitors. Re- rding the matter, Mr. Goldman said:

"On this card, in the right hand cor- r, one finds the name of the attorney r the American Society of Authors, mposers and Publishers. They are tak- g this means of frightening the exhibi- rs into submission.

"The means of extortion as is here mployed—such as anonymous warnings and threats—will not create a submissive spirit upon the part of the exhibitors but will, on the other hand, give birth to such resentment that will result in the bitterest opposition to the so-called Music Tax. The exhibitors of Missouri and Kansas are to be reasoned with, not bluffed and bullied.

"The words 'music tax' as applied to this extortion is a misnomer. Tax is recognized as applying to an assessment made by the government for its maintenance. The money secured by this so-called 'tax' goes into the private coffers of a few people.

"During the past five years every type of 'bloodsucker' has tried to victimize the exhibitor. While times were flushed, box-office receipts big, money handled carelessly, the theatre owner 'paid' rather than inconvenience himself by an assertion of his rights. Then again, no organized movement existed for mutual protection. Today times are different. The exhibitor is not overloaded with money, he is more careful in his overhead expenses, and believes in a stricter adherence to his rights. And greater than all this, there exists today in each state—Missouri and Kansas—powerful exhibitor organizations created and functioning for the protection of the industry and united action against fakers and schemers of all kinds. It is a known fact that popular compositions that made hundreds of thousands of dollars for the music publishers were originally bought for infinitesimal sums. The market price on compositions today ranks from fifteen to fifty dollars each. In computing the sales price of the music, the royalty (as provided by the copyright laws) is the principal item. When Mr. Exhibitor purchases his orchestration, the amount he pays covers the original royalty. If he must pay a license for the privilege of playing the music he has already bought and paid one royalty, what is to prevent the owner of patents on every part of an automobile from charging an auto owner a royalty on each part covered by his various patents because the machine is being used as a public carrier?

"The injustice in one is the cancer of the other. Not a particle of equity can be found to justify either instance. The author or composer is entitled to one royalty which he secures from the sale of his composition—the sale should carry with it every right for its use whether such use is public or private.

"What action the exhibitor organizations will take has yet to be decided. This question will demand decisive action. As conditions may possibly vary among the theatre owners, every phase and circumstance will be threshed out at the coming convention at Kansas City, September 12-13. The exhibitors must rally to their own defense. Their sincerity and co-operation must be evidenced by their presence at the coming meeting. The helping hand of the associations will be extended only to those who are willing and ready to give their time and attention to this very important problem which will command first consideration from the assembled theatre owners at the conference."

The union musicians of Indianapolis walked out of all theatres except the legitimate theatre, the Murat, on last Sunday night when the old wage scale agreement expired. Managers offered a new contract with a twenty per cent reduction in wages. This the union rejected. The agreements of operators and stage hands also expired at the same time but new contracts were signed with an average wage reduction of fifteen per cent.

The musicians, according to the employers, struck in defiance of the orders from their international headquarters in New York City that they continue on the job under protest of the wage cut until the matter could be arbitrated.

None of the photoplay houses were operating with orchestras as late as Tuesday evening of this week. It had been agreed by the heads of the legitimate, vaudeville, motion-picture and burlesque

Late News from the Coast

AN agreement has been reached between, Turner Dahnken and Langley of San Francisco and Gore Brothers, Ramisch and Lesser of Los Angeles. The two factions now control the theatre situation jointly in Huntington Park, Taft and Glendale. The fight for the possession of theatres in this territory lasted for several months and was hotly contested by both factions.

The proposed showing of the Clara Smith Hamon film, "Fate," caused the City Council of Los Angeles to revive the censorship bill passed several years ago. Estelle Lawton Lindsay was recently appointed Commissioner of Films, but refused to accept. She is a former Council woman and is now a special writer on a local newspaper, and has always been considered a friend of the film interests. The Affiliated Pictures Interests, the Chamber of Commerce, merchants and manufacturers and other organizations are bringing all possible pressure to bear in an effort to cause the Council to kill the ordinance.

A company has been organized to produce one picture, "Where is My Wandering Boy To-Night?" under the supervision of B. P. Fineman and Bennie Zeidman.

Samuel Goldwyn, on Coast, Sees Improvement

There has been a big improvement in the general condition of the motion picture industry, in the opinion of Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, who left California on September 6 for New York after spending two months at the Goldwyn studios.

The betterment in the motion picture business has been particularly marked within the past thirty days, Mr. Goldwyn stated, and there is good reason for expecting a continuing improvement.

Western New York Exhibitors Organize Unit

A western New York unit of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America has been organized with the following officers: Howard F. Smith, Palace theatre, president; William Dellemuth, Broadway Lyceum, vice-president; Samuel Carver, Empire, secretary, all of Buffalo and Judge John W. Schatt, Opera House, Gowanda, treasurer.

Representatives of 30 theatres attended the meeting in the Regent theatre, Buffalo, last week. Secretary Carver announces that the unit will have an executive committee of seven members to act for the membership. The organization is open to all theatre owners between Rochester and Buffalo. Rochester has a 100 per cent organization. There are 150 theatre owners eligible for membership in this territory and the unit hopes to get a 100 per cent organization in the Buffalo district. The unit will urge the repeal of the daylight savings law and will also ask that the 30 day protection clause given in certain Buffalo first run contracts be eliminated. The unit will hold weekly meetings.

Australia Imposes High Tariff on All American-Made Pictures

ew Bill Raises Duty from One and Half to Three Pence Per Foot

HE Australian Parliament recently passed a bill which imposes a duty of three pence (six cents) per al foot on all American-made produc-ıs imported into Australia and on all glish-made productions staged in Aus-lia by an American company. That is news just received in a communication m Hall H. Carleton, of Sydney, Aus-lia. Mr. Hall declares that the enforcing this measure will spell ruination for ly twenty-five per cent of the exhibitors Australia and a tremendous loss in rev-ıe to every exchange. Formerly film porters were paying one penny per foot ty on motion-pictures imported from gland and one-and-a-half pence on sub-ts imported from all other countries. e three-pence duty recently inaugurated presents, therefore, an increase of one ndred per cent in the tariff imposed on nerican motion-pictures.

For a long time past several of the im-rters have been losing heavily, whereas ners have managed to just break even. ese conditions have been realized prin-pally because of the excessive overhead penses entailed in placing the features a selling basis. Now, as a result of rliament's action, the majority of the porters are placed in the position where e closing down of their business must be riously considered unless the tax is ssed on to the public, according to Mr. rleton's letter to the NEWS. The over-ad expenses of nearly every film ex-ange makes large profits a matter of eer impossibility, particularly when it is own that a great number of the exhibi-rs are heavily indebted to some of these changes without any possible means of ttling their liabilities.

To oppose the increased duty a general eeting of the English-American and Con-ental importers and Australian film pro-ucers and a full executive of the Feder-ed Picture Showmen's Association of ustralia has made an emphatic protest gainst the imposition. It was quite evi-nt, the speakers contended, that the ajority of the members in the House of epresentatives who voted for the in-ease in duty on films were not fully ersed with the facts of the trade, and the iblic had yet to realize how seriously it as going to effect that most popular rm of amusement.

The executive of the Showmen's Asso-ation maintains that it is practically im-ossible to pass the tax on to the public wing to their already being burdened ith the Federal Amusement Tax and the ct that the prices of admission have had be increased from time to time to meet e heavy increases of wages and other working expenses. The majority of the Australian exhibitors say they cannot shoulder the increase themselves, owing to the small margin of profit under which they are working. To such an extent have the profits of a large number of country and outlying suburban exhibitors diminished that they have been compelled to reduce their number of showing nights.

After a long discussion at the meeting it was decided to take the matter up with all possible energy with members of the Government and place before them facts and figures proving the duty would not in any way increase local manufacture, which is apparently one of the reasons for its imposition, as the imposition of the 1½d. had not brought any more local organizations to light, and unless the duty was removed the quantity of film imported would have to be considerably reduced and eventually a large number of exhibitors would be forced to close their doors. Those present at the meeting included H. E. Ross Soden, Fox Films; Corporation, John Corbett Jones, Selznick Pictures, and representatives of Paramount Pictures, Australasian Films, Mason Super Films, First National, Universal, E. J. and Dan Carroll, Beaumont Smith productions, J. Williams Bros. and the executive of the C. Williams Films, Co-operative Films, Federated Picture Showmen's Association including Messrs. Szarka, Howe, McIntyre, Eastmuir, Figgett and King.

It was agreed at the meeting of the Film Renters Association held several days later to impose an increase all round in film hire of 12½ per cent. When advised of this move the exhibitors decided to raise their admission prices and a new scale of rates will come into effect commencing the first of August. Notwithstanding these increases, neither exchange nor exhibitor will be able to recover the amount paid out in concordance with the 100 per cent tax.

"Present developments give occasion for the opinion that the imposition of this new tax was brought about by certain parties concerned in the manufacture of films locally," declares Mr. Carleton in his letters. "Certain information was brought to the showmen and exchanges proving conclusively that a speculator who had invested in a certain Australian production did not derive very great pecuniary benefit from the film he financed and this man saw fit to make certain statements—in the right direction—which were absolutely untrue yet were resultant in the tax mentioned. He, together with other local producers—seeing an opportunity to get themselves well into the limelight and perhaps obtain a chance to place 'dud' films on the market—went at the idea of an increase in duty with all the force at their disposal. Unhappily for the importers they succeeded.

"And—even to the feeble-minded—it is easily seen how foolish the tax is if the purpose is to increase local production. In the past every production staged in Australia has earned treble the amount of an imported production—and this refers to the worst Australian against the finest American feature. And, furthermore, showmen have booked such productions and paid double their usual amount of film hire—not only direct to the producer, but in addition they are satisfied to place an important foreign feature on the shelf for the period during which they screen the local article.

"What with a censorship that is sufficient to send an ordinary man crazy because of the very insanity of those in charge—a continual howling from pulpit, press and bench against the motion picture and its evils—and the new 100 per cent duty—why the man who has the nerve to speculate in the importation of foreign films these days deserves a celluloid halo for his bravery!"

Allied Laboratories Confer With Eastman

A DELEGATION from the Allied Film Laboratory, Inc., was in Rochester on Tuesday in conference with George Eastman and Jules E. Brulatour, regarding future conditions in the moving picture industry.

Tom Evans, President of the Association, gave out the statement that pending the completion of negotiations nothing definite can be given out but that Tuesday's conference, which lasted practically all day, was most satisfactory, and that the outlook is exceedingly bright for the entire film industry.

Rumors current in New York during the week were strongly to effect that the result of the Rochester conferences would be an announcement within a few days from the Eastman Kodak Company. This announcement, it is hinted, will mark an amicable settlement of the controversy. It is possible that Eastman will withdraw from the laboratory field.

The orchestra was recruited last week from the ranks of Federation musicians, by Erno Rapee, conductor of the Capitol Grand orchestra, and with less than a week of rehearsals, gave a performance on Sunday.

theatres that the vaudeville and burlesque houses should be permitted to have first choice of the available non-union musicians in the formation of new orchestras. The picture theatres were getting along with pipe organs and pianos.

The musicians' wage controversy in Buffalo has been submitted to a board of arbitration. A plan has been agreed upon by both sides which has averted a strike. The men for the present will receive the same pay as in the past, except that 10 per cent will be given to Harry C. Davis, secretary of the musicians' union, who will deposit it as a separate fund in a local bank. A board of arbitration will meet to discuss the 10 per cent slash. If this board decides that the decrease is a just one, the ten per cent will be returned to the managers. If it is decided that the cut is unjust the money will be given to the men in a lump sum as back pay. A similar plan is expected to be adopted with the stage hands and operators.

Lever Endorses News Editorial on Film Tariff

THE following letter was received during the week from Alfred Lever, the representative of the Stoll Enterprises of Great Britain, by William A. Johnston, editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

"Dear Mr. Johnston:

"I have read with great pleasure your leading article in your issue of 27th August, on the question of the proposed ad valorem tariff and you have presented the case in so powerful and trenchant a manner that I feel that the thanks of all those who are interested in our industry, whether in America or Europe, are due to you. It has given me very great pleasure to discover that the thinking and farseeing members of the film industry in this country are opposed to the measure.

"Those who favor it consist of the shortsighted section, whose vision is so limited that their horizon comprises only the outlook of today and gives no thought of tomorrow.

"Do the latter not realize that Europe must inevitably retaliate and what this retaliation must ultimately mean.

"Can they not see or be made to see that with the European market lost to America the American producer will be forced on the one hand to economize in the cost of his production and on the other hand to increase the price of rentals to exhibitors.

"What must be the logical outcome of both these measures on the part of producers?

"Let me supply the answer, in the first place poorer pictures with a consequent falling off of patronage in the picture theatres; and in the second place a further reduction in the salaries of artistes, scenarists, cameramen and staff generally.

"Has it been further overlooked that without a world market our industry could never have flourished in the past and will certainly decay in the future until the time arrives when we shall all be in the position of taking in one another's washing to get a living.

"Please accept my thanks for your good work and believe me,

"Yours very faithfully,

"Alfred Lever."

possible under old conditions. The bigness of many of these productions entitles them to the widest possible showing.

"We have just completed at my studio, 'Hail the Woman,' probably the greatest drama of American life with which I have ever been connected. Here is a production that represents our best efforts, and was produced after months of hard work and at tremendous cost. Yet if I am to make productions of this kind I can only do so through the possibility of the greatest mass of picture-goers seeing and enjoying it.

"The distribution bogey that for the past two years has threatened the constructive growth of the industry has been dispelled by this amalgamation. It is a great step forward."

"This amalgamation wins the battle for an independent screen," asserted Mack Sennett. "It makes independence for the exhibitor and independence for the producer a fact instead of a hope. It defeats, for all time, monopoly of motion pictures.

"Closer co-operation with the exhibitor has been my ideal, and I feel confident that the merger of Associated Producers and First National brings it to realization.

"I can go ahead now without fear of curtailed market making such pictures as 'Molly O,' which I have just completed with Mable Normand, knowing that they will go into the finest theatres in the land. The bogey of monopoly is gone, wiped out by a merger of the world's great theatre organization and this group of independent producers."

"The producer's greatest achievements come only when production is unhampered, and the affiliation of First National and Associated Producers, guaranteeing as it does the most widespread distribution and presentation, removes all handicaps from the producers," wired Maurice Tourneur from Los Angeles.

"I believe that the merger of these two companies, one the outstanding producing organization and the other the outstanding exhibitor organization, mean more to the theatre-going public than any single occurrence in the history of the motion picture industry.

"It means that we will be able to deliver to the screens of America better pictures than we have ever made, because it removes the biggest barrier that has confronted us.

"The limitations which have been placed on motion picture production by the necessities of complicated distribution are removed," said J. Parker Read, Jr. "It means the utmost of independence for the producer and for the exhibitor.

"It is a source of great gratification to me, and I know that it is also to the other members of Associated Producers, to know that our pictures will go direct to the exhibitors of the world through the greatest exhibitor organization in the history of motion pictures.

"It is significant that this, the biggest amalgamation in the industry's history, is between two co-operative organizations."

The consolidation was characterized by Al Lichtman, general manager of Associated Producers, as the most important move toward stabilization in the history of motion pictures.

"It makes certain the independence of motion pictures. It assures the independent exhibitor everywhere of a steady supply of consistently big pictures. It guarantees the big producers of the world assured distribution of their product upon equitable terms by which the producer is not stifled, but encouraged at all times to do his level best."

Music and The Theatre

New York's Musical Strike and Some Observations

By Charles D. Isaacson

I AM both on the sides of the musicians and the managers, and my sympathies are with both. Oftentimes the good suffer for the bad, the worthy for the unworthy. Such is often the case in the placing of union men; the workers protect the drones, the physically perfect take the invalided under the wing. In the beginning the union grew as a device against oppression, but in many instances the union itself developed into the oppressor.

In the present New York City strike, I can make no general decision on the merits. I have investigated both sides of the controversy. and the intimate close-up view I have had of both attitudes, will no doubt be interesting to all who are watching the struggle.

Sometime ago, I lunched with Arthur Judson, who is the manager of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra and was recently elected manager of the Stadium Concerts of New York. I have known Judson for years and have always found him honest, intelligent and fair, Said Judson:

"The day before the Fourth of July, a letter went out of the New York union offices refusing permission for the men to appear in the Stadium Orchestra unless certain payments were made on the National Symphony contracts (another orchestra, of which we had recruited many men). My first rehearsal date was immediately after the holidays, and we opened performances two days later. I was in a terrible state. We were cut off without an orchestra. I tried to make peace, but there was no attitude of compromise. I then saw Mr. Joseph Weber, who is the head of the Federation of Musical Unions, and he admitted that a radical element was in charge of the New York Union and was running wild. He threatened the New York union with expulsion if they did not relent with us, but they would not relent and the result was just that: The Federation expelled the local union, and cut it off from interstate protection, and we thereupon in a terrible dilemma, scoured the country for good men from other cities. We brought them into New York at great expense and even to a certain extent to a loss of artistic values. But we saved the situation; that was most important.

"What will happen" Mr. Judson repeated my question; "Why, I think the conservatives of the Union will oust the radicals and so allow business to be conducted in a plain-dealing, fair-minded way."

Since that time, the Motion Picture Theatres had their grand blow-up with the union, and now for over two weeks, the big theatres have been minus their orchestras, and have been making all kinds of makeshifts, with organists, choruses, etc.

I interviewed the various picture managers, and they agreed with Judson's idea, that the union was in the possession of radicals, and until the conservative element would return, there would be no peace.

On the other hand, I was visited by a delegation of the striking musicians who, seeking publicity and aid in the Lexington Opera House series of concerts they are giving, explained their side of the case.

"Whenever anybody asks for his rights he's called a radical" declared Mr. Clifford, the spokesman. "We are receiving $56 a week, and that is as low or lower than any other big city rates. Chicago pays $75 and Boston pays $56 but has a shorter week. Now they want us to cut our salaries 20% and we can't do it —we can't live on it. Good heavens, we help to make the show don't we? Why shouldn't we be paid living wages? They say that we demand money for overtime. In the good old days, we had to sit for hours, while the manager tried different colored tights on the chorus, and our whole nights would be gone. In protection we have to charge for overtime, but we don't do it, unless the theatre is regularly during a week running overtime.

"Now as to Mr. Weber" the speaker went on, "he is a strange creature. Always he has held the threat over our heads that he would expel us if we didn't do just as he wished. And his wishes in New York have been antagonistic always to the interests of the men. He has used high-handed methods and he will find that everything will come back to him as a boomerang. We are not radical, nor are we trying to get more than is due us. And we feel that we will win, because we have the MEN. Our men can play—and all the hacks in the world can't replace us."

There are the two sides. There is much merit to each case and I am bold enough to say that I think that both people—in fact all the factions must make compromises. But in the meantime, I have been able to observe some very interesting things. The people in the theatres, who do not care a tinker's dam about the strike, do seem to be worried about the return of the orchestras. They were a little taken off their feet by the excitement of the big choruses, ensembles, etc.—but this soon wore off, and the layman was conscious of something vital being missing. I heard the queerest comments all over the theatres—but it was made very evident that the orchestras could not be forgotten or eliminated.

Of course with such gifted men as William Reddick, Frances Moore, Ralph Brainerd and others at the organs, the organs have taken on a new meaning; they have taken a new hold on audiences.

In fact, I believe that one of the decided effects of the strike has been to make the theatre managers more than ever eager to instal organs, mechanical instruments of various orders, so that in such emergencies there can be no loss of force. Besides, for regular musical programs, the installed instruments are looming up with more importance daily. Reports show that the strike has proved an impetus all over the country to the buying of instruments. The musical trade papers report such matters as of organs replacing orchestras.

On this very situation I shall have more to say next week, but in the meantime there is one other observation which I would like to make on this strike.

I believe there will be a reduction in number of men in the orchestras of the houses—the big managers have gone too far their desire for number and quantity. M more sense can be exercised—more restr with good effect musically and financially.

At the same time, I am confident that th will be no deterrent to theatres installing chestras. There is no common sense to belief that orchestras are doomed in mot picture theatres. Inasmuch as the music is of the few things which give character t theatre, it will always be the big weapon live house will wield for patronage. And th will always be more and more theatres stalling orchestras.

Believes Sales Effected

We were pleased to receive your letter of the giving your impression as to the effect of the pre musicians' strike upon the sale of organs. Undo edly, many organ sales will result from this pre situation, as it has proven conclusively that a g organ, if skillfully played, is capable of supplying quate accompaniment, not only for the feature pic but also for comedies, weeklies and numerous novel that are a part of most theatre programs.

This company will not be able to assist the pro ers that require a permanent installation on sl notice, but we do feel that the position of the or as a valuable equipment unit has been more fir established than ever, not only for use in an emerge such as this, but "in times of peace."

We shall be pleased to hear from you further at time as your suggestions are always helpful.

Suggests Roll Instrumen

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Your favor of the 24th addressed to Mr. Gittins been passed along to the writer for attention, and reply beg to state that we believe that the striking the Motion Picture Musicians will naturally hav tendency of many of these houses considering the chase of a pipe-organ.

Although many of the larger houses of this c acter have already installed organs, and many ot have this matter under consideration—a large num of which will no doubt decide that the organ will the answer to their troubles, for the organ whic equipped with a roll can be operated either with or manually and making it necessary to depend on one individual instead of several musicians.

While our corporation manufactures pipe-organs, efforts so far have been along the line for the h beautiful but realizing the growing demand in the tion picture houses, we have recently given the ma some thought and possibly will a little later h something on the subject.

WELTE-MIGNON CORPORATIO

Selling More Organs Than Ever

Has this strike had any real effect? If so, we h not noticed it as our organ orders for Seeburg-S Unit Organs have been better in the last 30 days at any time in our history. Our field workers re plenty of prospects and no particular pessimism am the exhibitors because of this strike.

In the final analysis, we believe that the organ b ness will show a decided improvement right along while there might be temporary set-backs, somet more than a musicians' strike will be necessary paralyze the industry.

We know nothing of the merits of the musici case against the exhibitors in this strike nor do wish to be quoted as siding one way or the other.

Long Tour Reveals Hard Times Now a Myth

"People who talk of hard times would do well to make a tour of the motion picture houses in their locality, before they shouted too loudly about the tightness of money," said M. J. Mintz, recently returned from a tour of the 22 offices of the Synchronized Scenario Music Company, of which he is Vice-President and General Manager.

"There can be no doubt of the fact that we are once again coming into our own" continued Mr. Mintz, "if we are to judge by the vast crowds I saw in all the motion picture houses I visited in my recent tour of the country. "However, if the exhibitor forgets to pay attention to the music that his players render he is likely to find a dropping off of patronage. Where once the public sought only silent entertainment in motion picture houses, today after visiting the larger houses and thoroughly enjoying the master presentations offered there, they are dissatisfied when they find that Music one of the major features of the larger houses, has been neglected in their local house."

"Old Nest" to Show in 150 Houses Sept. 11

On Sunday, September 11, Goldwyn will release the Rupert Hughes photoplay, "The Old Nest," simultaneously in more than 150 theatres. This is claimed by Goldwyn to be the first time in the history of the industry that one picture has been shown in so many theatres immediately upon its release.

When "The Old Nest" is released on September 11, it will have been advertised by full-page and double-page spreads in twenty-one magazines which circulate in every city, town and village in the country. A double-page spread advertisement of "The Old Nest" appeared in the Saturday Evening Post of September 10 and in the October issues of Photoplay and Motion Picture Magazines.

Current Pathe Review Has Unusual Shots

Pathe Review No. 120, set for release September 11th, shows Robert Aitken, master sculptor, at work in his studio. The subject is one of a series being presented under the title of "Masters of American Art."

Remarkable "Under - Ocean" photographs of life beneath the waves are shown in the picture, "The Hidden Creatures of the Sea." "The Cliff Road to Switzerland" shows exquisite Pathecolor views of the rugged roads which tunnel through the mountains in the vicinity of L'Axenstrasse and which skirt the shores of Lake Lucerne.

"Seeing the Invisible" is a slow-motion study, showing how slow the eye actually is in grasping swift action. To bring this out, the slow-motion camera shows the snapping of a whip, the feet of a running animal, and the fluttering of a barnyard fowl, analyzing every move, proving that the hand is really quicker than the eye.

"Three Musketeers" a Great Hit in Frisco

The same story that was told the day following the opening of "The Three Musketeers," at the Lyric Theatre in New York, the Randolph Theatre in Chicago, and the Mission Theatre in Los Angeles, was told this week of the premier of the picture at the Strand Theatre in San Francisco. A telegram from M. L. Markowitz, managing director of the theatre to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists, reads in part as follows:

"Tremendous crowds breaking all previous house records. People fighting their way to box office necessitated calling for police protection. Unanimous opinion of everybody is that 'The Three Musketeers' is the greatest production they have seen in years."

Society Pageant Staged for "Enchantment"

The fairy story of the, Sleeping Beauty is incorporated with a wealth of beauty and artistry into "Enchantment," a Cosmopolitan Production, starring Marion Davies, which will be released early this fall. The fairy story is in the nature of a society pageant in which comes the climax of the love affair between Ethel Hoyt (Miss Davies) and Ernest Eddison (Forrest Stanley), and is a part of the interesting modern plot that forms the basis of the production.

The story offered to Director Robert G. Vignola and Cosmopolitan Productions' scenic staff, under the direction of Joseph Urban, full scope to demonstrate their skill in direction and technical creativeness. The settings in which the society pageant is enacted are said by those who saw them at the studio to be among the finest ever conceived.

News has just been received at the New York office of the Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., that Scott Dunlap has finished shooting on the first Mary Anderson productions, "Too Much Married." Work on a Christie Comedy being made for Educational under direction of William Beaudine was halted temporarily when Bobby Vernon lost his grip on a rope operated in a big barn setting, and fell, suffering severe injuries to a foot and shoulder, it is reported. He was expected to be laid up not more than a few days, however.

Beulah Livingstone, who went abroad last June, in the interests of Jos. M. Schenck, and the Misses Norma and Constance Talmadge, has returned to New York, and is back at the publicity desk at the Talmadge studios.

New York Bridges Seen in Kineto Review

"Bridges of New York," a Kineto Review, now playing a pre-release at the Rivoli Theatre, and soon to be distributed nationally by the Kineto Company of America, is an apt illustration of the engineering beauty that surrounds Manhattan Island.

It opens with a sweep of the northeastern section of the city photographed from the roof of the Municipal Building and takes in the three main bridges which connect Manhattan and Brooklyn.

Mr. Urban in editing the photographer's work has given much interesting statistical material such as costs, the work of repair, amounts of material, and many other such items, which added to the pictures, give audiences a fine idea of the bigness of these structures.

Variety the Keynote of "Bits of Life"

Variety is the keynote of Marshall Neilan's new production for First National release, "Bits of Life." Mr. Neilan has aimed to make the picture attractive to every class of audience—the patrons of the palatial city houses, of the small town theatres, and of the typical "movie" in the poorer sections of the big city.

Four different stories, each with a different locale, make up the picture. Seaports of two hemispheres are shown, and the characters include the suave resident of New York, the Bowery resident, the Chinese coolie, the Oriental princess, the crooks of the metropolis and the Americanized merchant of San Francisco's Chinatown.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Great Moment—

Very good picture. Pleased the patrons and comment quite favorable. Business better than the average, a portion of the credit for which should go to the merits of the picture itself and to the popularity of the star, Miss Gloria Swanson, with local movie fans, who played well in "The Great Moment," as she usually does in other productions. (South.)

An ordinary picture which attracted fair business. Women liked it. (East.)

Went over fine. Receipts pleasing. (East.)

The Traveling Salesman—

Not much picture. Too slow, not enough action. Did not afford "Fatty" the means for being really comical, and this semi-funny stuff not so popular with local movie fans. Mild all the way through, to say the least. Comment none too good, and business only up to the average, despite a favorable turn in the weather for the past week. (South.)

The Hell Diggers—

A picture much below the average of Reid's work. Lacks love interest essential in this star's pictures. Subject did not please. (Middle West.)

Idol of the North—

Theatre decorated to resemble log cabin in mid-winter, which had a psychological effect on crowds in hot weather. A good business all week. (Middle West.)

Conquest of Canaan—

Drew an average attendance for a week's run. (Middle West.)

A fairly good production on which we had about usual business. (West.)

The Oath—

Beautiful settings, magnificent costumes, and a fairly good plot combine to make this a popular box-office attraction. (Middle West.)

Nobody seemed to know what it was all about. It was jerky, disjointed, tiresome—and business was just what might have been expected —rotten! (East.)

The Great Adventure—

One of the most delightful comedies seen here this year. Barrymore's work is excellent. First-class box-office value. (Middle West.)

Nobody—

Business fair. Picture just an average one. (East.)

Ole Swimmin' Hole—

Tolerably good picture, true to life and good for the season. Business was pretty good, but this doubtlessly due in part to the favorable turn in the weather. Much cooler here for the past week. (South.)

Sparks Pulls Good "Ten Dollar Raise" Stunt

For "The Ten Dollar Raise," Robert Sparks, who is at the helm of advertising and exploitation for the D. F. and R. Enterprises, Wichita Falls, Tex., hired a pair of old fellows who were out of work as good examples of broken-down human driftwood and paraded them about the streets carrying banners worded as follows: "At One Time a Ten Dollar Raise Would Have Put Me On Easy Street," "I Waited 13 Years for a $10 Raise," and others as good.

These men followed a big Chandler sedan in which was seated a man who radiated the look of prosperity. The car carried a sign which read: "A $10 Raise Put Me On Easy Street."

"The Ten Dollar Raise" was playing the Olympic theatre and Spark's exploitation brought many an added dollar to the box office.

"County Fair" Hokum Stunts Win Again

On the opposite page is a series of illustrations showing how H. M. Rouda, manager of the Auditorium of Dayton, O., exploited his recent engagement of "The County Fair."

In addition to the lobby display, Mr. Rouda had a "rube" band ballyhoo and a soft drink concession which seemed to strike the fancy of the Auditorium's patrons.

The Auditorium orchestra doubled in brass, playing "The Village Orchestra" in costume from the stage, where a special setting as shown in the cut, was provided.

Gold Star Mother Week Winners for California Theatre

Special showing for gold star mothers and members of their families created big business for the New Fillmore and New Mission theatres in San Francisco, during the simultaneous run at both houses of "Mother O' Mine." The event was held on the Wednesday of the week's showing in each theatre. Special programs with prominent speakers were given, and all mothers who had lost sons in the World War were admitted free of charge together with as many members of their families as they cared to bring.

Much publicity was gotten for the event by arranging to have it held under the auspices of the San Francisco Chronicle. The newspaper devoted several columns of space to it in advance and a full account of the meets as they were held.

"Dream Street" Given Extensive Campaign in Texas

"Dream Street" recently showing at the Victory theatre, Waco, Tex., was put over in an exploitation way by a special lobby display of which a mercury tube lighting effect was a special feature, a personal guarantee letter signed by Resident Manager J. P. Harrison, a special matinee for the Waco Boy Scouts and a benefit given for the Children's Clinic, a local child's welfare institution.

The newspapers were liberal in the free space given for all these events and the campaign was voted a huge success.

Texas Manager Tries Out "Tin Can" Stunt

The "tin can" stunt which has been going the rounds for a considerable time was given a try-out by the Tremont theatre, Galveston, Texas, recently.

The Tremont added some new frills to the way the idea is usually put over. A free pass good for two months was offered to the person bringing the greatest number of cans on a given date between the hours of eleven a. m. and six p. m. One enterprising youth dumped 1,050 before the entrance of the Tremont and other Galveston residents collected a surprising number of cans. The sidewalk in front of the theatre looked like the city dump ground for the time being.

Lobby decorations and house employees in costumes part of the exploitation for "Carnival" used by the Republic theatre, Washington, D. C.

Six Foot "Ghost" Used in Lobby Display

A six-foot tall "ghas'ly ghost" was used as the central decoration for the lobby of the Vaudette theatre, Atlanta, recently, when Manager C. W. Irwin played a return engagement of "Seven Keys to Baldpate." The picture has played Atlanta a number of times, but it did a good business again, for two days.

The ghost was of compo-board, with a skeleton hand, and a skull. The rest of the figure was draped in white, and tiny red electric globes burned in the eye sockets. Three small green lights had been arranged about this skull, concealed by the draperies of the head, so that the weird green light played on the skull, with the tiny red lights in the eyes.

The skeleton hand, extended, held an enormous heavy key ring, on which seven pasteboard keys, painted a dull, coppery brown, dangled. The other hand, concealed, held the draperies about the figure, so that only the skull and the hand with the keys, could be plainly seen.

It was both weird and effective—and inexpensive.

Ministers' Aid Secured for "Sky Pilot"

Virtually all the ministers of Indianapolis were induced by Manager Ralph Lieber of the Circle theatre to aid in putting over the picture.

An advance screening was given about four days previous to the opening and more than forty ministers from the various Protestant churches in the city, attended. After they had seen the picture it was explained to them, that inasmuch as they were responsible for a great part of the agitation concerning better and more wholesome entertainment on the screen it would prove to the advantage of their cause to indorse such a picture as this.

This they agreed to do and many of them announced that the picture was being shown at the Circle from the pulpit while others used a part of the picture as a theme for a sermon.

Other exploitation included a hook-up with the largest book store in the city and a matinee for orphans.

Uses Whistle for "Too Much Speed"

"The Whistle" is not the only picture that can be exploited with whistles, for William N. Robson, the Paramount exploiteer at Pittsburgh, used them for "Too Much Speed," playing at the Columbus theatre. Robson's whistles were lead and made on the design of the latest mouth-organ fad—the flute-trombone, with a piston graduating the tones. An attached card read:

"Be Your Own Traffic Cop and Stop Too Much Speed," etc.

The cost of these souvenirs was only a few cents each.

Shoe Store Aids Whitfield Over "Cinderella's Twin"

As exploitation for the engagement of "Cinderella's Twin" playing recently at the Lyric theatre, San Angelo, Texas, Manager Ray Whitfield tied up with a local shoe store and a pair of slippers valued at $20 were given away to the first woman appearing who could wear them.

The stunt was extensively advertised by both the theatre and the merchant and created no end of interest and comment. Extra prizes in the shape of free tickets to the Lyric were also given away.

Tinney Uses Many Novelty Lobby Displays

N. G. Tinney, manager of the Grand theatre, San Antonio, Texas, is using the theatre lobby in many ways to aid in exploiting his attractions.

For his "Peaceful Valley" showing a huge farm tractor "parked" in the lobby and surrounded with hay and other materials suggestive of the farm won him increased patronage.

When playing "The March Hare" a cage of hares at the entrance to the theatre got equal attention with the "Peaceful Valley" stunt.

A wrecked car advertised the showing of "Too Much Speed."

One of a number of window displays for "Outside the Law" secured during the run of this picture at the Reliance theatre, Orangeburg, S. C., by Manager H. Zieglen

Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, Celebrates Another Birthday

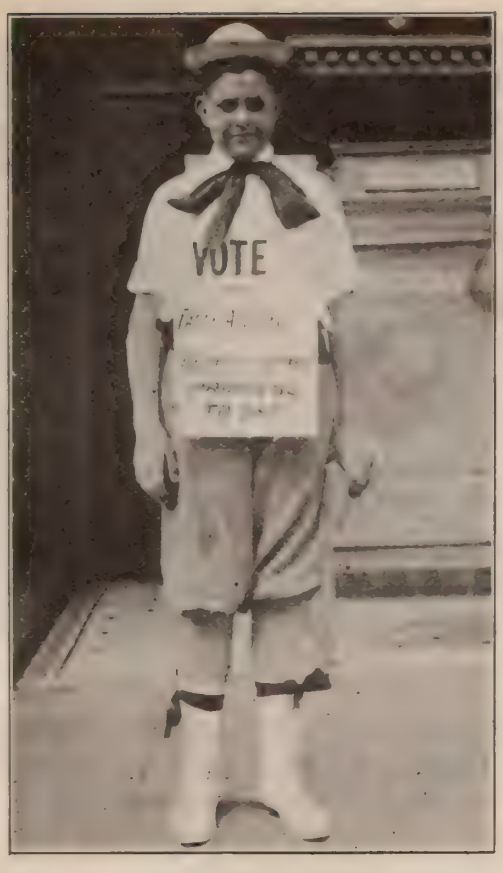
One of the features of the seventh anniversary celebration at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, last week, was the new stage setting, conceived and designed by Harold B. Franklin, managing director. Over 1,000 yards of rich silks and satins were needed in the scheme. The entire top of the set consists of flowing canopies of golden satin, upon which at overture time is played countless color schemes. Lights also are placed at the rear of the rich silken side curtains, draped between massive pillars of silver. As the curtain was unveiled it disclosed Margaret Briscoe, danseuse, poised at the top of a large "birthday cake," with a long wand in her hand. At the end of the wand was a small electric light. As she touched each large candle a bulb at the top was illuminated. Completing the seven lights Miss Briscoe began a delightful solo dance number arranged by Umansky, ballet master of the New York Capitol. A fantastic, futuristic curtain was shown in the background. The famous Hippodrome Symphony orchestra, which Creatore will direct this season, is shown in the foreground.

Transforms Lobby Into Woodland Scene

When "The Man of the Forest" played the Tivoli theatre, Beaumont, Texas, recently a particularly attractive lobby display was originated for the showing.

Pine trees completely obscured the entrance to the theatre, while grass and moss were spread about on the lobby floor. Between the trees stuffed deer and other denizens of the Northland forest were placed.

The lobby display obtained front page publicity for the showing when the Beaumont Enterprise gave the front a flattering notice in one of its issues.



Showing the ballyhoo stunt which Manager S. S. Stevenson of the Princess theatre, Henderson, N. C., used to put over his showing of "The Life of the Party"

Sparks Pulls the "Old Time Movie" Show

The sure-fire exploitation stunt of showing how pictures were shown ten years ago, and usually self explanatory to most exhiibtors by designation under the title of "old time movie show," was used recently by Robert Sparks, director of publicity for the D. F. and R. Enterprises, Wichita, Kansas.

Mr. Sparks ran a Mary Pickford one-reeler with illustrated songs, slides with appropriate wording, etc.

St. Louis Firm Gets Great Publicity from Turpin Visit

Skouras Brothers, operators of the New Grand Central, West End Lyric and Capitol theatres, St. Louis, utilized a visit of Ben Turpin to St. Louis in a number of effective ways in connection with the engagement of "Married Life."

The extensive mailing list of these three theatres was again put into use, with the usual successful results. Cards were sent to approximately five thousand leading citizens of the city, advising them of the event, and urging them to avail themselves of the "unusual opportunity to see the comedy screen's funniest actor."

Then large space was used in the dailies. And to complete the clever exploitation arrangements were made with over a dozen local organizations to have the star speak to them at their weekly meetings. The organization being of the leading types, the best possible advertising was obtained not only free but with great welcome. More than 1,000 members attended the Advertising Club's weekly luncheon to get an opportunity to hear Ben Turpin talk.

Of course, at each occasion the comedy actor was introduced as "appearing at the New Grand Central both on the screen and in person this week." Official figures show that the three theatres did record business for the seven days.

Rialto of Denver Gets Out Special Folder

Homer E. Ellison, well known manager of the Princess and Rialto theatres, Denver, has issued a four-page pamphlet containing names, pictures of stars and forthcoming productions. Although he was assisted by Leslie Whelan, Paramount exploiteer, the folder boosts Realart, Metro, and Comedy stars as well as Paramount.

Tropical Lobby Display for "Bitter Fruit"

For the showing of "Bitter Fruit" Manager James F. Jackson of the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, converted his theatre into something as closely approaching a tropical thatched hut as was possible.

He used great masses of green cane, with all its leaves left on—and, by the way, this cane cost nothing, for Mr. Jackson drove out to the river, where he was free to cut as much of it as he cared to take away.

The entire marquee was concealed under great armfuls of the cane, through which the electric globes, red and green and yellow, shone dimly. The under part of the marquee, which is sewn thick with electric globes, was treated similarly, giving the impression from beneath of the roof of a thatched hut.

The box office was hidden in the cane, just the opening where the tickets were delivered being uncovered. A cut-out of the star stood at one side of the lobby, peeping through the cane, as if hidden, and watching for the villain to appear.

Although the effect was excellent, and the lobby presented an interesting appearance, there was absolutely no cost to the exhibitor—a thing which must be considered during the summer months when business is light.

Hires Street Car to Advertise Pictures

Willis Adams, manager of the Palace theatre, McAlester, Texas, chartered a street car and had a banner advertising "The Nut" made for one side and a similar sign for "The Love Light" for the other and ran it up and down the street for four hours.

A phonograph with an electric amplifier was used to get added attention to the stunt. Other exploitation stunts were successfully used for the showing of the two pictures.

Children's Prologue Packs Them in at Perth Amboy

A dancing school transplanted to the stages of the Crescent and Ditmas theatres, Perth Amboy, N. J., put "The Great Moment" and "The Princess of New York" over with big receipts. The little tots under the direction of their teacher were the principals of the prologue to the picture.

The stunt was arranged for Manager Hyman B. Reve by Fred V. Greene, Jr., Paramount exploiteer. The arrangements were made with the dancing-school teacher who was delighted with the free advertising it gave her. The mothers and fathers were made friends of the theatre for life. Of course the youngsters who appeared cannot conceive of any other theatres but the Crescent and Ditmas existing.

Manning's Specials Heralds Effective Business Aids

K. C. Manning, manager of the Meralta theatre, one of the largest and most popular of the neighborhod houses in Los Angeles, has decided upon a house herald as the most effective form of advertising that can be employed by such a theatre.

This decision was reached by Mr. Manning after experimenting with practically every other form of advertising available for a neighborhood house.

The herald which he used measured 13½ x 8½ in.. One side is devoted to the attractions which he runs the first four days of the week. A single day's booking is employed on Thursday, to which he devotes one-fourth of the other side, and then he gives another double space to the Friday and Saturday production. The remaining one-fourth of the one form is employed as a theatre introductory page. By this arrangement of the form, two folds of the herald bring it down to a size 3½ x 8½ in., with the theatre introductory on the top fold.

The herald is mailed out on Friday to a selected mailing list and is distributed to patrons of the theatre at all Saturday and Sunday performances.

Auto Parade for "Too Much Speed" Showing

Ray Whitfield, manager of the Lyric theatre, San Angelo, Texas, had an automobile parade for his showing of "Too Much Speed."

A Hudson racer with the driver in racer's garb headed the procession. There was a jazz orchestra on a truck and plenty of signs announcing what the stunt was about.

Lobby display used at the Superba theatre, Los Angeles during the recent run of "The Man Trackers."

Ince Stages Prologue for Los Angeles Theatre

Thomas H. Ince staged an original prologue for "Mother O' Mine" when his picture played the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles.

The setting shows a little country cottage with a gate somewhat similar to the farm home shown on the 24-sheet poster issued with the production. A mother stands by the gate and as a little child passes her, she stops him long enough to put the loving touch on his apparel and appearance that is natural to a mother and then watches him fondly as he walks off the stage and apparently down the road. Concealed in the wings of the Kinema theatre, a tenor singer rendered Remick's song, "Mother o' Mine." The action in the prologue was timed to occupy one verse and two choruses of the song and at the conclusion of the two verses, the theatre was immediately darkened and the picture started while the orchestra carried the strains of the song.

The exploitation used by the theatre included traveling slides at the Main Street station of the Pacific Electric Railway; 5,000 snipes in two sides distributed in all parts of the city; a total of 2,230 sheets of posters ranging from 24 sheets down to a special stunt of having two women artists painting a special outdoor sign advertising the picture; outdoor singing of the song "Mother o' Mine" twice daily by a quartette.

Several music store window tie-ups on the song and record in addition to four special windows in miscellaneous stores and a tie-up with a string of doughnut shops which used signs "Bake right doughnuts, the kind 'Mother 'o Mine' used to make." Is as good as the picture shown this week at the Kinema theatre"; also special mother's matinee at which 75 inmates of the Hollenbeck Old Ladies' Home were guests of honor.

Tiny Shoes Given Away as "March Hare" Exploitation

E. H. Collins, managing the Grand Opera House, Greenville, Texas, tied-up with a shoe store when he played "The March Hare." An extra small pair of shoes was given away to the first girl whose foot was small enough to wear them.

A picture of the stage setting which Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Strand theatre used in connection with a prologue number for "The Hell Diggers"

Miniature Dredge Feature of "Gold Diggers" Prologue

One of the giant gold dredges shown in "The Hell Diggers" was reproduced in miniature for an elaborate prologue presented in connection with the showing of the above mentioned picture by Manager Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre.

A solid black drop with a circle cut out in the center, rimmed with a gold band, was used as a frame for the scenic picture. Two rows of set mountains were placed back of the drop with a space between them deep enough for the miniature dredge.

The dredge was surrounded by a scenic river. A thin ribbon of real smoke emanated from the stack of the dredge.

The mountains were lit from the front with an amber spot, while the dredge piece was spotted on two sides with blue and green. The back black drop was flooded with dark blue.

A duet by a soprano and tenor interpreted the effective scenic contrivance achieved. Dorothy Bell, in the costume of a live outdoor girl, broad brimmed Western hat, knickerbockers, etc., sang to George Dale who was supposed to be the Wallace Reid of the film.

Schmidt's Lobby for "Dream Street" Based on Picture

"A street in the Limehouse district of London" was the name given the special lobby, which Manager George Schmidt, of the Strand theatre, Atlanta, designed for exploiting "Dream Street," on its return engagement to Atlanta.

The entire lobby of the Strand was transformed into a street. The side-walls were hidden by painted scene-sets, and the floor of the lobby itself was covered with plain linoleum on which had been painted a creditable imitation of the round cobble-stones which pave most of the streets of the Limehouse section.

One side of the lobby houses a boot-black stand, a barber shop with a striped pole, a Chinese laundry, and a second-hand bootstall; the other side supplied a poolroom, with the windows carefully shaded, an apothecary shop, with its green and red vases. At the back, or end of the street, was the boxoffice, "camouflaged" to represent the boxoffice of the theatre in the picture.

One entered the theatre through an entrance labelled "Stage Entrance" over which a small electric globe in a wire cage burned.

There wasn't a single poster, or one-sheet in the entire lobby. At either side of the front of the lobby, were street lamps, copied faithfully from those really in use in the Limehouse district, and fastened just below these lamps, were small, weatherbeaten looking signs on which the name "Dream Street" appeared.

This refusal to use the ordinary advertising matter and one-sheets was because Mr. Schmidt thought them unnecessary.

The Strand has an opening on two streets, as it runs through the block. This entrance on Broad Street was merely decorated with an unusually effective cut-out of Carol Dempster and Ralph Graves, with a profuse use of posters, one-sheets and lobby frames.

The opening of the picture's engagement was preceded, as is usual with Mr. Schmidt's pictures, with the teaser slide campaign, part of the copy lifted from the press-book, but most of it lines from the sub-titles.

The picture was booked for three days, and held over for a week, despite the fact that it was a second-run.

Here are reproductions of three of the "art prologues" which the Albany Mark Strand theatre has recently presented in connection with the showing of "Trust Your Wife," "Habit" and "Scrap Iron" respectively. The scenes were painted by David Lithgow. The Strand is managed by Uly S. Hill

Atlanta Manager Ties Up with "No Accident Week"

Manager James F. Jackson, of the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, recently "tied up," with the Junior Chamber of Commerce in a "No Accident Week," with good results for his picture, "Keep to the Right."

Five thousand tie-cards were printed in red, bearing just the title, "Keep to the Right." These were tied on automobiles throughout the city, and tacked up at streets where the cards seemed advice and warning to motorists.

At special corners, and on auto roads about the city, where there have been so many accidents that the locations have won gruesome sobriquets, such as "Dead Man's Curve," "Suicide Point," etc., the cards were displayed to excellent advantage.

The Junior Chamber assisted Mr. Jackson in exploiting his picture, in return for the real services which these cards gave, and a good week's business was enjoyed by the Tudor.

Offers Prizes for "Peck's Bad Boy" Limericks

A limerick competition was used to exploit "Peck's Bad Boy" at the Criterion theatre, Bridgeton, N. J. C. E. Pippin, who handled the exploitation for the three day run in Bridgeton, arranged with the local newspaper to run limericks and offered prizes of $5 for the best limerick about Jackie Coogan and his dog, $3 for the second best and $2 for the third prize.

Announcement of the test was made from the stage of the theatre the first night of the showing and was at once taken up by the grown-ups as well as the children of Bridgeton. More than 500 answers were received the first two days.

Exhibitor Solves Age Limit Law

Exhibitors who are affected by laws governing the age over which children may be admitted to the theatre unattended should take this tip from Manager Harry B. Sheridan, manager of Proctor's theatre, Plainfield, N. J.

Sheridan has tie-up with the Boy Scout organization, which furnishes him fifteen boys and a scoutmaster every Saturday. These boys act as escorts for children under the statutory age of 16. These children's matinees received widespread advertising and during the last six months have become institutions. Mothers rely on the theatres to take care of their children while they go shopping. Sheridan passes out six passes to each boy as a reward.

Simple but Effective Prologue for "Great Moment"

One of the simplest and at the same time one of the most effective prologues that Atlanta has yet seen, was the one which preceded the showing of "The Great Moment" at the Howard theatre, Atlanta, recently.

Enrico Leide, conductor of the Howard orchestra, who has recently been made managing director of the Howard theatre, was responsible for the prologue, which had, as its central character, a California girl, Betty Burr, whose resemblance to Gloria Swanson is actually startling.

To the music of "Un Peu d' Amour," played by the violins of the Howard orchestra, on muted strings, the curtains parted slowly to reveal a stage setting copied as faithfully as possible from the scene in the picture which it is to represent. The setting is shown, dimly, through a keyhole-formed opening, covered with gauze, which gave it the appearance of a painting.

The lights were very soft rose-shades, very dim at the opening, when the figures in the prologue are first seen. These figures were Miss Burr, dressed as Miss Swanson was, in the cabin scene—riding breeches, torn shirt, hair down. The man was dressed like Milton Sills, and as the lights rise to their full height, he bends and kisses the girl—the curtains close and the music dies away to a mere thread of sound, as the lights go out.

Uses Hangman's Noose to Exploit Picture

A rope tied in the form of a hangman's noose with a sign reading "This is What Awaits the Murderer of Private Herrick of the Northwest Royal Mounted Police," was placed in the lobby of the Tremont theatre, Galveston, Texas, by Manager E. J. Barnette to aid in exploiting "The Raiders."

BrookerBoost"EasyRoad" in Novel Way

Some of the finest and most effective moving picture exploitation ever seen in Ottawa was used during the week of August 22 by Manager Fred Brooker of Loew's Ottawa theatre to boost "The Easy Road." Although the painting of signs or pictures on the pavements or sidewalks of the city is frowned upon by the civic authorities, the people came down town Monday to find that the roadway at all of the principal trolley stops was covered with huge letters which read, "This is The Easy Road to Loew's." On the front of every street car all week were cardboard signs which read: "This car takes The Easy Road to Loew's Theatre." In addition to these stunts, Manager Brooker erected scores of traffic direction signs on the roads leading into the city and also on the main routes through the outskirts which told the following message —"The Easy Road to Loew's."

Manager Brooker specialized on these three ideas in addition to the usual newspaper advertising, but he had the three ideas all over town.

Brooker also made good use of the display window of a large vacant store adjacent to the theatre during the week of August 29 to advertise "The Great Moment." He hooked up with the window dresser of a large local department store, for a handsome display of silk dress goods, strikingly arranged in vivid hues, along with a very large transparent portrait of Gloria Swanson. Small gilt price card frames were used to announce the name of the feature at the theatre and to give credit for the fine exhibit. The fine part about this stunt was that many passersby gathered the impression at first glance that a new ladies' wear store had just been opened

Plunkett's Prologue Number for "Disraeli"

Managing Director Joseph L. Plunkett's faith in the prologue was given added strength recently because of the reception accorded the number he staged for "Disraeli" at the New York Mark Strand theatre.

The stage setting which Mr. Plunkett used for this number was a canvass picture of the historic Parliamentary House of Commons on the Thames. The scene was lighted for night effects and showed a twinkling array of lights with the building showing rather dimly.

The effect of the distant edifice was obtained by means of a "cut-out" against a neutral blue back-drop and a balconade in the foreground. In between the two is produced a rippling-water-in-the-moonlight effect. With the completion of the old English melody, "The Trumpeter," by the tenor, who is costumed as a British sentinel, the stronger lights diminish and the string of lamps on the perspectively opposite shore become more outstanding and that the windows of the House are illuminated also becomes more visible and impressive.

Popular Salesgirls Idea Put Over by Brown

With the aid of five popular young saleswomen of the leading department stores in Memphis and about 10,000 others, not so classed, G. E. Brown, director of publicity and advertising for The Memphis Enterprises, Inc., managed to crowd nearly twice as many paid admissions into the Majestic theatre in that city where Bebe Daniels was playing in "Two Weeks With Pay."

The aforesaid young women were entered in a popularity voting test which was tied up with the biggest daily newspaper in Memphis and which ran in the paper as free publicity for two weeks. More than 100 inches of free space was donated and during the balloting, which was held in the lobby of the Majestic theatre, nearly 10,000 votes were cast for the five women.

The voting was divided into two weeks; one run previous to the showing of "Two Weeks With Pay" which was for the purpose of nominating only five persons and the second week's voting during the playing of the picture, to decide which of the five saleswomen would win the distinction of being called the most popular and winning a vacation of two weeks with pay.

The title of the picture was the title of the test and during the last two days of the voting, the lobby of the Majestic theatre was thronged with people wanting to cast a ballot.

The winner was a candy department saleswoman

As the direct result of the test, the week's receipts were nearly double that of the average for several preceding weeks and as an indirect result, the Majestic thatre received some wonderful word of mouth advertising.

McCormick Gets Extensive Advertising from Local Picture

S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Allen theatre, Cleveland, has just done two things unusual in the exhibiting field. First, he has given a picture eight continuous weeks of publicity, including six weeks prior to the run of the picture; the week of the run, and the week following the run. The picture is "Dangerous Toys." The second unusual thing he has done is to show how motion pictures are actually made, turning over his stage to Director Samuel R. Bradley, who directed the making of "Dangerous Toys" for making a two-reel photodrama called "The Business of Cheating Death" in full view of the audience.

Six weeks ago McCormick tied up with the News and together they ran a popularity test to gather together a cast for this two-reel drama. This advance advertising of five weeks brought in 4,000 photographs. Of these, fifty were chosen as possibilities. Last week, the sixth week of the campaign, as a special prologue attraction, the Allen stage was fitted up like a motion picture studio, and the fifty aspirants were tried out before the audience. The theatre was packed with people who wanted to watch the process of elimination. Those who screened best were chosen to play in the picture. The winners were well advertised in the News in a big front page story.

This week, the seventh week, Director Bradley is making the picture on the Allen stage. Four times a day he works at it. And it is so allotted that it will be finished by the end of the week when the current first-run engagement of "Dangerous Toys" comes to an end.

Next week the two-reeler, "The Business of Cheating Death," will be shown on the screen. This completes the eight consecutive weeks of publicity on "Dangerous Toys."

Theatre Ties Up with Newspapers

The Empress theatre of Missoula, Montana, used the ever popular limerick in connection with the showing of "She Couldn't Help It."

The "Sentinel" and the "Missoulian" both carried announcements of a limerick contest. Readers were reminded of Miss Daniels' recent incarceration in jail for speeding, and were urged to send in a limerick, using the actress, her car or her jail sentence as the basis. The prizes held out for the best were four tickets to the Empress or Wilma, first; two tickets, second; and one ticket, third.

The stunt attracted quite a little attention, hundreds of limericks being received by the newspapers, one of which follows:

Oh, there was a young girl with a flivver,
She wanted to be a fast liver,
So this pert Realart lass
Just stepped on the gas
And ten days was all that they give 'er.

Stage Wedding Helps "Crazy to Marry"

All of Waco, Texas, was set agog recently when during the showing of "Crazy to Marry" at the Hippodrome, Bill Harwell, managing the house during the absence of Resident Manager J. P. Harrison, announced that a wedding would take place on the theatre stage.

As an incentive to the couple who were to become life partners while acting as exploiters for "Crazy to Marry," Waco merchants were persuaded to donate valuable gifts to the bride and groom. These gifts included the wedding ring, furniture, the wedding bouquet, silverware, etc.

Of course the newspaper carried big stories about the event and further interest was incited by printing a cut of the couple with their backs to the camera and of the Justice of the Peace who would perform the ceremony.

At the hour designated for the ceremony, the couple marched on the stage with their attendants, costumes having been provided for the entire party by the local merchants and the marriage ceremony was read.

Later the couple rode around Waco in an automobile bedecked with old shoes and a banner reading "We Were Crazy to Marry, We Now Are." Among the gifts was the wedding license fee and a season pass given by the Hippodrome theatre.

Bill Harwell and "Casey" Stewart of the publicity department got a tie-up section with the News-Tribune for Sunday, merchants of the city coming in with ads which hooked-up with "Crazy to Marry" the Arbuckle picture, some even announcing the time and place of the wedding.

The wedding on the stage, the wonderful amount of free publicity obtained through the announcements in the News-Tribune, splendid cooperation of the merchants and the newspaper, the hard work of Bill Harwell assisted by "Casey" Stewart was more than justified in the box office results.

Scene in Shanghai Cafe Makes Colorful Prologue

Sid Grauman, of Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, took his cue for the prologue number originated for the engagement of "At the End of the World," from the picture itself, reproducing a scene in part from the Shanghai episode under the title of "Night Life in the Paper Lantern Cafe, Shanghai, China."

As a prologue to the prologue, a short travel film on Chinese life was shown. With the flash-out on this, a soprano, costumed and standing at the right hand side of the stage, began the strain, "Cherry Blossom," at the conclusion of which the curtain behind her lifted, revealing the main set. Red and blue silks and tapestries, harmoniously tempered and suggesting Chinese weirdness, formed the walls and the overhead drapings of the set. Heavy amber, blue and red lights, played from blending angles, accented the effect. To one side of the stage, a group of American naval officers and young women sat by a table. At another table to the other side, sat Oriental characters and sailors of the ranks. Several grotesque Chinamen stood in various parts of the room. The costuming here, as throughout the act, was resplendent and appropriate.

Dressed as a sailor, Gregory W. Golubeff, a local mandolinist, played an Oriental air. The soprano and the male trio followed with a selection. An acrobat injected a bit of humor into the proceedings. Between songs a tiny Chinese maid interpreted a native fantasie dance. Then from a door in the center of the back wall there advanced, in pairs and at regular intervals, a column of mandarins.

Succeeding them came the real feature of the act—a procession of beautiful Chinese maidens. As the mandarins had done, they strode to the front of the stage, then parted their pairs and walked away to opposite wings. At the completion of this march, the entire cast of the prologue assembled and sang in chorus as the finale. All these features were accompanied by interpretative music.

Gondola Float Attracts Business for "Little Italy"

A gondola, draped with colored silks, and mounted on a Ford one-ton truck, paraded the streets of Atlanta recently, as exploitation for "Little Italy," when this picture played a three-day engagement at the Forsyth theatre, Atlanta.

The gondola was about the size of the real gondolas, and was draped artistically with colored silks, with fresh flowers scattered about. Three young men, in a costume composed of black velvet trousers, slashed at the ankle, over white silk shirts, with scarlet ties, scarlet silk headhandkerchiefs, and scarlet silk, fringed sashes, played a guitar, a mandolin and a banjo, while reclining lazily on the velvet cushions.

The truck-gondola started its round of the city on Saturday, preceding the opening day Monday. It was also seen on Monday and Tuesday, after which the gondola was placed in the lobby.

Horater Advertises "Black Panther's Cub" Extensively

H. C. Horater, managing director of the Pantheon and Alhambra theatres in Toledo, pulled off an exceptional advertising stunt this week in connection with a two weeks run of "Black Panther's Cub" at the Pantheon. Horater tied up with the Toledo Times, one of the leading Toledo dailies, and got from them a six-inch one-column box on the first page of the paper every day this week. This box contained the following announcement: "Be Our Guest. If You Can Find Your Name Anywhere in This Issue of the Paper, Present It at the Box Office of the Pantheon Theatre and Get Two Passes for 'Black Panther's Cub.'" Then, scattered all over the paper, in different sections, there appeared every day for the whole week, fifteen one-inch boxes, and every day, in each of the fifteen boxes there were the names of fifteen people living in Toledo. No favoritism was shown. The names were chosen at random from the directory.

The newspaper was glad to participate in the campaign as it boosted circulation, and by giving out a little over a hundred pair of passes, Horater reached people that he could never have attracted through the regular channels of advertising. During the week "The Black Panther's Cub" was playing at the Pantheon, Florence Reed the star of the picture was playing at another local playhouse in her stage vehicle, "The Mirage."

Manager Horater took advantage of the opportunity and staged a private screening of "The Black Panther's Cub" at the Pantheon on Saturday morning, preceding the opening of the picture's run. Engraved invitations were issued to Mayor Schreiber, city officials, heads of the women's clubs and the supporting members of Miss Reed's company, announcing the screening as being in Miss Reed's honor. As a matter of fact, it was the first time Miss Reed had seen the picture in its finished state.

Work Starts on Another Arrow-Curwood

Work on the forthcoming James Oliver Curwood production has commenced under the direction of Dell Henderson who, as announced by Arrow last week, has been given charge of the production of this picture. Mr. Henderson spent several days in consultation with Mr. Curwood regarding this picture and states that he is delighted with the story and feels that it affords him an opportunity to make the best picture of his directorial career.

Announcement is also made that among those engaged for the production are Miss Faire Binney who will play the part of The Girl and William (Buster) Collier, Jr., who has been cast for The Boy.

Brandt Prepares Posters

Artistic Line of Paper Ready for "The Heart of the North"

A BEAUTIFUL and artistic line of posters has been completed this week on "The Heart of the North," the feature production of the Canadian Northwest featuring Roy Stewart with Louise Lovely, Joe Brandt, who, with George H. Davis is State Righting this production, announces that one of the most attractive lines of paper ever prepared is now ready for exchanges and exhibitors handling this feature.

There is, in this paper, Mr. Brandt says, a wonderful assortment of color, artistically worked up, and yet so striking that it cannot help but attract and hold the attention. One sheets, threes, sixes and twenty-fours in several styles have been prepared from original hand paintings all in brilliant combinations of subject and color.

The one-sheets show Roy Stewart in the dual role of "John Whitley" of the Northwest Mounted police, and "Maupome," the bandit. The largest posters—the threes, sixes and twenty-fours, have been worked up from the most striking part of the story—the raging forest fire, which furnishes a great deal of the "punch" of the production. There has been great opportunity for striking effects in this fire motif—and the blazing trees and shrubbery, with the characters trapped in the flames, have been brought out in what are said to be beautiful results.

This is balanced in turn by three sheets which play up the Canadian snows which form a great deal of the background for "The Heart of the North," giving a sense of quiet and coolness, and yet of the struggle that lurks within each flake.

This paper, Mr. Brandt announces, was prepared with a special view to the forming of lobby displays, the twenty-four sheet especially, a blazing fire effect with the figure of Roy Stewart and Louise Lovely centred life-size within it, being made so it can be cut out and mounted. Different combinations of color schemes, with the posters as their backgrounds, and the cut out figures thereon arranged in different ways, are being prepared for the press book, showing how lobbies and windows can be effectively dressed with little added expense.

Reelcraft Force Active

Salesmen Make Every Effort to Aid "Independence Month" Campaign

DETERMINED that "Independence Month" should get away to a flying start among the large roster of exhibitors who will be represented by bookings during the tenth-calendar month, R. C. Cropper, President of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation this week telegraphed final instructions to exchange managers and salesmen alike urging them to give their undivided attention and to lend every ounce of co-operation to the end of making the month of September the red-letter month in Reelcraft history.

The telegrams were dispatched to Reelcraft's thirty-two branch exchanges the early part of this week, and were the last of an extensive series of sales letters and telegrams which Mr. Cropper had been forwarding to his sales force almost daily since the announcement that the month of September had been officially set aside as "Independence Month" was made some time ago.

The month of September, according to Mr. Cropper, is to be the turning point in the period of depression which has enveloped the industry for the past six months. The revival of business as characterized in the avalanche of bookings which independent exchanges in every section of the country have reported has been the signal for a huge demonstration on the part of producers and distributors alike; in the East and West numerous independent producers have started production, and distributors have already instituted their sales campaigns for the marketing of the 1921-1922 product. This spirited activity in production and distribution Mr. Cropper explains, has been the result of the willingness of exhibitors everywhere to make the month of September a truly representative "Independence Month."

The Reelcraft organization through Mr. Cropper, the company's president, has pledged its facilities and resources towards making September and successive months emblematical of the high and consistent standard of service which exhibitors may expect from independent exchanges. Beginning with the present month the Reelcraft product will also reflect better production and a much higher quality.

A large and distinguished cast of players, which includes Monte Blue, Edmund Loew, William Tooker, support Miss Murray. W. J. Ferguson, the well known veteran of the stage, has a prominent part, while Miss Jefferies Lewis, another player whose name has been identified with the stage and screen for many years, figures prominently in the cast.

The Sacred Films, Inc., turned over four of the first subjects of the proposed twelve productions founded upon Biblical narratives to a special representative, Ernest E. In order that the New York distributors and exchange men may get a line upon the merit of the new Bible series, Mr. Van Pelt has been giving a number of private projections. The first four subjects are entitled: First, "Creation"; second, "Cain and Abel"; third, "Noah's Ark," and fourth, "The Deluge."

Garson Completes Picture

Clara Kimball Young to Be Offered in Her Biggest Production

NEWS has just reached the Equity offices in New York that Harry Garson has completed a big new Clara Kimball Young picture that promises to overshadow any picture in which Miss Young has appeared in many months.

Included in stills received are scenes taken at specially constructed milk stations from which as the story goes, the poor of the big city are supplied with milk at rates that make the grasping, greedy milk trust thieves fighting mad. The big shots in the trial scenes in the specially constructed courtroom are unquestionably the best that the Garson studios have ever turned out. In the night scenes and street scenes the mobs were expertly handled without the usual "movie stuff" atmosphere.

Throughout the whole story groups of children from tiny tots to full grown youngsters appear and these Director Garson says will make some of the finest "kid" shots the screen has seen in years.

"We worked all through the hottest season of the year," says Harry Garson, "under unusual difficulties because of the high temperature, but the very heat itself brought out the very effects we were after. These effects will be instantly recognizable on the screen. While players and staff were suffering we had to get the stuff while the getting was good and we stayed on the job and got them."

Miss Young and cast, including many of the staff at the Garson studios, took a much needed vacation immediately after the production was finished.

Eleven American Subjects

Reconstructed Features Are Offered for Independence Month

AN announcement from the American Film Company of Chicago, states that the eleventh production in its series of Twin Six productions, is "The Marriage Bargain." Mary Miles Minter is the star of the feature, which is an adaptation of "The Innocence Lizette." Bessie Boniel is the author and James Kirkwood director

The supporting cast includes the names of popular players long identified with screen presentation, the company announces. Harvey Clark, veteran character man, is delightfully cast in the leading male role.

Marie Van Tassell and Blanche Hanson in roles of the prim and prudish type of women, are very good and Charles Newton, Eugenie Forde, Ashton Dearholt and Gene Forde, all capable character people, conclude the well chosen cast.

There is a wealth of humor in the story of a young waif, who adopted into a home of luxury, tries to keep a baby she has found on the doorstep, by telling the household it is her own.

Commends Pathe News for ZR-2 Views

The fast work of the Pathe News staff in getting views on the screen in connection with the explosion of the ZR-2 has prompted Managing Director Harold B. Franklin, of the Shea Amusement Co., Buffalo, to write the following to W. A. V. Mack, the Pathe branch manager at that city:

"Let us compliment you on your enterprise and wonderful news scoop in securing for your weekly that was issued today the remarkable pictures in connection with the explosion of the ZR-2. We trust that you will continue the good work. We are pleased to advise you that we are using these pictures in three of our local theatres."

Arrow Announces Serial

"Nanette of the North," with Ann Little, Made in Yellowstone Park

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, upon his return from a vacation in Maine, gave out the first statement concerning the new serial, "Nanette of the North," starring Ann Little, and now being produced by Ben Wilson at the coast.

Dr. Shallenberger states that this will undoubtedly be one of the biggest serials of recent years, comprising as it does many unique features and boasting an excellent cast. To those who know serials, the mere fact that it is a Ben Wilson production is a sufficient guarantee of its excellence, for Ben Wilson, besides being producer of feature pictures, is famed throughout the world as being one of the greatest serial men in the motion-picture industry. In addition to this, a number of the episodes were staged in Yellowstone National Park with the co-operation of the United States Government, the park authorities and the railroad company who did everything in their power to assist the producing organization which was under the management of Ashton Dearhold.

In addition to securing some remarkable scenes with a background never before photographed in motion pictures, this serial has, through the mere fact of it being made in part in Yellowstone Park, secured more advance publicity than any other motion picture ever made. Each day thousands of tourists from all over the world witnessed the making of these scenes.. It was no unusual sight to see the mountain side literally covered with people watching the making of this picture. Miss Little was photographed by "camera fiends" no less than 190 times in one day, which will give some idea of the immense amount of advance publicity this production is securing.

The personnel of the producing company is: Ann Little, star; Leonard Clapham, Joseph Girard, J. Morris Foster, Howard Crampton, Al Wilson, Wilbur McGaugh, Edith Stayart, William Nobles, cameraman; Ashton Dearhold, business manager; Duke Worne, director, with Ben Wilson, personally supervising the entire production. The continuity was provided by Mr. Coolidge.

Advance reports from the Ben Wilson studios indicate that this will be the greatest serial yet produced by that organization. And to those who remember "Thunderbolt Jack" and "The Blue Fox," this is indeed a promise of something exceptional. Work on the serial is progressing rapidly and Dr. Shallenberger is most enthusiastic, saying that he believes this serial will be one of the biggest money-makers ever released in the independent market.

Estee Studio for Pyramid

New Producers to Start Work in N. Y. on Anthony Paul Kelly Story

The Estee Studio at 361-363 West 125th Street, New York City, has been selected as the home for Pyramid's product. This anouncement was made today by Walter E. Greene, president of Pyramid Pictures, Inc., after a one year's lease giving Pyramid the studio had been contracted for by Pyramid's officials and Mr. E. Spitz, owner of the Estee Studio.

This announcement is given as evidence that Pyramid will lose no time in giving to the independent trade pictures of commercial and artistic value. Ray C. Smallwood, who will be in charge of Pyramid's first producing unit, and his assistant George A. McGuire are bending every effort to get "My Old Kentucky Home," an original story by Anthony Paul Kelly, under way.

During the coming week casting will be done by Mr. Smallwood at the studio address. An all star cast will be featured in Pyramid's first super release.

The Estee Studio is one of the best known studios in and around New York City. It is centrally located and within its walls many of the largest pictures produced in the east have been made.

"After a personal investigation of the various studios in and around New York City," said Mr. Greene, Mr. Smallwood and myself decided that the Estee Studio was the ideal place to make Pyramid's bigger and better product. The studio is well equipped and everything is ready for us to start shooting as soon as casting is completed. A number of alterations will be made so as to get the full advantage of the studio.

"My Old Kentucky Home," the first story to be given the trade world by Pyramid Pictures, is from the pen of Anthony Paul Kelly, an author noted for his commercial and artistic success. Mr. Kelly, in addition to being a motion picture writer of note holds an enviable reputation in the stage world. His most recent work, namely, the preparation of the script of "Way Down East" for the screen, brought him additional fame and fortune. For the past week Mr. Kelly has been working on the continuity of the story and it will be placed in the hands of the director the early part of this week.

Warner Closes New Deal

Further Territory Is Closed on Feature, "Why Girls Leave Home"

FOLLOWING closely on the heels of the announcement by Warner Brothers that the exclusive distribution rights on "Why Girls Leave Home," featuring Anna Q. Nilsson, for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware, New England and Europe had been sold, a recent statement makes known that the territorial rights for Minnesota, North and South Dakota have been purchased by E. G. Tunstall, of the Tri-State Film Corporation, St. Paul, Minn. Other negotiations are now pending and it is intimated that the entire country will be disposed of within the next few weeks. All negotiations are being made with principals only, and not with representatives, it is announced.

The Warner Brothers are more than gratified by the unusual receptions being accorded the production in Atlantic City, where it has played for two weeks to capacity business, and in Wilmington, Del., where it is declared the picture has been hailed as a sensation. These two showings are merely the forerunners of two big Eastern campaigns now under way in Newark and New York. The production will run for at least six weeks at the Bijou Theatre, Newark, and for an indefinite run at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre. Following the Broadway run the picture will be shown in the Keith houses in Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Utica and Amsterdam.

"Why Girls Leave Home" is said to tell the story of the lax manners, the flouting of propriety by the people of society. One of the most vital problems of the day is interwoven in the fabric of the story that contains romance, humor, pathos and thrilling adventure.

In the cast supporting Miss Nilsson are Kathryn Perry (Mrs. Owen Moore), Julia Swayne Gordon, Dan Mason, Claude King, Maurine Powers, George Lessey, and others equally known to the screen world. The picture was produced by Harry Rapf and directed by William Nigh.

"The Atheist" Is Complete

New Production to Have Broadway Opening, States Distributors

"THE ATHEIST," a super production, will be completed this coming week, according to a statement issued today by the president of the United States Moving Pictures Corporation, James W. Martin.

"The Atheist" had its premier recently in Cumberland, Md., at the Maryland Theatre where it is said to have exceeded the drawing power of "Mickey" and "Way Down East." Though shown with scratch titles, and despite unfavorable weather, it drew such audiences that the management was compelled by popular demand to continue the run for the balance of the week.

"The Atheist" is an original story by Garfield Thompson, directed by Joseph Levering in cooperation with the author and Herbert L. Messmore. The cast includes Belle Bennett, Walter Ringham, Jean Robertson, Logan Paul, May Kitson, James McDuff, Denton Vale, and the wonderful little child actress, Rita Rogan, who gives a superb performance in leading the hero through the various crises of his life from atheism to recognition of the Deity.

The Russell Clark Sales Syndicate has the handling of the feature. It is understood that negotiations are under way for a Broadway house.

J. E. Storey Says Associated Will Release One Feature Every Week

"WITH business improving daily, with exhibitors anxious to assure themselves of a steady source of good features and with this year's production out-put reduced in the ratio of 5 to 8," says J. E. Storey, in a statement issued this week from the offices of Associated Exhibitors, "we are planning to release a new Playgoers Pictures feature every week."

Upon his return from a trip through the cities covered by the Eastern and Central branches of Associated, Mr. Storey declared that the outstanding fact of his survey was the manner in which exhibitors are confidently preparing for a speedy resumption of excellent business and the spirit of healthy optimism among them.

Thus, the announcement that Associated Exhibitors will pursue the "one a week" policy means that the company is going ahead with its plans for expansion.

"Business is good and getting better all the time," continues Mr. Storey. "Even for a period ending in August our gross collections were satisfactory and current bookings show a steady gain both in volume and length of run.

The following releases are announced for the September schedule by Mr. Storey:

September 11th, the initial Playgoers feature, entitled "Home-Keeping Hearts"; September 18th, "The Family Closet," which is adapted from a Saturday Evening Post by Will Payne; and "Discontented Wives," featuring J. P. McGowan and Fritzi Brunette, for September 25th.

A World-Popular "Tarzan"

Elmo Lincoln, Serial Star, Welcomed by Fans in Every Country

SINCE the initial announcement that Elmo Lincoln was to appear in a Tarzan film was made public several weeks ago, he has been the recipient of an extraordinary mass of correspondence from all parts of the world.

Letters have reached the motion picture star from distant points in this country, while included in his mail have been postal cards, letters and five instances of cables from London, Paris, Lucerne, Amsterdam and Milano.

In assuming the stellar role in "Adventures of Tarzan," the serial which will be released October first, Lincoln returns to the character which brought him fame and fortune. As the creator of the ape man of Edgar Rice Burroughs' imagination, Lincoln created a furore in "Tarzan of the Apes" and later "The Romance of Tarzan." The motion picture public has clamored for Lincoln in the role of Tarzan during the lapse of time since his depiction of the character in the film mentioned. It is partly due to this popular public demand that he was to portray the ape man in the latest serial film version of Burroughs' latest novel.

It is regarded as a peculiar coincidence that Lincoln's experience prior to his debut in motion pictures renders him especially fit for the part of Tarzan. For several months he was one of an expedition which explored Africa, participating in several thrilling adventures in the jungle. In physique and make up the star of "Adventures of Tarzan" is ideally fitted for the role. Weighing two hundred and fourteen pounds and standing over six feet in height, Lincoln possesses the strength of a super-man, combined with a daring which has led him to risk his life several times in scenes with the various wild animals in "Adventures of Tarzan."

Aids Independence Month

Hodkinson Corporation Reports Many Bookings for September

THE Hodkinson Corporation is doing everything in its power to assist the independent theatre owners in the fight which they are waging, announces that company, and is offering them a strong list of feature productions for play dates during that month.

The response of the exhibitors has been immediate and satisfying as is evidenced in a recent letter received from S. A. Arnold Hodkinson Representative in Memphis. The letter follows:

"The following first run Hodkinson pictures will play Memphis Independence Month: "Brute Master," Pantages Theatre, week of Aug. 29; "The Spenders," Loew's Palace theatre, week of Sept. 4; "Down Home," Pantages theatre, week Sept. 12; "Lavender and Old Lace," Loew's Palace theatre, week of Sept. 11; "The Journey's End," Loew's Palace theatre, week of Sept. 18."

"This is a striking indication," claims the Hodkinson organization, "of the splendid progress made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in the three years which they have been functioning and points clearly to the fact that even greater progress may be expected from them now, as, since the establishing of their own exchange system, they have become the dominant organization in the field of independent motion picture distribution."

Newest Universal Serial

Art Accord in "Winners of the West," is Based on History

THE first installment of "Winner of the West," Art Acord's new serial thriller based on actual historical events, has been received at the Universal home office in New York and is pronounced by that company the most remarkable serial opening since chaptered photoplays were devised. The new serial, an exact and authentic story written around the adventures of Capt. John C. Fremont, pioneer of the West, is so true to actual history and so engaging as to plot and suspense, Universal officials have named this new departure in serial construction as a "continued feature."

It is promised as the forerunner of a new form of continued screen story. Universal already has several other historical chronicles being whipped into continuity form for production as "continued features." They form a chain of moving pictures which will portray the winning of the West and the earliest frontier days with verisimilitude, and which will show actual characters from history performing the deeds which made them famous.

"Winners of the West" deals with the gold rush to California in '49 and includes all the thrills and adventures of the hardy pioneers who followed Fremont's trail through the Redskin country and across the Great Divide. No serial ever contained greater thrills nor more suspense than the new Acord feature will have, Universal promises. These thrills, however, will be faithful reproductions of actual events, just as they happened seventy-odd years ago, it is said. The schoolboys and girls will see the heroic figures from their history textbooks in exact counterpart, and grown-ups will see the romantic American characters around whom countless stories of romance and adventure have been written.

Supporting Acord are Myrtle Lind, Burt Wilson, Burton C. Law, Jim Corey, Percy Pembroke and many others. Law plays the role of Capt. Fremont. Acord takes the role of a young Missourian who associates himself with the famous explorer.

Feature for Independents

Burr Spurns Offers to Distribute Personally "Burn 'em Up Barnes"

ALL question and rumors concerning the problematical disposition of Charles C. Burr's "Burn 'em up Barnes," the romantic comedy in which Johnny Hines ascends to stellar honors in feature length productions, were set at rest last week by the veritable flood of sales publicity emanating from Mr. Burr's offices, conveying in unmistakable terms, the determination of "Burn 'em up Barnes" sponsors to distribute the production in the independent market via Affiliated Distributors, Inc., of which organization Mr. Burr is the presiding factor.

During the past few weeks and especially since the beginning of the short season of pre-release showings, given in several Mid-western cities and designed solely to definitely establish its box office value, rumor has been rampant that the State Rights field was to lose another production to a national distributor.

In commenting on his plans, a few days ago, Mr. Burr said:

"Almost from the very inception of this industry—and certainly since there has been a division in the field, it has been openly charged that any so-called 'independent' producer would quickly and completely shift his alliance if he were to produce a photoplay worthy of a place on a program or to be issued as a 'Special' by a national distributor. Perhaps there are instances where this has been done but History will not point out 'Burn 'em up Barnes' as such an example.

"This production was viewed by the principals of several distributing organizations and in each instance, definite propositions were made us, ranging in form from straight commission to the intricate mazes of cash advance plus gross rental splits. However, despite these overtures and propositions, the documentary proof of which we hold in our offices, 'Burn 'em up Barnes,' which was made for the independent market, was saved for it."

Ass'd Exhib Releases in Demand for September

Nilsson, "Women Who Wait"; and the Harold Lloyd comedies.

"U" Opens Its Broadway House

New Policy at Central Ushered in by "No Woman Knows"

"NO WOMAN KNOWS," Tod Browning's latest Universal-Jewel production, had its premier last Sunday evening in the Central Theatre, Forty-seventh street and Broadway, New York City, and was received with great enthusiasm by an audience which jammed the new Universal playhouse to its doors. The Sunday showing was the beginning of a year's run of Universal pictures in the Broadway house, marking the first time Universal has had its own theatre on Broadway in many years.

The presentation of "No Woman Knows" was arranged by Hugo Riesenfeld, director general of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion Theatres, New York. His prologue arrangement for "No Woman Knows" was simple and tasteful. It consisted of a violin solo, "Kol Nidre" rendered by Isidore Berger, in keeping with the theme of the picture; while the picture itself was accompanied by special organ music also arranged by Riesenfeld.

Accompanying the Tod Browning production on the program was an "Out of the Inkwell" comedy by Max Fleischer and a "bubble dance" interpreted by Lillian Powell.

"No Woman Knows" is a picturization of Edna Ferber's book "Fanny Herself." The principal role "Fanny" was taken by Mabel Julienne Scott who gained new laurels by her interpretation, as evidenced by the favorable reception accorded the picture by those who filled the Central Theatre on the opening night.

In announcing the acquisition of the Central Theatre, Universal made it known that the lobby displays, prologue and special exploitation used in conjunction with the pictures playing at that theatre, would be devised to suit every exhibitor in the country. The presentations have been promised as models for exhibitors who later book the picture.

That this policy is sound and is being adhered to by Universal was apparent at the opening of "No Woman Knows." The prologue was neither elaborate nor overornate. The lobby was strikingly decorated with lobby cards from the feature, augmented by pages taken from the book "Fanny Herself" and by oil paintings.

The only street exploitation used with the picture was a simple truck stunt which included the painting of a huge book on the canvas sides of the truck to tie up the picture with the popular novel.

"No Woman Knows" will remain in the Central Theatre for two weeks, when it will be followed by another Universal picture. Later on in the season the theatre will be given over to the presentation of "Foolish Wives," the million dollar von Stroheim picture, now being cut and edited at Universal City.

In adapting the Central Theatre to moving pictures, Universal made many changes in the lobby and front, to adjust the house to the psychology of moving picture patrons. The most important change was the closing up of the interior box-office and the installation of a moving picture box-office flush with the side-walk.

Paramount Week Sets a Record

7000 Houses Playing Paramount During Week is Report

WITH approximately seven thousand motion picture theatres in the United States showing Paramount pictures exclusively this week, Paramount Week has smashed all records for this annual national sales event, according to the figures given out by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Amazing as this grand total record is in itself, still more astonishing is the fact that right on the heels of probably the worst Summer slump that the industry has ever experienced, as the result of a protracted period of terrific heat which covered the entire country like a blanket, approximately eleven hundred more Paramount Week accounts were booked than last year.

Figures compiled by the sales department at the Paramount home office last Wednesday, based upon returns received up to the previous Monday, showed an actual gain of 955 accounts over last year. At that time, however, three of the biggest exchanges had not filed their weekly reports. Adding an approximate figure for these three offices, based upon their previous reports, and allowing for the fact that there were still five business days to go before the beginning of Paramount Week, the conservative estimate of an increase of 1,100 houses over last year was arrived at.

A tabulation made ten days ago showed a number of exchanges bunched so closely in the race for leading honors in the big sales contest, in which $10,000 in prizes is at stake, that it was impossible to pick the winners. At that time the ten offices apparently in the lead were the following: Indianapolis, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Cincinnati, Denver, Seattle, Albany, Salt Lake City, New Haven and Buffalo. Salt Lake City had jumped in one week from seventeenth place to eighth, and San Francisco from fourth to second. However, there are so many conditions that must be taken into consideration by the final judges, such as the volume of business for the week preceding Paramount Week and the week following, that it is not impossible that all of the prizes may be captured by dark horses which now seem, on the face of present returns, to be out of the running. Boston, for one, looks decidedly dangerous, and so does Philadelphia.

More eloquent even than the country-wide survey of business conditions made by Adolph Zukor is the story of the definite revival of the picture business which is written between the lines of this Paramount Week result. It is a story of confidence in the future on the part of exhibitors, a confidence well grounded in the knowledge that the slackness during the summer was almost entirely due to the unfavorable weather and not to weakness in the business fabric of the country or to any instability in the film industry.

"Hurricane Hutch" Showing Fills Town Hall

Exhibitors and their friends, of New York and New Jersey filled the Town Hall on West 43rd Street, New York City, at the special showing of the new Pathe super-serial, "Hurricane Hutch," produced by George B. Seitz, and starring Charles Hutchison, Pathe's famous "stunt man." The showing was arranged and held under the direction of William E. Raynor, branch manager of the Pathe Exchange in New York City, and a suitable musical setting was especially arranged for the presentation. A number of one-sheets, and other advertising matter were shown, followed by the introduction of the star and prominent members of the cast.

Preliminary to the showing of the serial, the latest animated cartoon of the "Aesop's Film Fables" series was thrown on the silver sheet, followed by "Netting the Leopard." After the presentation of "Hurricane Hutch" the latest Harold Lloyd comedy, "I Do," closed the bill.

Realart Gets "Morals of Marcus Ordeyne"

Taylor has already started work on this story with May McAvoy as the star in the role of "Carlotta," the little English girl who was reared in an Oriental harem.

A particularly colorful production is assured by the wealth of Oriental atmosphere which is called for.

The supporting cast includes: May Hopkins, playing the lead; Harry Lonsdale, Joseph Bennett, Sid Jordan, Bert Sprotte, C. Anderson, Lon Poff and Charles K. French. The play is based on the novel "Wild Geese," by Max Brand, and the scenario is by Lynn Reynolds, who also directed the production.

Educational Opens Exchange at Charlotte

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., opened its thirty-seventh branch exchange in Charlotte, N. C., September 5. Following within a few days after the opening of a new branch at Oklahoma City, this provides a striking illustration of Educational's confidence in the new year's business and in its new product.

Just before his departure for Europe E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, announced the coming opening of the Oklahoma City branch, and indicated that increasing business probably would necessitate establishment of further branch exchanges in the near future.

Tearle Referees Genuine Bouts in New Subject

Ralph Ince is now producing "The Referee" with Conway Tearle in the stellar role. This is one of the series of six Tearle features which Selznick will release during the coming season. The picture is based on Gerald Beaumont's story which recently appeared in the Red Book. Lewis Allene Browne did the scenario. Some of the bout scenes according to word from the Selznick offices, were taken in the quarters of the Queensboro Athletic Club with Tearle acting as the referee of several professional matches. In one of these bouts, Frankie Ryan, a Brooklyn favorite, met Gus Platts, the middleweight pugilistic luminary of Europe. Gladys Hulette plays opposite Mr. Tearle. Charles Slattery, Anders Randolf and Laura Clarion are among the principals in the support.

Rothapfel, manager of presentation for the Capitol, wrote that "in my opinion, the 'Ride on a Runaway Train' is the best short subject I have ever seen." He added that "it is the only short subject which we ever brought back for a second presentation, and on both occasions it created a sensation."

The picture was released by Educational and has had success and commendation such as are won by few short novelties. Now it is coming back to the Capitol again, where the patrons of that theatre will see it for the third time early in September.

Denver, San Francisco and Detroit branches got the honors for submitting the first contracts for the new product. The Denver branch reported some time ago that it had closed for Educational's entire output of comedy subjects, Sketchografs and Selig-Rork Photoplays for first run in that city. The first contract from Detroit covered the entire comedy program of 62 subjects, while contracts have been made in San Francisco for the comedies and for the Selig-Rork Photoplays.

Big House Uses Dignified Exploitation for Martin Johnson's Film

THE exceptional exploitation possibilities of Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures," the first picture to be offered by the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, are being taken advantage of to their fullest extent by S. L. Rothafel, of the Capitol Theatre, New York City, according to a statement from Exceptional Pictures Corporation. "Jungle Adventures" will be presented as the feature attraction at the big house during the week of September 11, it is announced.

Exploitation is more and more being considered rather the intensified application of plain commonsense selling propaganda than the use of hair-raising stunts which create momentary attention with doubtful ultimate consequences. Therefore, despite the old daredevil stunts which "Jungle Adventures" might at once suggest, there are so many legitimate exploitation angles that the old methods need not be resorted to in putting over Martin Johnson's unusual feature, it is declared by Exceptional.

The photographs showing scenes from this romantic production are in themselves so unique that an attractive lobby stand, with a number of these, has proven at the Capitol Theatre that it will attract the most widespread attention. Oil paintings of these stills will also find a ready spot in almost any shop window for they will attract on account of their unusualness, which simultaneously will benefit the shop by directly increased attention to its wares.

Newspaper tie-ups with sporting-goods, apparel and department stores recommend themselves, based on the fact that such stores are prepared to equip anyone for a trip of one day or for one year's journey into the jungles of Borneo, where "Jungle Adventures" was filmed. Among the items which such a trip requires are apparel of every nature for camp use, tents, provisions, guns, ammunition, medicines, camp utensils, etc., etc.

Bosworth Picture Ready

"Blind Hearts," Produced by Star, Received by Associated Producers

"BLIND HEARTS," the initial production starring Hobart Bosworth, made by that star's own producing company, organized early this year, has been completed, and prints of it will be forwarded this coming week to the exchanges of Associated Producers, Inc., which will distribute the feature. It will be released to the first-run houses the last week in September.

The story is one which Mr. Bosworth chose himself, to make his debut as a producer. It is from the pen of Emilie Johnson.

Mr. Bosworth and the male members of the cast spent several weeks last winter in the ice floes of Bering Straits getting the "Northern stuff" which abounds in the onening part of the picture. The settings for the latter part are San Francisco and environments today. Several actual scenes were made in San Quentin, the famous California prison, by special permission.

Mr. Bosworth portrays the role of Lars Larsen. Wade Boteler is cast as John Thomas, Madge Bellamy as Julia Larsen, Raymond McKee as Paul Thomas, Irene Blackwell as Mrs. Thomas, Collette Forbes as Mrs. Larsen, William Conklin as James Curdy, Lule Warrenton, and Henry Hebert.

Omaha-Nebraska Convention to Start Sept. 19

EXHIBITORS of Iowa and Nebraska will meet in convention at the Paxton Hotel, Omaha, on September 19, 20, 21. Among the questions to be brought up are: federal, state, county, city and town taxation, music license fee, raw stock tariff, internal revenue rulings and procedure, deposit question and the new Nebraska deposit law, blue laws and censorship, film rentals and accessories prices, non-theatrical booking problem, genereal trade conditions and centralized distribution, protection of industry from fake schemes, and an equitable and uniform contract.

The Executive Committee is anxious to have every exhibitor attend, whether or not they are members of the M. P. T. O., as it is considered essential that the two states unite. The railroads have made a one and one-half round trip fare from most points in the territory.

Harry Carey Ready for Big Production

Harry Carey will start production immediately on "Man to Man," Jackson Gregory's big dramatic story, to be filmed as a Universal-Jewel. Stuart Paton has been assigned to direct the star by Irving G. Thalberg, in recognition of Paton's work as the director of "Reputation" and "Conflict," superfeatures starring Priscilla Dean. Continuity for "Man to Man" is being written by George C. Hull.

Production on "Man to Man" closely follows the completion of "The Fox," Harry Carey's first Universal-Jewel. "The Fox" was written by Carey himself and filmed from Lucien Hubbard's continuity.

Maigne to be Corinne Griffith Director

Albert E. Smith has engaged Charles Maigne, whose name as a director is associated with some of the biggest and most successful productions of the past couple of years, to direct Corinne Griffith at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio in "Received Payment," that star's new production to follow "The Single Track."

Mr. Maigne has directed Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead," Mary Miles Minter, Monte Blue, Tom Meighan and other well known stars of other companies, and put out two special Charles Maigne Paramount Productions, "The Firing Line" and "The Fighting Chance."

"Backbone Contract" for Buffalo Exhibitor

One of the most enthusiastic supporters of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and of Mr. Hodkinson, its president, is Mr. Howard J. Smith of the Palace theatre, Buffalo, New York.

Mr. Smith has played practically every Hodkinson release in the past.

R-C to Serve Independents

Has Extensive Plans to Help Make Independence Month Great Success

CO-OPERATING to the fullest with the independent exhibitors, R-C Pictures Corporation is carrying out extensive plans to help them make Independence Month a complete success.

"The greatest aid independent exhibitors can have at this time," declares General Manager of Distribution Charles R. Rogers, "is good pictures sold on a 'live and let live' basis. Therefore, we have scheduled for special release during Independence Month four productions which I regard as unquestioned money-makers.

"They are: 'Where Lights Are Low,' with Sessue Hayakawa; 'The Sting of the Lash,' with Pauline Frederick; 'Shams of Society,' a special with an all-star cast, including Barbara Castleton, Montagu Love, Macey Harlam, Lucille Lee Stewart and Julia Swayne Gordon; and 'A Wife's Awakening,' in which L. J. Gasnier, producer of 'Kismet,' shows again his great ability as a director. These have been set aside for Independence Month solely because we believe they possess box office value far beyond the average production."

In accordance with his plans for co-operating with exhibitors during Independence Month, Mr. Rogers further announced that an attractive assortment of free accessories and exploitation aids has been prepared for exhibitors who book R-C subjects.

These accessories include a special slide, one-sheet and herald and in addition the corporation is offering free 24-sheets to all exhibitors of productions that have already been issued by the organization. The only requirement exacted by R-C Pictures is the pledge of the exhibitor that he will post the paper, it is stated.

"Camille" Premiere in N. Y.

Nazimova Comes from Coast to Attend Showing at Ritz Carlton

THE Nazimova motion picture production of "Camille" was given a private showing Wednesday evening, September 7, in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel. A specially invited audience, composed of persons distinguished in artistic, literary, social, theatrical, educational and motion picture sets, attended. Nazimova, who made the picture at Metro studios in Hollywood, came from California to attend the premiere. It will be released by Metro September 26.

Nazimova's "Camille" is a modernized version of the Dumas masterpiece. The modernizing was done by June Mathis, author of the screen versions of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "The Conquering Power." It is the most ambitious screen effort that Nazimova has made. In it, she says, she hopes "to achieve for 'Camille' on the screen what Bernhardt achieved on the stage."

The "Camille" of 1921 model is addicted to automobiles and the latest Rue de la Paix gowns. She moves against ultra-modern backgrounds, designed by the Russian artist, Natacha Rambova. The picture was directed by Ray C. Smallwood and photographed by Rudolph J. Bergquist. Joseph Calder was technical director. The supporting cast includes Rudolph Valentino, Arthur Hoyt, Zeffie Tillbury, Rex Cherryman, Edward Connelly, Ruth Miller and Consuelo Flowerton.

Realart's Studios Enlarged

Capacity Doubled Since Last Year; Five Starring Units Now in Employ

REALART'S West Coast studios approach the opening of the Fall production season especially well equipped for the carrying out of a busy schedule during the coming months. As a result of improvements already completed or now in progress, the studio capacity will soon be almost double of that which Realart had this time a year ago.

Realart now has five stars working at the West Coast studios, the greatest number since the organization of West Coast plant. To direct these stars Bebe Daniels, Mary Miles Minter, Constance Binney, Wanda Hawley and May McAvoy, a corps of six directors has been assembled. This, by simple comparison, shows that there is one more director than there are stars, a production difficulty which is obviated by the simple expedient of having one director "off stage" supervising the cutting of his last picture and preparing the details of his next.

Elmer Harris, supervising director, now has so many authors and scenario writers on his staff that the scenario building is being nearly doubled. The improvement includes a half dozen new offices and a large conference room where the scenarists meet daily with Mr. Harris to discuss the stories intended for the various Realart stars.

Work on the new "Number Four" stage, which is 90 by 120 feet, has been finished. A dance, at which all the Realart stars and officials on the West Coast were present, was held to celebrate the completion and dedication of the new stage. "Number Four" stage is but part of the improvement schedule authorized by President Morris Kohn on his Los Angeles inspection trip of several months ago. "Number Three" stage, new dressing rooms, an ice plant, a new star bungalow and a new portable lighting plant are among the improvements already effected.

Praise "Three Musketeers"

Ovation Marks Its Opening at the Mission Theatre in Los Angeles

"THE THREE MUSKETEERS," starring Douglas Fairbanks, was accorded the same tremendous reception in Los Angeles that marked its opening last week in the Lyric Theatre, New York. The picture is now showing in Los Angeles at the Mission Theatre. Every report from the West Coast received at the United Artists' headquarters speaks in highest terms of Fairbanks' new picture.

Immediately after the first performance, Harry David, managing director of the Mission, wired Mr. Fairbanks, as follows: "You should have been here. Every other notable in society and filmdom was present. Never in my career as an exhibitor have I had the honor of being host to such an enthusiastic audience. I stand with the public in my gratitude to you for such a masterpiece."

The first report of the reception of the picture in Los Angeles that Mr. Fairbanks received was from Mark Larkin, his publicity manager, who in his wire said: "Public took to Musketeers with open arms. Knocked them for a goal. Harry David expects to run it until he is so old his beard drags on the ground. Reviews says picture is absolutely flawless and herald it as greatest cinema achievement. Florence Lawrence says in Examiner that picture marks your entrance into realm of classics."

The Los Angeles Record ran the following eight column head: "Doug Fairbanks' 'The Three Musketeers' Beggars Description." In the review in the Record, written by Linton Wells, he says: "There are hardly enough adjectives in the dictionary to fittingly describe the greatest picture of the year and one of the greatest of all time, namely 'The Three Musketeers,' for Doug has improved on Dumas."

Florence Lawrence of the Los Angeles Examiner said: "Fairbanks in classic role is flawless. The new cinema is a tremendous success. The period idea is carried out with remarkable fidelity and scenes of old Paris are duplicated with a magnitude which affords wonder and amazement to the student and layman as well."

Henry Dougherty in the Los Angeles Express news story said: "'The Three Musketeers' is probably the greatest achievement since the birth of the motion picture industry. Mr. Fairbanks in this play surpasses his excellent work in 'The Mark of Zorro.'"

Paul Powell Assigned to Lasky Studio

Paul Powell, Paramount producer, and Mary H. O'Connor, scenario writer, who have been engaged in production work for Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., at Paramount's London studio, returned to New York Monday on the Celtic and will proceed at once to the Lasky studio, Hollywood, where they will be assigned to production units.

While in England Mr. Powell produced two pictures for the British Paramount organization, "The Mystery Road" and "Dangerous Lies," both of them E. Phillips Oppenheim stories. The latter, which was adapted by Miss O'Connor from Mr. Oppenheim's "Twice Wed," was completed just before Mr. Powell left London and he brought with him the first finished print.

Pickford's New Special to Open September 15

"LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY," starring Mary Pickford, will open in New York City on September 15th in the Apollo theatre, West Forty-second Street, near Broadway. Through this arrangement, "The Three Musketeers," starring Douglas Fairbanks, will be practically a next-door competitor of Miss Pickford's new picture, as the Lyric, in which the Fairbanks picture is now being presented, adjoins the Apollo. "Little Lord Fauntleroy" will be a super-feature offering, and will be shown in about ten reels.

The Apollo theatre engagement will be handled by Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand, New York City, who is also conducting "The Three Musketeers" presentation. The picture will be put on with special musical setting arranged by Louis F. Gottschalk. A prologue will be staged with special setting.

Vidor's for the A. P. Nears Completion

With the shooting of a spectacular railroad wreck, "Love Never Dies," the initial King Vidor release for Associated Producers, Inc., is nearly completed. Cutting on the feature, which will take about a month, will be started as soon as a few studio scenes are taken, and prints are expected to be available about two weeks before release, which has been tentatively set for the middle of October.

The wreck resulted in the destruction of a locomotive, six cars and a railroad trestle, and was far more costly than was originally planned.

Melford's "The Shiek" to Have Enlarged Cast

Margaret Loomis and Fontaine LaRue have been added to the many notable players appearing in George Melford's Paramount production, "The Sheik," in which Agnes Ayres and Rudolph Valentino are featured.

Miss Loomis is an expert dancer, formerly associated with Ruth St. Denis.

Paramount Names Releases

September List Has Subjects Which Went Big in Pre-Release Showings

AS its contribution to the opening of the new season 1921-22, Paramount presents six productions, many of which have already given promise, through pre-release showings in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, of being among the leading box-office attractions of the year.

First on the list, scheduled for release September 4, is Wallace Reid in "The Hell Diggers." This is from an original story by Byron Morgan. Lois Wilson is Reid's leading woman, and Richard Bennett appears in a prominent role. Frank Urson here makes his debut as a full-fledged director.

Also scheduled for the 4th is Gloria Swanson's first Paramount starring picture, "The Great Moment." Written by Elinor Glynn. Monte M. Katterjohn adapted the story for the screen and Sam Wood directed. Miss Swanson's leading man is Milton Sills, while Alec B. Francis also has a prominent part.

For Sept. 11th, is scheduled another Paramount starring debut, that of Betty Compson in "At the End of the World." This is from an adaptation by Adelaide Heilbron of a play by Ernest Klein, one of the foremost European dramatists. The scenario was written by E. A. Bingham, and the production was directed by Penrhyn Stanlaws. Milton Sills is again seen as leading man.

Paul Powell's production, "Dangerous Lies," made at the London studios of Famous-Players British Producers, is scheduled for the 18th. This is a photoplay by Mary H. O'Connor based upon E. Phillips Oppenheim's popular novel, "Twice Wed." David Powell is featured in the leading role and Mary Glynne plays opposite him.

Also scheduled for the 18th is the big European special production, "The Golem," which is now playing its twelfth week to capacity business at the New York Criterion. Paul Wegener, one of Europe's greatest actors, directed the production and appears in the leading role.

September 25 is one of the real red letter days on the Paramount schedule for it marks the release of Cecil B. DeMille's "The Affairs of Anatol" with its twelve stars including Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson, Elliott Dexter, Bebe Daniels, Monte Blue, Wanda Hawley, Theodore Roberts, Agnes Ayres, Theodore Kosloff, Polly Moran, Raymond Hatton and Julia Faye.

Playgoers to Release a Five-Reeler Series

AN announcement by Associated Exhibitors states that contracts have been signed by Arthur S. Kane, representing Playgoers Pictures, and Herbert Hayman, on behalf of Herald Productions, whereby J. P. McGowan will direct and be starred in six five reel features, to be distributed by Playgoers Pictures.

The first production has been completed and will be released on September 25th, under the title "Discontented Wives." This feature marks Mr. McGowan's debut as both director and star. In "Discontented Wives," Mr. McGowan is supported by Fritzi Brunette. Others in the cast are Jean Perry, Andy Waldron, G. S. McGregor, Edith Stayart and Jackie Condon.

Bookings Grow as Goldwyn Week Is Neared

Bookings on Goldwyn releases are growing in volume with the approach of Goldwyn Week, starting October 23rd, according to advices from the Goldwyn headquarters in New York. The number of signed contracts being received at the twenty-two branch exchanges are reported to be rapidly increasing. The applications for special exhibitor aids for use during Goldwyn week are said to be so voluminous that it has been found necessary to order new quantities of supplies in excess of the original estimate.

In addition to "The Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead," the list of fifth year productions available for Goldwyn Week include "The Night Rose" by Leroy Scott, "All's Fair in Love," by Thompson Buchanan; Tom Moore in Charles Kenyon's original screen story, "Beating the Game," etc.

Wells Hastings to Do Titling for Realart

Wells Hastings has been appointed as the head of the newly-formed title department at the Realart studios. Mr. Hastings has written several originals for Dorothy Gish, as well as a number of novels. His latest work for the screen was the titling of "A Light in the Clearing," a T. Hayes Hunter production.

Grant Brightman Heads New Organization

Grant L. Brightman, for the past two years manager of exploitation for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has resigned to form The Brightman Organization, with offices in the World's Tower Building. The new organization will specialize in public relations, advertising, sales promotion, merchandizing, house organ publishing, exploitation for motion pictures exhibitors, distributors and producers. and film titling, editing and continuity writing.

May Run "Quo Vadis" in Legitimate Theatre

Following the success scored in San Francisco at the Savoy Theatre, the F. B. Warren Corporation may play the brilliant revival of Geo. Kliene's "Quo Vadis" in several legitimate theatres of the country as a big road attraction with special orchestra and effects, as produced at the Astor Theatre in New York and McVicker's Theatre in Chicago in 1913, the year this spectacle grossed over two million dollars.

Arrangements are now underway for a Broadway theatre in New York and one in Boston to show there during the forthcoming Dante celebration when prominent Italians will meet there in convention.

Grand Opening on Coast for Ingram Special

Rex Ingram's Metro production of "The Conquering Power" was enthusiastically received by a brilliant audience at the Western premiere showing at the Mission theatre in Los Angeles recently. Although no arrangements had been made for a special performance, the audience on the opening night was one that rivalled any ever assembled in Los Angeles for a first night.

Los Angeles critics were unanimous in their praise of "The Conquering Power." Without exception, they pronounced "The Conquering Power" as one of the very few outstanding screen triumphs of the past few years.

Gareth Hughes to Play Opposite Viola Dana

Rather than merely mark time while awaiting George D. Baker's preparation of his second series of starring vehicles, Gareth Hughes, who with the production of "Garments of Truth," "The Hunch" and "Little Eva Ascends" became a full-fledged Metro star, will appear as leading man for Viola Dana in her next special photoplay, "Glass Houses."

"Glass Houses," an original story by Clara Genevieve Kennedy, and scenarioized by her sister, Edith Kennedy, of the Metro staff, will be directed by Harry Beaumont.

Is 2-Reel Drama to Return?

Selig-Rork's Current Work in Two-Reel Product as Viewed by Expert

HERBERT HOWE, writing in the September number of Motion Picture Magazine, a moving picture fan publication, gives the view of an expert critic on the return of the two-reel photoplay such as Selig-Rork are making for Educational release. In an article, under the caption "The Return of the Two-Reeler," Mr. Howe says:

"Another old favorite is trying to stage a come-back. There is always something pathetic about the reappearance of a former idol whose public has forgotten. So it was with a heavy and dubious heart that I went to Selig-Rork studios to review the return of the oldest of all favorites — the two-reel drama."

After discussing the earliest days of pictures, recalling the time when a single reel was considered the limit for any picture, and reviewing the growth from that time to the very long "feature" photoplay, Mr. Howe goes on to say:

"Naturally it was not easy to induce directors and actors of high reputation into demi tasse drama. And Messrs. Selig and Rork knew that it required supernal agencies to raise the favorite from the dead. They finally secured Bertram Bracken as director. From the shelves of the great film library at the Selig plant Mr. Bracken selected 'The Policeman and the Baby,' a comedy drama, and 'The Northern Trail,' a tragedy by James Oliver Curwood, as the first of the series. For these he secured players of repute—William Desmond, Lewis Stone, Ethel Grey Terry, Wallace Beery, Elinor Fair and Margaret Landis.

"When I viewed 'The Northern Trail' I realized more emphatically the fault of the motion picture. Commercially speaking, the five-reeler has been adulterated. I speak of the majority of 'feature' pictures.

"The short story has been the favorite form of American literature. O. Henry, of all writers, is perhaps the most typically American, because he wrote concisely and faithfully of common American life. Some of his stories were produced as five-reelers without much success, whereas those done as two-reelers often overshadowed the feature of the program."

Work on "Iron Trail" Pleases Rex Beach

Rex Beach had his first look at the scenes already completed for the forthcoming United Artists release, "The Iron Trail" and at the end of the screening expressed his approval in two words—"That's Alaska." It is not so much what one says as how one says it that counts; and the tone of satisfied conviction with which the author uttered those two words spoke volumes of commendation for Director R. William Neill's work up-to-date in this subject.

Hope Hampton Completes "Stardust"

Hope Hampton has finally completed the actual filming of "Stardust" and is now engaged in putting the finishing touches to the editing, titling and general ensemble. Miss Hampton is one of the few stars of the screen who personally attend to all the finer points in bringing a picture to a state of final perfection and is indefatigable in her efforts toward this end.

"Stardust" was written by Fannie Hurst, in fact it is this author's first full-length novel, and ran serially for several months in the Cosmopolitan magazine. It was adapted for the screen by Anthony Paul Kelly and made under the direction of Hobart Henley at the Peerless Studio in Fort Lee, N. J.

Miss Hampton considers this production to be the greatest picture in which she has appeared and is concurred with in this belief by the most conservative critics. In fact it is said to be one of the most ambitious productions of the year and of the type in keeping with the demand now made by the picture going public. It is a human document. It is scheduled for early release as a First National Attraction.

Betty Compson Feature Is Finished

Betty Compson, under the direction of Penrhyn Stanlaws, last week finished her second starring picture for Paramount, an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's famous stage play, "The Woman in the Case." Preparations are now being made for the starting of Miss Compson's next picture, Sir J. M. Barrie's "The Little Minister," which also will be directed by Mr. Stanlaws.

R-C Acting to Popularize Its Trade Mark

With the aim of establishing the R-C Pictures Corporation trade mark more prominently than ever as a guide to exhibitors and theatregoers, the publicity and advertising department of that organization is carrying on a quiet but aggressive campaign to popularize it throughout the world. The initials R-C with the word "Pictures" in smaller letters underneath and the whole enclosed in a circle makes not only an attactive emblem but one that is easily read at a glance.

Importance of Proper Illumination of Theatre Interior

Architect and Lighting Engineer Can Prevent Much Discomfort

In the early days of the motion picture theatre, it was customary to present the pictures in a room containing practically no illumination except what resulted from reflection at the screen. This procedure may have been justified to a certain extent at that time because the light used for projecting the picture was very weak, making it necessary to exclude practically all stray light from the room in order that the screen might appear of satisfactory brightness. With improvements in the projection apparatus and in the quality of the photographic materials, the brightness of the picture itself has been increased until it is of relatively high intensity. Following this, there has been some increase in the illumination of the interior of the theatre. The higher screen brightness naturally permits more interior illumination without seriously interfering with the picture.

The desirability of comfortably lighting the theatre is at once apparent provided it can be done without loss of quality in the picture. It is hardly necessary to enumerate the objections to the use of poorly lighted theatres. The difficulty encountered by persons entering the theatre in finding their way to unoccupied seats, and the strain placed upon the eyes by the sudden transition from the dark interior to the brightly lighted exterior when leaving, are familiar to everyone. Furthermore, in a poorly lighted theatre, it is quite impossible for the management to supervise adequately the conduct of individuals: a fact which has led to no little criticism of the motion picture theatre. More serious than any of these, however, is the tax placed upon the eyes when viewing a bright screen in a dark theatre. The eyes become adjusted to brightness conditions just as a runner gets his second wind when his pace has become adjusted to his physical ability. The ideal condition for viewing the motion picture screen occurs when the eyes have become adapted to the average brightness of the screen. This is usually impossible since the screen fills only a small fraction of the whole field of view and the remainder of the field is very dark. Because of this, the eyes are forced to view a bright screen to which they can never become adapted. In other words, the eyes under the above conditions are in the same state of dis-ease as the runner before he gets his second wind, but in the case of the eyes the condition continues indefinitely. The remedy is, of course, to increase the illumination of the interior of the theatre. The first phase of the problem undertaken by the Kodak Research Laboratory was the determination of the conditions of interior illumination which would afford the maximum of comfort for the audience without impairing the quality of the picture.

In order ta make practical tests of illumination, a projection booth and a projection machine were installed in a room in the laboratory. A projection screen of an ordinary type was placed at one end of the room. The room was about forty-two feet long and the ceiling of the room was white, while the walls were a medium tone of buff. A lighting fixture was suspended from the ceiling from brackets in such a way that the position of the fixture in the room, the angle of inclination and the distance from the ceiling could be varied in almost every conceivable manner. The fixture itself was of the indirect type so arranged that the direct rays from the lamps could strike only on the ceiling and rear wall of the room. The electric current in the arc of the projection machine was adjusted so that the brightness of the screen with the machine running, but without a film was 20 apparent foot-candles* which is slightly higher than an average brightness as measured in a number of motion picture theatres.

With conditions established which were similar to those in a motion picture theatre, the research laboratory made many trials to determine the most suitable lighting arrangement. The number of lights in the fixture and the position of the fixture in the room were altered in every way possible. At last, a condition was found where the illumination seemed to be better than any other. The general room illumination was such that a person entering the room from the bright sunshine could see immediately all details of furniture about the room and after a period of not more than one or two minutes, could read ordinary printed matter. Indeed, the facility with which print could be read would make it entirely feasible to sell advertising space on programs.

To be sure that the quality of the picture was not impaired by this scheme of lighting, several persons experienced in the judging of the photographic quality were asked to express their opinions. These observers were unanimous in the decision that, not only was the photographic quality of the picture fully as good, but that the effect was more pleasing and resulted in greater visual comfort. An important point noted was that much less shock was experienced by the eyes when the screen brightness was suddenly changed by the appearance of a title, and further, that the slight flicker due to a lack of precise shutter adjustment was less noticeable. On the whole, the arrangement was considered satisfactory by all the spectators.

Having found what seemed to be the best lighting conditions, the illumination was measured at many different points in the room. This can be done by means of a small portable instrument which can be used to measure the illumination at as many different places as desired. From the values obtained, an illumination engineer is able to duplicate this condition in any theatre. Obviously, specific instructions for theatre lighting cannot be laid down because every theatre is more or less a problem in itself. Such factors as the size, the architectural details, use of cornices and arches, the reflecting power of various ceiling and wall surfaces have to be taken into any computation. Certain decorative schemes, especially of ceiling, may also have to be worked out in order to make the lighting most effective. Since the lamps must in general be placed close to the ceiling, certain regions require a low reflecting power and others a high reflecting power. All of these factors may be taken into account, however, and with close co-operation between the lighting engineer and the designer of the decorative scheme, a highly satisfactory arrangement may be chosen.

To show the improvement which might be brought about in a theatre in which the lighting system was already installed, the Kodak experts designed a scheme of illumination for a small theatre used for the exhibition of motion pictures. The results obtained in the experimental room were made the basis of the new calculations. The details were worked out to give very nearly the same amount of general illumination as the experimental room. In this case also, the results were found to be satisfactory and the general effect more pleasing with less strain on the eyes. The general conclusion which can be drawn from these experiments is that a relatively large amount of general illumination may exist in a motion picture theatre without interfering with the projected picture provided the illumination is properly distributed.

Some observations were made during the course of the experiments which will probably upset some of the existing conventions and increase the comfort of the motion picture

*Just as the candle power is the unit of light intensity, the foot-candle is the unit of the illumination produced. Thus, a 16 candle-power lamp one foot away from the screen would produce an illumination of 16 foot-candles. A 32 candle-power lamp would produce an illumination of 32 foot-candles. By the 20-ft. candles given above is meant that the light coming from the projection machine illuminates the screen to the same brightness as a 20 candle-power lamp would illuminate a small portion of the screen placed one foot away from the lamp.

The instrument used in this work was a Macbeth Illuminometer made by the Leeds & Northrup Company, Philadelphia, Pa. It is essentially a portable photometer which is calibrated to measure illumination. In use, an opal glass test plate is placed at the point where the illumination is to be measured. The instrument is then pointed at the test plate and by changing the position of a small incandescent lamp in the instrument, a balance in intensity is secured between the light from the test plate and the light from the lamp. The illumination can then be read directly in foot-candles on the scale of the instrument.

patrons. For instance, the black velvet frame which frequently surrounds the screen is found undesirable and a neutral gray is suggested in its place. The reason is simple. Suppose the illumination of the strongest highlight of the picture is 10 foot candles. Under these conditions the brightness of the black velvet frame would be found to be about 0.001 foot-candles. This makes the ratio of the two or the brightness contrast equal to 1 to 10,000. This contrast is beyond the power of the eye to record and results again in overtaxing the process of adaptation. By using a material with a higher reflecting power than black velvet, the contrast between the screen and the frame may be brought within the range of the eye. If the brightness of the frame is raised to 0.02 foot-candles, the contrast between the strongest highlight in the picture and the frame is 1 to 500. Scientists say that this is about the limit of contrast which the eye can endure with comfort. In general, therefore, the black velvet frame should not be used but, in its place, a material which has a reflecting power sufficient to raise the apparent brightness of the frame to something like 0.02 foot-candles.

The selection of the material will depend upon a number of factors: the illumination of the theatre and the distance of the screen behind the front of the stage being the principal ones. For experimental purposes in the laboratory it was found that covering the black frame with white mill net was quite satisfactory. Such an expedient will not in general be found satisfactory in practice since this material will undoubtedly fail to harmonize with the elegance and richness of finish frequently found in the modern motion picture theatre. In many cases the screen area is surrounded by drapings of silk, velvet, or other fabrics and in such cases it is suggested that a fabric harmonizing with the general decorative scheme be used as a draping immediately around the screen area, the color that will give a satisfactory result being such as in ordinary terminology is referred to as a rather dark gray. A very pleasing result was obtained in an experimental installation by the use of a screen frame covered with a warm-grey burlap such as is used for wall coverings. In case the decorative scheme is carried out not by the use of fabrics but by the use of painted surfaces, the frame should be made by use of a rather dark gray paint. Of course, it should be understood that in case a true gray does not harmonize well with the decorative scheme of the interior some rather dark color tone (including colors usually referred to as warm or cool grays) may be used with advantage. In any event, small samples of fabric or small panels painted with various colors should be tried by placing them temporarily in position near the screen and the final choice made when material or paint is found having a reflecting power such as to make the frame appear of the correct brightness.

For similar reasons, no area of the interior of the theatre visible from any seat in the audience except the picture itself should have an apparent brightness of more than 2.5 to 3.0 foot-candles. This applies to the walls near a lamp, to the lamp itself it is not concealed, to any diffusing globes or fixtures used, and in general to any part of the interior of the theatre. For example, a sheet of white paper illuminated by a 25-watt lamp at a distance of one foot, has an apparent brightness of about 20-foot-candles. A sheet of music illuminated in this way, if visible from the audience, becomes a glare spot and may cause great discomfort. Arrangements should therefore be made which, while providing adequate illumination for the musicians, will prevent the illuminated sheets from being visible to the audience. Lights under a balcony are particularly bad and should be used only with a properly designed indirect lighting system. Considerable attention should be paid to the character and position of exit signs. While it is necessary to make such signs very conspicuous, this can be accomplished without making them so brilliant as to become disagreeable glare spots.

The use of a projection screen set well back from the stage and shielded to a great extent from light reflected from the walls and ceiling would probably permit of even greater values of the general interior illumination than used in the tests performed by the laboratory. The results obtained in the tests indicate that the illumination should be about 0.1 foot-candles on the table plane  near the front of the theatre and increase gradually to about 0.2 foot-candles near the back of the theatre.

It is suggested that if the lighting of the vestibule, lobby and foyer be graded so that the transition from the sun-light to the interior of the theatre is made gradual, the shock to the eyes on entering and leaving the theatre will be diminished. If properly designed, it is possible that the time necessary for the adaptation of the eyes to the interior brightness when entering the theatre will be consumed in passing into the theatre so that ordinary print may be read at once. In any case, it would be unnecessary to equip the ushers with flashlights as is often done at present. A moving light of this sort is very annoying, especially to persons sitting close to the aisle.

Theatre illuminating plan showing one satisfactory method of scientific illumination

The present high efficiency tungsten lam which are almost universally employed for t atre illumination give an effect which is rat harsh and excessively brilliant. This may overcome by choosing a color scheme for interior, which uses warm tones. Another re edy is to dip the lamps in colored lacquer. formula below gives a very pleasing amber co which is quite satisfactory. Other dye a terials may be used when the amber color d not harmonize with the general color sche of the interior of the theatre.

FORMULA FOR DIPPING LAMPS

4½ ounces	Sandarac (Powdered)
½ ounce	Venice Turpentine
58 grains	Metanil Yellow No. 195 (National Aniline Co., Buffalo, N. Y.)
½ fluid ounce	Lavender Oil (Garden)
26½ fluid ounces	Denatured Alcohol

In figure (I) is shown a possible arrang ment of the lighting in a theatre which is thought would be very satisfactory. T plan is presented as one way of handling t problem and many others may be worked o The scheme is designed to duplicate as nea as possible the results obtained in the laborato and any scheme which will do this would wo equally well. The ceiling, which consists four arches, is illuminated by lamps concea in the fixtures as indicated. The total can power of the lamps in each fixture is in cated by such expressions as i = 1x, i = etc. Without knowing the size of the theat it is quite impossible to specify the exact amou of light to be used. The symbols mean th four times as much candle-power should used at the fixture marked 1 = 4x as at the c marked i = 1x. Thus, if the size of the thea made it necessary to use 100 candle-power i = 1x, we should have to use4 x 100 or candlepower at i = 4x. This will give an illu nation which is more intense at the back of t theatre and which gradually becomes less ward the front.

Since the lamps must be placed comparativ close to the ceiling, it would be necessary order to obtain a uniform ceiling brightn to arrange the decorative scheme so that region marked B would have a relatively l reflecting power while that marked A shou have a high reflecting power. In general, is desirable to use a material of low reflecti power near the lighting fixtures in order cut down the brightness to a point where will not exceed 3.0 foot-candles.

Near the floor of the theatre in the figu will be found numbers indicating approximat the values of the illumination of those poin The expression, E = 0.10 means that the illu nation on the table plane at that point shou be about 0.10 foot-candles. The arrangem of the fixtures is such that with the cand power in each fixture indicated, the illuminat at the table plane will be correct. No atten is made here to work out the details of interior illumination and decoration. They pend so much upon the size of the theatre t each case must be considered separately. It only desired to show the importance of proj interior illumination for motion picture t atres and to indicate the results that may obtained by co-operation between the desig and the lighting engineer, making use of results obtained in the research laborato "The Motion Picture Theatre and Its Inter Illumination," prepared by the Eastman Kod Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Proper Lens Selection Necessary for Good Entertainment

Results of Tests Described—Choosing the Focal Length

In these days of keenest rivalry among oving picture theatres no detail can well overlooked by the discriminating vner or operator in the strife for public vor. And one of the first of such de- ils to demand consideration is lens uipment.

To regard the projection lens as a mere tail, however, is to minimize its im- rtance. Of all the elements combining make for successful entertainment of is sort, the projection lens is really sic representing the underlying princi- e of the entire operation.

Theatre location, capacity, ventilation, ysical conveniences, popular films—all e important considerations. But with- t a lens there can be no pictures on the reen; consequently, without a satisfac- ry lens there can be no satisfactory pic- res, and satisfactory pictures are e first essential of sustained pop- arity with the movie-going public. ith the development of the busi- ss to a high-class quality plane, ogressive owners and operators ve come almost universally to preciate the truth of this, recog- zing more than ever before the portance of their optical equip- ent.

Feeling the resulting demand for mething distinctly better in this e, the Scientific Bureau of the ush & Lomb Optical Co. has ven the problem a great deal of udy for several years past. To ve brought out a lens of increased ameter and illumination would ve been a quick and compara- ely simple matter. But illumina- on was only one of the things ught, a lens was wanted which mbined all the elements of opti- lly high-grade projection.

The results of this research and perimental work are brought out the new Cinephor Lenses, which e claimed to be unequalled in the four g lens requisites-definition, flatness of eld, illumination and maximum contrast tween white and black, due to the su- erior correction. Because of this cor- ction these lenses can be brought to a arp definite focus.

These results have been attained by the o-ordination of formulas, material and orkmanship. By manufacturing their vn optical glass, the Bausch and Lomb o. state that they can more effectively ntrol its optical properties to meet the quirements of lens problems.

The lens consists of two combinations cells, mounted in a brass barrel. This rrel in turn is mounted in a spiral jacket ith 2¼-inch flange thread, adapting it to machines having a flange on the front of the mechanism such as the Nicholas Power, or furnished with a tube and dust collar to fit the lens clamp of machines like the Simplex.

Series I—Diameter (free aperture) 1 23/32 in. (43.5 mm.)

Series II—Diameter (free aperture) 2 7/16 in. (62 mm.)
Front view of Cinephor lenses, showing exact size of both series

The entire mounting is so constructed as to insure durability and absence of lost motion. The lens cells and the spiral jacket are finished in a handsome black lacquer, while the barrel is heavily nickeled.

Cinephor lenses are intended only for motion picture projection, being calculated to meet the special requirements of that class of work.

Two distinct series are offered, designed expressly for professional or theatre work. Both are marked by the same Cinephor standards, differing only in diameter and the focal lengths regularly supplied. They are regularly listed in a range of focal lengths sufficient to satisfy all ordinary projection needs.

The only diameter dimension of a projection lens, which is significant from the standpoint of illumination, is that of the free aperture. Any internal diaphragm or wide lens mount must reduce the illumination proportionately. Since some manufacturers give the outside diameter of their lenses only, both that dimension and the free aperture is given by the Bausch and Lomb Co.

Their Series I has an outside lens diameter of $2\frac{1}{32}$ in. (51.6mm), with a free aperture of $1\frac{23}{32}$ in. (43.5 mm), which is the geratest diameter that will work through the aperture opening on machines having the focusing mount attached to the front of the head. It is listed fifteen different focal lengths, ranging in ¼-inch steps from 4 to 7 inches, inclusive, and in ½-inch steps to 8 inches. This series will prove eminently satisfactory for all-round motion picture purposes under any ordinary theatre conditions.

The Series II has an outside lens diameter of $2\frac{23}{32}$ in. (69.3 mm), with a free aperture of $2\frac{7}{16}$ in. (62 mm), and is regularly listed in ten focal lengths, ranging in ¼-inch steps from 5¾ to 7 inches and in ½-inch steps to 9 inches. They are offered in the longer focal lengths only, being particularly applicable and unequalled for work at long projection distances, and should always be used with machines equipped with Mazda lamps.

SELECTING THE RIGHT FOCAL LENGTH

Upon this selection depends the size of the image on the screen. Not the lens mounting, not even the diameter of the lens itself, but its equivalent focal length and distance from the screen determine the size of the image.

At a given distance the greater the focal length the smaller will be the image. Shorter focal lengths, therefore will give large images. It is a mistake to select lenses of such short focal length that the magnification will be great enough to sacrifice much of the definition and perspective when the observer is near the screen. Brilliant pictures of medium size are far more satisfactory.

The projection distance must be measured from the lens to the screen and should be measured on a line directly from the lens to the center of the screen.

Evansville House Embodies Several Unusual Features

New Victory Theatre Has Novel Lighting and Cooling Systems

Another million dollar link has been added to the chain of picture palaces in Indiana which are operated by the Consolidated Realty and Theatre Corporation, of which A. F. Brentlinger is vice president and general manager. This is the Victory of Evansville, Ind., one of the finest houses of the middle west, which was recently opened.

A. F. Brentlinger, general manager of the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corp., who opened the Victory, the fifteenth theatre to be operated by Mr. Brentlinger

The local policy of the theatre will be in charge of B. W. Brentlinger, who is a son of the general manager of the Consolidated organization, and who has been working with him since he first started in the picture industry. The Evansville house will be a home of First National attractions. The theatre will be run on a vaudeville-motion picture program.

First impressions caused by the Victory is its lighting. Its large signs can be seen for a great distance from the theatre. As the lobby is entered a massive linotile stairway, leading into the foyer is seen. The inside of the theatre is gorgeous, still being subdued and artistic. Finished in royal blue, gold and ivory, the theatre has the restful effect. Scroll work has been judiciously used on the stage arcade and balcony edges.

The floor, made of concrete, has heavy soft carpeting over the aisles. The seats are upholstered in dull blue leather. On either side of the front exits are corrugated pillars of ecru, with marble bases.

Several features in the construction of the Victory are the seating and lighting systems. There are no box seats in the house, the balcony extends well forward, coming as close to the screen as possible. The only lights on the side walls are those marking exits. The lighting system, indirect, is arranged in such a manner that all the light comes to the house from the ceiling and from two boxes at the side of the stage. Fourteen lights in these boxes, when covered with shades in the color scheme of the house, will furnish light fo the entire space in front of the balcon extension. The ceiling of the theatre

Proper Lens Selection

The machine itself should be stationed as squarely at right angles to the screen as possible; otherwise a distorted or key-stone-shaped picture will be produced, which cannot be corrected by any combination of lenses.

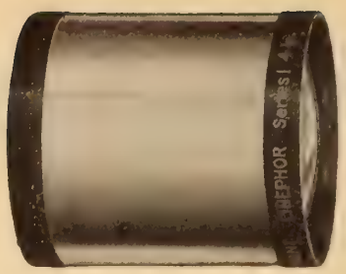
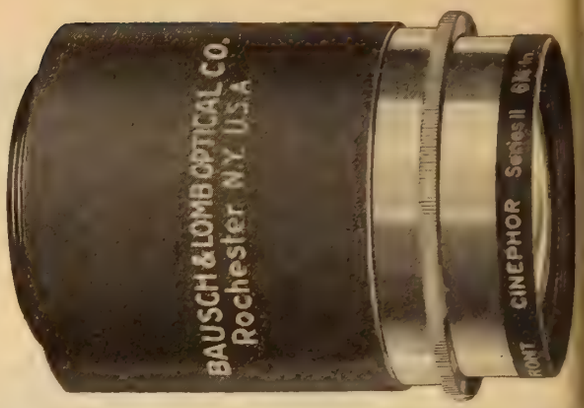
The size of image can be determined by multiplying the difference between the distance from lens to screen and the focal length of the objective, by the width of the aperture plate, and dividing the product by the focal length.



Series I—Cinephor lens in barrel only



Series II—Cinephor lens in spiral jacket

Let I be the projection distance, 100 ft. (1200 inches); s, one side of the film picture aperture; f, the focal length of the lens, 8 inches; then we have the formula (in which d is the size of the image)

$$d = s\frac{(f-f}{f}$$

Substituting for the letters their known values, we have

$$d = \frac{0.906\ (1200-8)}{8}$$

$$= 135 \text{ inches} = 11 \text{ ft. } 3 \text{ inches}$$

Focal Length: For determining this factor multiply the width of film aperture by the distance from lens to screen and divide the product by the sum of the width of the image and the width of the film aperture.

Thus we have the formula,

$$f = \frac{s \times I}{d + s},$$ and substituting their values as before,

$$f = \frac{0.906 + 1200}{135 + 0.906} = 8 \text{ inches.}$$

Specific grinding tools and test glasses have been developed for the focal lengths given in the table, and it is recommended the screen margins be adapted to suit a standard focal length. Only a slight reduction in the size of picture or an increase in the width of screen margin is necessary if a standard focal length next longer than that called for in calculation under the formula is selected.

The Elliot Theatre at Elliot, Pa., has been purchased by Isadore Mandelblatt, formerly the owner of the Castle theatre at McKees Rocks. The house has been completely remodeled and was reopened recently.—Wheeler.

Two More for Brooklyn

Two theatres in Brooklyn are being completed by M. Bleerdes, 773 Willoughby Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. The State, at DeKalb and Franklin Avenues, will have a seating capacity of 1,300. The other house, the Ace, will have a seating capacity of 1,200 and a roof garden of 1,000 capacity. A feature of the roof garden of the latter theatre will be an arrangement to produce the proper darkness so that it will not be necessary to wait until dark, thus doing away with daylight saving losses. Neither of the theatres are equipped yet.

Universal Film Company Leases Broadway House; Will Have Model Presentations

"No Woman Knows," Tod Browning's Universal-Jewel production of Edna Ferber's novel, "Fanny Herself," is to have a Broadway run, beginning September 4, in the Central Theatre, Broadway and Forty-seventh street, which has been leased by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

A Broadway run is thus assured not only for "No Woman Knows," but also for "Foolish Wives," the million-and-a-half-dollar von Stroheim production, now nearing completion at Universal City.

In taking over the Central, Universal announces a unique and novel policy for the operation of that house.

Each picture that plays the Broadway house will be supplied with exploitation and a presentation arranged and prepared by experts of the Universal exploitation department, so devised that the same effects can be adapted to the uses of every exhibitor who books the picture. No attempt will be made to give these pictures an over-lavish presentation or to accompany them by exploitation that cannot be carried out by the average exhibitor. The Central presentation will be a model that every exhibitor can follow. It will be the exploitation criterion for all of Universal's productions.

The Central will be a moving picture theatre in all respects and it will be a continuous performance house. A costly organ is being installed and extensive alterations and decorations are under way, including the construction of a box office at the front of the lobby. There will be no reserved seats.

Up-to-Date Equipment

The latest and most up-to-date moving picture theatre equipment is being installed and every attempt is being made to make the theatre a model of its kind.

One of the unique features of the presentations in the Central will be the elimination of interludes and too-elaborate musical programs. The pictures will be accompanied by appropriate orchestral and organ music, but there will be no attempt to feature the musical part of the program.

Besides being a Broadway first run house for Universal, the theatre also will be considered as a presentation example for all Universal exhibitors.

Universal's policy as to this is best expressed in the words of E. H. Goldstein, Assistant to Mr. Laemmle. "We are going to concentrate on 100 per cent. screen entertainment. All else will be contributory to that."

Different Uses of the Five Types o Projection Machines

A Lecture by Don Carlos Ellis at Columbia University

"There are five general types of motion picture projectors, and the kind you want depends upon the use to which you wish to put it," said Don Carlos Ellis in one of his lectures to principals and teachers attending the course in Educational Motion Pictures at the Summer Session of Columbia University, which, by the way, is the first course of the kind ever given. Mr. Ellis is general manager of National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc., and has had a large experience in the field of educational films.

"What kind of projector shall I buy? is," said Mr. Ellis, "a question that hundreds of school principals, presidents of granges, clubs, church and business organizations, Chambers of Commerce, Mothers' Clubs, chairmen of boards of education, heads of big industrial departments and travelling salesmen are asking themselves, now that the motion picture is coming into its own as an instructional and informational agency.

"The five general types of projectors range from the big professional machine used in all the motion picture theatres to the new 'baby' projector 'just out' and intended primarily for home use.

"The first of the five general types is the big professional machine, ranging in price from $500 upward, and for which a licensed operator and fireproof booth are required. There are five or six well known makes on the market. This type is suitable for a large auditorium and a number of schools have installed them.

"The semi-professionals belong to the second group. They range in price from $265 to $300. Some makes of this type have a stereopticon, which is frequently an advantage in classroom work where the use of films and slides are combined. The semi-professional is a useful type for general school work where it is to be used in different classrooms. It can be taken apart and put together again without difficulty. The maximum throw is 100 feet, which is much longer than the ordinary classroom. It is a small edition of the professional machine and do not require the expert mechanical skill needed for the maintenance operation of the professional type.

"The most popular projector is probably the third type, the portable or suitcase variety, of which there are a number of makes on the market, ranging in price up to $300. Where the projector is to be moved frequently from room to room, building to building or town to town, the suitcase type will prove most desirable. It is used by county agents, travelling salesmen, and for clubs and churches and schools when it is not intended to remain in one place long.

"The suitcase model lacks some of the advantages of the larger machines. It shows a smaller picture, the throw is less, the lighting is not as strong, the slighting being in direct ratio to the distance—the farther the machine is from the screen the larger the picture, but the more diffused the light and the less clear and sharp the picture. The wear on the film and the likelihood of trouble is also greater in most examples of this type of machine, owing to a double loop used in threading the machine.

Tells How He Is Able to Manage Theatre Efficiently

Keeps Personal Supervision Over House by Phone System

JOHN SMITH was manager of the most popular motion picture theatre in his vicinity and had just been complimented on the efficient management of his institution. "Your entire house seems to be conducted as though every department received your most careful and personal supervision," said his friend.

Mr. Smith, who is one of the most progressive theatre managers in his section, answered smilingly, "I have been in the motion picture theatre business since its earliest days. I have not only applied all the knowledge gained by these years of experience to the management of this theatre, but have also tried to originate ideas of my own that would tend to place my theatre in a class by itself. Consequently I have this house equipped with every device possible to assist me toward this end. For instance, at my elbow is a private telephone. The various push buttons on this instrument give me instantaneous connection to all parts of the house. It takes about a half a second to reach the ticket seller, the orchestra leader, back of stage, electrician and numerous other points in the house. You of course realize what a saving of time it means to me and what an aid it is to my efficient management to be able to quickly call and talk to all these parties. Likewise, whenever a question arises at any point in the house requiring my personal attention, I can be reached just as quickly by telephone from any point in the theatre.

"The ticket taker, who likewise has a telephone in close proximity to his station, is able to instantly connect with any point in the house. Naturally all kinds of questions arise that he must dispose of, but being unable to leave his post, it would be impossible to do so without the aid of the telephone. I recall a case recently where a robbery of the box office was prevented due to the quick action of the ticket taker in calling for help. Being at the door, partially concealed from view, and yet having the entire front of the house within his range of vision, he was able to do this without the hold-up men knowing that help was being called for over the phone.

"Very often the ticket seller needs supplies of either tickets or change. She calls the proper party over the phone and without the necessity of holding up a line of people who are waiting to buy tickets gets exactly what she needs promptly.

"I almost overlooked one of the main features of my phone system. The orchestra leader and the picture machine operator must keep in constant touch with each other about changes in acts, reducing or increasing the speed of the picture and many other matters. This is taken care of in a most admirable manner over the house phone. The picture machine operator and the orchestra leader must communicate back and forth frequently with the electrician, who is located back of the stage. Frequently, too, the electrician must be reached from various parts of the house to make emergency repair This is taken care of perfectly over th phone. The ushers, too, keep in touc with the ticket taker to keep him poste on the available number of seats. Som times it happens that a patron gets sic or meets with an accident, and in cases o this kind the phone can be utilized t quickly call for help.

"I could go on for an hour and tell o hundreds of other uses my house phone put to, but what I have just said certainl must impress you that a great deal o confusion would result without this phon system.

"The system that I have in service wa made by the S. H. Couch Company, wh specialize in this line of work. They hav offices in Boston, Chicago and San Fran cisco, and I believe in addition theret have trade representations in most ever city. The system is simple to operat reliable, and I think cannot be improve upon. I made no mistake in buying thi outfit, and I believe no other motion pic ture theatre manager would make a mis take in doing as I have done. Its valu cannot be figured in dollars and cent Besides aiding us all in the efficient han dling of the routine work of this theatr it saves my time and that of a number o other high-priced employees, and I don know how I could possibly do my wor if I were to be deprived of its use."

Shifting of Amusement Center in New York Seen by Owners of Tivoli Theatre

Laurence S. Bolognino Carries Out Pioneer Idea by Erecting His House at Fiftieth Street

Many years ago when the amusement center in New York was situated far below Fourteenth street, the community was startled when pioneers in the industry began their move uptown. Fourteenth street, Twenty-third street and Thirty-fourth street followed in rapid succession as the amusement centers of a large and rapidly growing community. Finally even the latter street was deserted and Forty-second street, with its blaze of electric signs, junction of car lines and thunder of traffic, succeeded to popular favor. In the meantime, the demand for amusements so far exceeded the available supply of plots on the Great White Way that theatres sprang up on almost every side street around this new centre.

Even nowadays, however, there are pioneers in the industry—broad-visioned men—who can see deep into the future and its possibilities, and whose achievements will be expressed in new monuments of pleasure erected on the frontiers of what we, in this generation, firmly believe to be the ultimate in the amusement activities in our city. Foremost among these men stands Laurence S. Bolognino, who, with his directors in the Consolidated, completed the erection of the new Tivoli theatre, on the northwest corner of Eighth Avenue and 50th Street. This operation involved the remodeling of six store and apartment buildings of a very old-fashioned type into up-to-date stores and small apartments with all the most modern improvements. These buildings stand on the Eighth Avenue side and form a most imposing entrance to the theatre proper, which is situated directly behind, with exits on the 50th Street side.

The front of the theatre building is designed in a free adaptation of Frenc Renaissance with sgraffitto decorations i various panels. The design is enhance by means of an imposing open balcon flanked on both sides with Ionic column and all parts of this front are built in terr cotta, with a rich limestone effect. Th balance of the Eighth Avenue front of th building is faced with pressed brick, de signed in Colonial feeling, all of whic has been well studied by the architects t make harmonious combination with th terra cotta theatre front.

The interior of the theatre is designe in Italian Renaissance of imposing propor tions and unusually fine detail in its orna mental parts. The stairway to the balcon will be in marble, and in other respect the interior will be finished with the fines and most substantial materials.

In addition to the theatre just describe a beautiful summer garden has been situ ated on the roof and has been provide with novel features of subdued lighting The screen and the roof have an illum nated arcade on either side, forming a artistic setting for the pictures. The roo

Arco Wand Truck Vacuum Cleaner

Hundreds of small and large theatres adopted ARCO WAND TRUCK VACUUM CLEANERS with a very noticeable saving in time, labor and cost.

Many of these theatres were already equipped with permanent vacuum cleaning systems, but ARCO WAND TRUCKS used so much less current and were so convenient to handle that the permanent cleaning system has been abandoned.

Many Changes in New York Houses

There has been an unusually large number of changes in ownership of theatres in western New York recently. In Buffalo, H. Hareski of Detroit has purchased the Majestic theatre on East Ferry street from J. D. Parmalee. B. Vohwinkle, proprietor of the Oriole, Genesee street, has taken over the Victor at 1584 Genesee street. Harry Green has sold the Temple theatre on William street and will devote all his time to the Premier, a neighborhood house at Main street and Leroy avenue, which he recently acquired. George C. Witzel is the new owner of the Temple. The Art theatre, 1224 Sycamore street, has been sold to C. Boganiaski.

Many changes have also taken place in the towns in the Buffalo territory. E. C. Cridler has sold the Opera House in Dansville to the company which controls the Star theatre in the same town, and which is managed by Bob Wagner, former manager of the Educational Exchange in Buffalo. E. C. Berkey has sold his Elite theatre in Niagara Falls to Robert Earle and Albert Heintzmann. The Majestic and Mozart theatres in Elmira have passed into the hands of Mr. Bernstein, who controls a chain of theatres in Albany. Joe Carter formerly controlled the Majestic and Mrs. Louise Jackson owned the Mozart. Al Wrench has sold the Granite theatre, Newark, N. Y., to A. E. Read.

Harry Russel, of Sherman, has purchased the Temple and Family theatres in Albion, N. Y., from Harold Dygert. Fred M. Zimmerman, president of Nu-Art Pictures, Inc., Buffalo, opened his remodeled theatre in North Tonawanda, N. Y. The house, which was formerly named the Oliver, is now the Avondale. Frank Aprile, of the Rex theatre, Geneseo, has purchased the Opera House in Oakfield. L. G. Brady, formerly of the Temple theatre, Geneva, has opened the Smith Opera House in the same town with pictures. William Tischkoff, of the Murray and Empress theatres, Rochester, has taken over the Palace in Rochester. Rousney & Downs have opened the Masonic Hall in Ontario.—Taylor.

Opens at Bridgeport

The Paramount theater, J. C. Lund's new motion picture house, on Park avenue, near South, Bridgeport, Conn., opened last week. The theatre is a large and well-built brick building, with interior decorations of Harding blue, which produce an attractive effect. The side walls are decorated with scenic pictures by artist-decorators, and an elaborate indirect lighting system is a feature. Well-appointed retiring rooms for men and women and seven exits are among the modern equipment of the house. Mr. Lund has been 15 years in the motion picture field, and formerly was proprietor of the South End theatre in Bridgeport. His plans are to exhibit only the first-class releases of Paramount pictures, these being shown exclusively in the house and after which it is named.—Agard.

Wait Three Hours for House to Open

When you can keep a crowd waiting for your show until 10.30, you can bank on it that town is hungry for amusement. This is what actually happened at the opening of the Palms theatre, New Port Richey, Florida. The Palms is the latest addition to the roster of Florida motion picture theatres. The house was built by Preetorius & Jackson, who will also operate it.

New Port Richey is a beautiful little city on the west coast of Florida. The population is a little under a thousand, but this is more than doubled in the winter months, when the tourist, of all varieties, come to get away from the frozen North.

Preetorius & Jackson gave the city a most attractive playhouse, with a capacity of about 400, nicely equipped for the comfort of their patrons, and had everything ready for the grand opening on Saturday, August 27. The crowd came and packed the theatre to capacity. The show was advertised to start at 7.30 p. m., and the operator stood by ready to turn on the switch of the motor at the word "Go," when the juice gave out.

"A break in the flywheel" was the reason given by the electric company, and the big crowd waited. There was music and speeches, and still they waited. Now, it is a long wait from 7.30 to 10.30, but as Mr. Preetorius said: "The crowd was with us from start to finish."

At 10.30 the lights came up, the crowd cheered, the show was on, and most all remained for the finish, which was at five minutes after midnight.—Leslie.

Michigan's Mecca Theatre Simplexized

The Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company, exclusive distributors of Simplex Projectors for the State of Michigan announce the opening of the New Mecca Theatre, Midland, Michigan on August 9th, with the big Universal feature "Reputation." William Poulas, a successful confectioner in the above-named city, is the owner of this new house. Marie Fitzgibbons will act as house manager.

L. J. Pierce and R. J. Hayden, projectionists, will have charge of two Type "S" Simplex Projectors equipped with Snaplite lenses, projecting a fourteen-and-a-half foot picture at seventy-five feet on a Minusa Screen.

A week before the house opened, H. G. Brewer, the enterprising traveling sales representative of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Co., arranged with Mr. Poulas to use one of the large show-windows in his confectionery store for displaying the Simplex Projectors, which caused much favorable comment among the inhabitants of the town.

A week later, Brewer returned to personally supervise the installation of the equipment which speaks well for the service the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company renders its customers, for Brewer has had many years experience as a projectionist in leading Detroit theatres and no one is better qualified for such work than he.

is enclosed with picturesque pressed brick piers, separated with stucco faced panels, simulating a Colonial Garden effect.

The theatre and roof garden are entered from Eighth Avenue through a lobby two stories high, with vaulted ceiling. Elevator and stairs to the roof garden open into this same wide lobby.

As a further inducement to creating extensive patronage, the owners and architects devoted considerable attention to the question of heating, ventilating and cooling this theatre, and, after thorough investigation of various schemes, finally decided on a combination system of heating, ventilating and cooling designed and installed by the Typhoon Fan Company. Novel in design and installation, and particularly happy in the results achieved, this installation is worthy of description in detail. The system as finally approved by the architects utilizes two 16-ft. single fans in connection with large heating stacks for heating the theatre. The fa on the east side of the auditorium deliver pure heated air through a grille in th ceiling and the fan at the west side de livers a similar quantity through orna mental grilles at the side of the stage, thu insuring thorough distribution of th heated air throughout the auditorium Very few direct radiators are necessar when this scheme is used, thus eliminatin one of the chief obstacles to artistic in teriors so much desired by architect handling this particular class of building

For summer cooling there has bee installed additional 15-ft. Typhoon singl fans, two of which are set in close prox imity to the heating fans and the other tw directly over the balcony, where thei cooling and refreshing breezes will swee even the less expensive seats in torri weather.

A portion of the air delivered to th auditorium will be used for cooling an ventilating the mezzanine, and positive re sults in this direction are insured by th installation of another 16-ft. fan locate in the space over the mezzanine ceiling the air being drawn from the orchestra t the mezzanine and passing out through grille in the mezzanine ceiling.

"Stealin' Home"

(Century Comedy—Two Reels)

ALF GOULDING who wrote and directed this comedy has used the "office boy-who--fired-for-sneaking-to-the-ball-game" formula s the germ for an idea. It is not very amusing, here being quite a few dull spots since the fun not entirely spontaneous. In arriving at the all park, the lad is mistaken for the pitcher nd advised to get in there on the rubber. The gh spots are found in his total ignorance of ne game. He runs to third instead of first, though he seems to have some knowledge of ne art of sliding home in safety. However, he ins the girl by pulling a Frank Merriwell—tching a ball while standing on his head. hen he stumbled onto the fact that first base the legitimate way around he should make hefty ball player. The comedy should get by ith those audiences who are not too dis-riminate.—LAURENCE REID.

"No Clothes to Guide Him"

(Universal—Star Comedy—One Reel)

THIS little domestic comedy features Bert Roach, who is doubling in brass these ays, fluttering from straight legitimate parts slapstick with the versatility of a minstrel. s the title indicates the piece revolves around ert being deprived of his wardrobe when editors clean him out. He resorts to the othes-line and steals a policeman's uniform which little remains. He is jailed for im-ersonating an officer and in the station an tercation follows between him and his closest val for the hand of Mary. The situation is illy explained and Egbert (Mr. Roach) is eed while J. Campbell Pancake languishes be-nd the bars. The comedy is conventional but rves in providing a short filler. Mary Philbin akes a pretty heroine.—LAURENCE REID.

"Roaring Waters"

(Universal-Western—Two Reels)

THE Northwest Mounted pattern is used for this two-reel western. Which is to say that e figure in the red-coat gets his man. The ea is so orthodox that one may be excused r not anticipating the element of surprise. he villain is a rum-runner posing as a fur ader. He lures the factor's daughter by means of a forged note, the girl believing that the intrepid officer is to meet her so that they might elope. The red-coated hero learns of the plan and starts in pursuit—and his chase offers a mild thrill because of the danger attached to the scene in which the girl and the rum-runner are being carried toward the falls. The paddle breaks and they are helpless in their canoe. However, the hero rescues them by means of a lasso, and the villain is arrested. The picture follows the conventional line of action and the interest may be found in the rugged back-grounds and the adequate acting of George Larkin, Josephine Hill and Albert J. Smith as hero, heroine, and heavy, respectively.—LAU-RENCE REID.

"The Danger Man"

(Universal-Jack Perrin—Two Reels)

JACK PERRIN is given good opportunity to display his ability as a fighter and manipula-tor of the old six shooter in this two reeler. Outside of these qualities the picture is of the ordinary variety, having one of those melo-dramatic plots which sticks out here and there with dramatic moments, and then dwindles down to scheming and planning, with little ac-tion.

The star engages in two good fights which are rather thrilling, puts the bad men to route and has a good entrance in the closing scenes, when he saves the heroine and her father from the "gang."

When the young "cowboy" editor decides to clean up the saloons and dance halls in a west-ern town he finds that there is much opposi-tion to his plans from the rough element.

He is frustrated in all his plans until the 'gals" father, who is a member of the gang, hearing of the young editor's honesty of pur-pose, decides to "go straight" and help him.

The picture will excite in places.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Biology—the Microscope and Its Use"

(Nat'l Non Theatrical Motion Pictures—One Reel)

HERE'S something for the student—and he'll have to be somethng of a student to retain his interest while this reel is in progress.

Botany under the microscope is the subject and it must be said that better films on this treatise have never been taken.

Although the film probably was produced for the benefit of schools and colleges, it could be shown to the intelligent patrons and appreciated. —FRANK LEONARD.

"Two Faces West"

(Hallroom Boy Comedy—Federated Film Exchanges, Inc.)

RAPID fire, clever gags makes this comedy a credit to the independent market. It is probably one of the best Hallrooms. Percy and Ferdie are again down-and-outers, this time in the West. They have a quarter between them and in order to buy one table d'hote meal, they manage to squeeze inside of one pair of trou-sers, belonging, of course, to a very corpulent gentleman who is exercising in the old swimmin' hole. Some of the eating scenes which follow are the type of comedy which will annoy, if not disgust some, but please a great many others. The two boys find employment in the restaurant. Neatly cut broom straws serve for shredded wheat. There are other funny gags, and the picture ends with some good stuff in a hay field. The boys manage to avoid the pitch-fork and always pop up in a different hay-pile. The best thing about the comedy is that it keeps moving every second. Sid Smith does some circus tumbling. Length 2-reels.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

Movie Chats—Ninth Series

(Kineto Co. of America—Released through National Exchanges)

ENGLAND is the scene of a large part of this Movie Chat. It deals with the English dairies and shows first the milking, then the collecting, delivering and sterilizing of the milk. Girls, employed during the war, are still keep-ing up the work. The reel shows next a metal testing machine in a British institute and il-lustrates the twisting of steel and iron to test their strength. A variety of snails complete the reel. They are shown climbing and turning over. Quickening the action, the camera re-veals that a snail is a graceful moving animal despite the derision heaped upon it.—MAT-THEW A. TAYLOR.

"THE PRINCESS OF NEW YORK"
(Paramount)

Uninspired Story Offers Little Interest

COSMO HAMILTON has undoubtedly lifted a page from Mrs. E. D. N. Southworth and the other sisters of the "pot-boiler" school, for "The Princess of New York" resembles the orthodox, conventional plots in theme and treatment. There is nothing of suspense or surprise throughout the unfolding of the story, and the action is confined to much conversation and naive scenes having to do with intriguing an American heiress into matrimony. There is plenty of comedy material in the plot which might have been utilized in a satirical manner. Instead the sponsors have played the safe course—resorting as it were to hackneyed development.

One can guess the denouement from the introductory scene and the merest tyro attending the movies knows for a certainty that the Oxford undergraduate will win the girl because he stands for all the masculine virtues while the scheming fortune hunters will be forced to take the count. That is the plot in a nutshell. Since the picture is British made, there is no criticism to be found with the casting of the several roles. David Powell, who is featured, plays the hero in a quiet, restrained manner, a performance in perfect harmony with the Oxford atmosphere. He realizes that the financial obstacles are too great to be overcome and rather than bring the girl down to his level, attempts to efface himself from the scene. However, when his father informs him that the heiress is in the clutches of a group of fortune hunters, he jumps into the matrimonial arena and saves her from disgrace in the nick of time.

The main conflict centers around the efforts of the schemers to intrigue her into marriage. A wastrel son discovers his conscience and attempts to play square but the redemption of this figure is more or less glossed over. "The Princess of New York" is strictly society drama and it has been done so often on the screen that there is scarcely any interest left. When a rumor reaches the Londoners that the heroine's father has lost his fortune in speculation, those who attempted to intrigue her cast her aside and the Oxford man finds a legitimate reason for renewing his conquest. Many of the scenes are rather vague which causes the spectator to find the appeal in the rich settings and details of production. A little by-play revolves around a romantic scene in the woods with a motor car for background. The picture is of a higher average than its forerunners which have come from England. Even so it lacks substance to make it comparable with the Paramount product offered on this side of the water.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Another Paramount picture is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Princess of New York," a photoplay screened in England in which David Powell, a popular player, is featured. The story is by Cosmo Hamilton, who has contributed several highly interesting offerings to the screen and it deals with a young American heires who falls into the hands of schemers whose object is to intrigue her into matrimony and thus assure themselves of a comfortable fortune.

The girl meets with sundry adventures when she falls into the clutches of fortune hunters. Sir George Merstham is desirous that his son marry the girl and a net of intrigue is woven that she may find herself hopelessly entangled. But fortunately, Geoffrey Kingsward, a young Oxford undergraduate, comes to the rescue and saves her from the fortune hunters. It is a picture which radiates a deal of romance and charm and not a little dramatic adventure.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever have a fortune hunter for an acquaintance? Can you tell one when you are introduced to him? Helen Stanton couldn't and she found herself involved in a net of intrigue, the object of which was to force her into matrimony, before she found her ideal in a young Oxford man. This is the sum and substance of "The Princess of New York," the Paramount picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast headed by David Powell. It has long been established that many impoverished Englishmen who present themselves as gentlemen of landed estates and titles, are desirous of marrying rich American heiresses so that the family income may be increased. Come and see this fascinating and appealing picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture which carries an extremely convenient and familiar theme and it would be well to keep it under cover in all your exploitation. Simply stress that you are offering an appealing study in romance and intrigue which is seasoned with a dash of adventure and thrill. Play up that it is the latest British-made, Paramount picture which is fully up to the Paramount standard, and which features David Powell and beautiful Mary Glynne. Describe it as a charming excursion in the land of romance—that it offers glimpses of Oxford which are thoroughly appealing.

(Jewel-Universal)

Sure-Fire Entertainment in This Human Heart Drama

THERE is no question about this picture being one of the best sure-fire box-office bets of the season. In fact, any exhibitor who books it is certain to put up his S. R. O. sign because of its wealth of humanities, its fidelity to life, and the adherence to truth in its composition of scenes. Edna Ferber is exceptionally gifted in inspiring in the hearts of her readers a sympathy with her plots and characterization, and Tod Browning, who translated "Fanny Herself" for the screen, possesses enough imagination, observation and dramatic insight to make the most of any story which is given him for production. Thus the picture could not go wrong.

Some will compare this feature to "Humoresque" through the revelation of Jewish custom and character. If it lacks the palpitating heart-throb, it more than compensates through its stimulating effect and its power to conquer with its human incident and by-play. It is a picture of mother love and sister love—of the overwhelming sacrifice of two women to endure and die and suffer if need be in order that genius may have recognition. The ingratitude of the son and brother brings death to the mother, but the sister conquers her unselfish impulse to make the most of her unhappy life.

While this picture is pitched in a tragic key if one searches for the idealism attached, it is the marvelously human incident which offers the greatest appeal. Mr. Browning has been thoroughly painstaking in his attention to the most subtle detail. He has not failed in a single instance in revealing a wonderful insight into characterization. If he has erred at all it may be found in slightly stressing on the sentiment—an element which is not so much out of harmony if one considers the racial traits of the figures. The little family is shown with its hopes and anticipations. Every touch is humanized and made real with master strikes. The people live and play, love and suffer, and one catches each note because of the adept fashioning by the director. A little Wisconsin town provides the background for the earlier reels and a winter scene is highly realistic with its storm. Poignant is the scene when the mother dies, and the girl overwhelmed with grief because of her belief that she went forth to play instead of remaining at home. The picture develops a conflict when she goes to Chicago and the struggle begins when a philander attempts to assert his evil nature. Through infinite tact he succeeds in lifting her from her environment, for she still performs self-sacrifice for the weak brother. It is when the latter returns home and practises deceit that finally her heart rebels. She will live only for herself thereafter. The ending is rather abrupt, although it suffices in indicating the turn of events.

The titling is exceptionally good and worthy of mention in its harmony to the theme and characterization. And the acting is highly commendable. The types are perfect representations of what they pretend to be. Max Davidson, Snitz Edwards, E. A. Warren and Grace Marvin have the principal character roles and play them with depth and understanding. Mabel Julienne Scott enacts the sympathetic figure of Fanny with commendable poise and persuasion. The honors go to John Davidson for his interpretation of the ungrateful youth. The fire of genius is in his eyes, but faith is not in his heart, and he makes you feel these impressions through a sheer gift of expression. A picture of pathos kindled with the light of human understanding—that is "No Woman Knows."—Length, 10 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The amazing story of "Fanny Herself" which was written by Edna Ferber, one of the cleverest fictionists of the day, has been translated to the screen and will be the feature at the ———— next ———— for an indefinite engagement. Directed with infinite taste by Tod Browning, a director responsible for many fine screen successes, it glows with human life and vision. "No Woman Knows" is a slice of life and palpitates with humanity, pathos, sentiment, romance, disillusionment and self-sacrifice. It is crammed with genuine realities which sparkle at every turn of the picture. And it is wonderfully acted by a cast that has seemingly been chosen for its adaptability as well as cleverness. "No Woman Knows" boasts a company that includes among others, Mabel Julienne Scott, John Davidson, Max Davidson, Grace Marvin, Josef Swickard, Earl Schenck and Stuart Holmes. It is beautifully staged.

CATCH LINES

A picture which carries the breath of life—a picture which contains the depth of humanity—which glows with realism—which conquers for its pathos, charm and sentiment—that is "No Woman Knows," the Universal feature which comes to the ———— soon. It is adapted from the amazing story of "Fanny Herself" written by Edna Ferber.

"THE ROWDY"
(Universal)

Gladys Walton Has Interesting Little Number Here

THIS story, framed against a fishing village, may be cut from a conventional pattern, and it uses one of the oldest stock situations ever conceived, yet there is enough appeal about it in the shape of good incident, appropriate atmosphere, colorful characterization and adequate acting to compensate for an arbitrary development and a more or less familiar line of action. The star, Gladys Walton, plays the title role in a spirited fashion, interpreting the figure of the piquant heroine with all the pep and personality which are hers on the screen. She is an adopted daughter of fisher-folk, the opening shot revealing her being rescued when a mere child from the angry waves.

A sub-title states that she has caused sufficient excitement for her parents in the course of ten years. These early scenes are given up to presenting the attractive star in ingenuish poses—such as fishing off the dock and acting as diplomat in the quarrels of the neighbors. A fight flashed in the opening reel between the hero and heavy offers a mild thrill. And this fistic battle is renewed in the closing reel for the sake of adding a necessary punch. It seems that the villain is one of the officers of the company that employ the natives and the rowdy has occasion to show him his place as well as revealing to the hero that he must show some ambition before he can hope to win her.

The ancient situation involves a locket which is the means of identifying the heroine's ancestry. Since Miss Walton has romped about in rags and tatters and played the tomboy to the limit, the scenarist finds the time opportune to permit her to dress up for the later reels. A flaw in the logic occurs when it is revealed that she belongs to the wealthy Hamptons, who live on the other side of the harbor. It seems reasonable that she would have been found before the lapse of ten or more years. In taking up her new abode she discovers that the social life does not harmonize with her mode of existence. The call of romance is heard by the girl and the rugged hero hears it too. She runs away from her spinster aunts to accompany her friends on a cruise. Which is the moment when the heavy enters the scene again with his motor boat. The fight occurs and he takes the count. The locket clears up the complications when the girl's supposedly real mother returns from Italy and confesses that the child is the daughter of a former maid. The result of the denouement finds the heroine returning to the people who have meant so much to her. The picture is thoroughly appealing, partly because of the star's adaptability to the demands of the story, and partly because of its correct atmosphere and incident. Jack Mower makes a likeable hero.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture of a pretty little orphan who is adopted by sea-faring people and who at the great conflict in her life decides to remain with these simple fishing folk is "The Rowdy" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with Gladys Walton. The piquant Universal star is at her best in this role since it permits her to flash her well known talent for expressing irresistible girlhood. Miss Walton takes the role of Kit Purcell who is adopted when a mere child. Since Kit possesses an undeniable personality she is not long in asserting her power over the community.

The men fight for her; the women love her. It happens that her supposed relatives claim her through a locket and she gives up the sea-faring folk and makes her home far above their station in life. However, she is discontented and runs away and the conclusion brings the fact that she is no relative of the rich people at all. The picture is charged with human touches, plenty of sentiment and romance and a fine flavor of adventure and is capitally acted and directed.

PROGRAM READER

She was a tomboy from the tips of her toes to the luxuriant hair atop her head. She could take care of herself in the most trying of circumstances. Yet she possessed enough of the feminine to be dependent at times. And she depended upon a rough but likeable fellow who followed the sea for a living. She left the fishing banks one day to make her home with wealthy relatives. But the new life oppressed her so much that she ran away to make her home with her former associates. This is an outline of "The Rowdy," the clever and fascinating picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— starring pretty Gladys Walton.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a star who is rapidly winning the popularity stakes and it would be well to exploit her name in the most prominent fashion. Explain that her pictures are certainly getting across—that "The Rowdy" is up to the standard of the others. You can tell that this is a simple story which is thoroughly appealing since it revolves around life in a fishing village. Bring forth that the picture is ideal for the star. Play up the title and present stills of Miss Walton in her various poses. Describe it as an entertaining picture of punch and drama, sentiment and romance.

"THE NIGHT HORSEMEN"
(Fox)

Mix Not at His Best in This Sequel to "The Untamed"

IT is a different Tom Mix that appears in "The Night Horsemen." The popular interpreter of Western roles has given up, temporarily at least, his satirical fling at life to enact again the serious cowboy, quick with the six-shooter, expert with the lasso and at home in the saddle. But the role of Whistling Dan is one that does not exact undue sympathy from the spectator, principally because the character is compelled to do things which are not charged with humanities. It is rather an arbitrary melodrama which is offered here, though, as in all Mix pictures, there is sufficient action to keep one interested most of the time. But this character which dominates the story seemingly steps from fiction rather than from life. The same may be said for many of the other characters.

It is rather irritating to see the star's eyes gleam yellow after the manner of some color process whenever he sees red, and the fact that he is a strange nomad, unmindful of gratitude or loyalty toward those who have his welfare in mind, tends to precipitate a line of action which is sort of aggravating to the spectator. The most human figure is that of the loyal Buck Daniels who, when he realizes that his advances are not encouraged by the girl, risks his life to bring back the irresponsible nomad of the saddle. The offering drags in not a few places and Mix himself is inclined to take his time. This may be due to enacting the character faithfully, since he is slow in showing a willingness to fight.

The real active part of the plot centers about a couple of vicious brutes who are after the whistling cowboy for one object—his elimination from the right to exist. A saloon brawl results in the death of one of the villains, with the result that the closing reels present the conflict of man against man. The latter reels compensate for the slowness of the introductory scenes and Mix is there with bells on as usual when it comes to practising stunts with the Colt 45 or in the saddle. There is a counter conflict which has to do with the recovery of the ranchman. The cowboy has been urged to return in order that the old man may take on a new lease of life. The heroine meanwhile pines away her days waiting for his return. Had she encouraged the faithful Buck, she would be getting a better prospect for a husband. In its favor there are plenty of good fights and every one concerned is not afraid of being mussed up for the full value of realism. The finale presents a genuine thrill, with Mix using the lasso to good effect. And Lynn Reynolds has incorporated some wonderfully fine long shots. Trust him for that! Mix being the star, there is no reason why "The Night Horsemen" should fail to get over. But it isn't up with some of its forerunners.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Another interesting Tom Mix picture is offered in "The Night Horsemen," based on Max Brand's story, "Wild Geese." This tale is a sequel to "The Untamed," one of the star's best photoplays and it makes its appearance at the ———— theatre next ————. The popular interpreter of cowboy roles has another opportunity to show his skill at clever horsemanship in this interesting story of the West. There is a rousing line of action which presents Mix doing the things which have established his popularity, namely, lariat throwing, and clever work in the saddle.

He plays the part of Whistling Dan, a roving type of cowboy, whose anger is slow to be aroused, but when it does his eyes turn yellow, which is indication that those who cross him had better seek safety in flight. Mix is supported by a company that includes May Hopkins, Sid Jordan, Bert Sprotte and others. Lynn Reynolds directed.

PROGRAM READER

Tom Mix, the popular interpreter of Western roles, is coming to the ————. Tom Mix, the most daring rider, the most expert manipulator of the six-shooter on the silversheet, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Night Horsemen," considered by those who have witnessed it to be one of the best Western melodramas of the season. The story by Max Brand is a sequel to "The Untamed," a former Mix picture and it carries the popular star through a vigorous line of action which offers several dramatic thrills which are noticeable in the gun-play, the two-fisted fights, the clever horsemanship displayed, and the marvelous lariat throwing. Remember next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have a sequel to "The Untamed," a former Mix picture and it would be advisable to present it as such. Tell that it was written by Max Brand, considered one of the leading fictionists in the field when it comes to penning vivid and picturesque stories of the glorious West. Play up that Mix has another opportunity to show his skill in the saddle and with the six-shooter. Tell that it is a typical Mix offering. Play up the title. It is attractive. You can feature it as a hair-raising picture of thrills and punch, of action and suspense, a tingling melodrama. Play up that Mix is there doing the impossible stunts and accomplishing them with ease.

"GOD'S CRUCIBLE"
(Ernest Shipman-Winnipeg-Hodkinson)

Picture Would Hit High Spots With More Even Continuity

THIS adaptation of Ralph Connor's novel, "The Foreigner," does not make such easy and interesting reading on the screen as it did via the printed page, principally because of a hazy continuity. The characterization, which should have been clearly defined, is extremely cloudy, so that one is at a loss to understand at times the motives of the different figures. One knows that the plot concerns some Russian immigrants who have fled to Manitoba to escape persecution in their own land. However, in the new country they are still subject to oppression because of the presence of a powerful agent from the land of the steppes who registers brutality at every opportunity.

The picture endeavors to make clear that a foreigner, once he has adapted himself to a new environment, is as much entitled to religious and social freedom as a native son. But the main theme is elaborated with so much irrelevant detail that there appears to be nothing definite about the plot. For instance, a folk-dance is presented at much length, to be replaced by some scene which has nothing in common with the foreign atmosphere. There is also a great group of characters and so much incident is offered to present them that one never has time to become acquainted with any single figure. The father of the hero is cut from a heroic mould and captions state that he has made his escape from Siberia and Manitoba jails. He bobs up in the earlier reels and stays out of the picture until near the finish. The feud between him and the vicious agent is never made quite clear to the spectator.

The hero has a chance to make good with a wealthy miner, but from the moment he leaves Winnipeg one has a difficult time following his adventures. A number of scenes are given up to incidental by-play concerning a drunken half-breed, and the bathing of an Irish servant. If "The Foreigner" had been developed with a few broad strokes and the irrelevant incident eliminated it would, in all probability, have intrigued the imagination from inception to conclusion. There is much that is commendable about the picture. It carries fine atmosphere and picturesque backgrounds, and the acting of Gaston Glass, Edna Shipman, William Colvin and Robert T. Haines is of sufficient high calibre to interest the patron. There is also some good adventure in the action. If the story did not wander about so aimlessly it would carry the all-important element of suspense. A little careful editing would make this look like a good bet. Certainly it suggests forcefulness and appeal.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"God's Crucible," an adaptation of Ralph Connor's stirring novel, "The Foreigner," is the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast of competent and well known players that include Wilton Lackaye, Gaston Glass, Edna Shipman, Bradley Barker, Bigelow Cooper, Gladys Coburn, William Colvin and Robert T. Haines. Mr. Connor is one of the most graphic writers of the age and his stories of love and adventure in the Canadian wilds have endeared him to the fiction reading public.

"The Foreigner" is considered one of his finest contributions to the libraries and homes of the land. It is a picture with a big purpose—a big theme and it sweeps forward with plenty of dramatic action and such appealing elements as suspense, adventure, romance, pathos and humor. The feature is set against a marvelously picturesque background and builds through scenes which are always compelling because of the wealth of dramatic action and incident.

PROGRAM READER

A story by Ralph Connor always excites interest. Here is an author whose breadth of vision enables his readers to live his scenes and to identify themselves as actual participants. "The Foreigner" is considered one of his most interesting stories and it comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a motion picture entitled "God's Crucible." This is a feature marked for its dramatic sweep and its sustained line of action and it carries the spectator through a smashing line of action. It is a picture wonderfully acted by a large and competent cast that includes Wilton Lackaye, Gaston Glass, Edna Shipman, Gladys Coburn and others. Come next ———— and see a highly interesting picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Since Ralph Connor is considered one of the most graphic writers of the big outdoors and since his stories are in wide demand, it would be a good plan to concentrate upon his name and state that "The Foreigner" is coming to the ———— as one of the most compelling pictures of the season under its new title, "God's Crucible." You can dress your lobby to suggest the big outdoors. For a prologue you can feature some dancers attired in Russian costumes going through some native dances. Also a violin solo would be an effective number. Play it up as a vigorous picture of life in the wilds of Manitoba. Describe it as a pulsating drama of action in the far off places.

CATCH LINES

See "God's Crucible," adapted from "The Foreigner" by Ralph Connor. One of the best outdoor pictures ever made. Don't fail to see it.

Homespun Story With MacLean Carries Enough Pep and Ginger

WHILE this latest Douglas MacLean picture is hardly up to the calibre of "One a Minute," in regard to spontaneity of action and a vein of constant humor, there is plenty of irresistible touches about it and enough breezy incident to make it quite sure-fire with almost any type of audience. In the first place the star takes advantage of his opportunities to flash his individuality in a score of scenes and the role which he interprets is one which arouses a wealth of sympathy since he is one of those generous fellows who is constantly getting in "dutch" through his willingness to assume the obligations of others in distress.

When the son of the banker who employs him gets caught red-handed by the examiners, the hero steps into the breach and is railroaded to prison. The incident on the journey is one of the most conspicuous high lights and is genuinely human. MacLean is seated with a number of fellow passengers in the smoking compartment of the sleeper and all are registering happiness because of returning home to some expectant joy. A traveler asks the hero where he is going and he answers—"Bar Harbor," pointing to his handcuffed wrists as the evidence. That night the train is wrecked and he makes his escape to a small town, the authorities thinking that he burned to death in the catastrophe. Here he butts into further trouble when he intercedes in behalf of a stubborn mule—trouble furnished from the farmer's fist and not from the animal's hoof.

He offers to work and take his salary "in mule," and the scenes which show him accompanied by the animal are rich in humor because the latter belongs to the trained variety. The town banker is something of a skinflint, but his daughter possesses a disposition which causes the generous youth to fall in love. A party of burglars are caught red-handed by him, but he brings trouble upon himself and is thrust into the vault for interrupting their scheme. The mule comes to the rescue and kicks the bricks out of the vault, but before any of the good people can escape from the bank a mischievous boy has fired a stick of dynamite and all concerned are next revealed as patients in a hospital. "Passing Thru" carries a healthy note of slapstick in its concluding reels, which while it may irritate those in search of polite comedy, manages to make the picture consistent. The plot does not carry much substance, but at least the characterization is thoroughly convincing. Madge Bellamy makes the heroine an appealing figure. This offering is going to send them away entirely satisfied.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Passing Thru," a delightful new Paramount-Ince comedy starring the clever light comedian, Douglas MacLean, will be the feature attraction at the ———— Theatre next ————. This tells the amusing story of a young man who continually assumes the responsibilities of others and finds himself in serious trouble as a result. Mr. MacLean is cast to fine advantage in the role of Billy Barton, a bank clerk who takes the blame for a theft and is sent to prison. He escapes on his way to the penitentiary and settles down as the hired man on Farmer Harkins' farm.

Falling in love with Mary Spivins, he attempts to settle a long-standing quarrel between Harkins and Mary's father, the town banker, and gets into more difficulties. He is eventually vindicated, however, in a climax of total unexpectedness. The picture is charged with humanities and is always appealing throughout its charming scenes. Mr. MacLean is supported by a clever company.

SUGGESTIONS

You can feature this as being quite up to the MacLean standard. You can feature the title and state that the likable star has a vehicle which provides him a great opportunity to show why he is considered one of the best light comedians on the screen. Tell that he plays the role of a young fellow who assumes the troubles of others only to find out that they involve him in tremendous difficulties. Ask your patrons if they think it advisable to assume other people's troubles. Use stills of his leading lady, Madge Bellamy, considered by many as America's most beautiful actress. Treat your copy in a jazzy fashion, putting plenty of punch and snap in all your exploitation. A good teaser would be the invitation to those who are passing through town to stop at the ———— and see "Passing Thru."

"BEYOND"
(Paramount)

Spiritualistic Propaganda Grafted to "Enoch Arden"

"BEYOND" is a very eccentric series of episodic scenes in which spiritualistic propaganda and a temperance lecture are added to a feminine "Enoch Arden" plot in a way that can scarcely fail to appear ludicrous to the average fan. The authorship of this weird concoction is laid at the door of one of England's greatest playwrights, Henry Arthur Jones, a man famous for his skill at dramatic construction and his ability to write plays in which wholesome lessons are presented entertainingly. Either Mr. Jones has little respect for the intelligence of picture audiences or he has absorbed too much English spiritualism. At any rate the material he has provided for "Beyond" is neither skilfully constructed, convincing in plot or well written in titles, although some of the latter are unmistakably original and not the work of staff writers.

Stripped of its spiritualism "Beyond" tells the story of a young English woman who leaves her home and husband to reform her drunken brother. This accomplished she begins a return voyage but the ship is wrecked with all on board but herself lost. The husband marries again thinking she is dead. After some months she walks into her old home unannonuced and undiscovered to find her husband making love to his new wife. She then goes to the home of her brother apparently not so far away and they all agree to keep the fact that she still lives a secret. The second wife falls down stairs and is killed, explanations follow and the old wife takes the new one's place.

Ethel Clayton and a capable cast appear in innumerable scenes which require titles to explain what is going on and which never show any continuous action or interesting incident. The "ghost" of Ethel's mother shows up ever so often to explain that everything will come out all right, but she never tells her anything that will aid in bringing this about.

All in all it is a very unsatisfactory picture unless one is uncharitable enough to view it as a comedy and about the only place it may be expected to go over is at a spiritualistic camp meeting, for unlike "Earthbound" it has no theme worthy of respect nor technical construction unusual enough to command interest.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Those who believe in the occult will have a fine treat and those who do not will be entertained in the feature picture, "Beyond," coming to the ———— theatre for a ———— day engagement beginning ————.

The star of "Beyond" is Ethel Clayton playing the role of an English girl who is alleged to be guided through great trials by the spirit of her mother.

The plot of the picture and the incident provided have to do with a young wife who leaves her husband in England to journey to one of the colonies that she may look after her brother and who in returning is shipwrecked and given up for dead, the husband marrying another. The second wife is later killed and a reunion follows.

A strong supporting cast has been secured in support of the star and the picture has been given a splendid production.

Henry Arthur Jones, the noted playwright, wrote "Beyond" and William D. Taylor directed. The offering is in six reels.

PROGRAM READER

A theme in which spiritualism has a prominent part makes "Beyond" a new Ethel Clayton starring vehicle on the Paramount program, coming to the ———— theatre for a ———— days engagement beginning ————, one of the most notable productions of the year.

The story which was written by Henry Arthur Jones, the noted English playwright author of such great successes as "The Hypocrites," in which Richard Bennett was starred and has been filmed by William D. Taylor, who has many picture successes to his credit.

The cast secured in support of Miss Clayton is composed of well known players and the production has been lavishly staged and splendidly photographed.

The story of "Beyond" concerns a young English woman who is guided through many troubles by the spirit of her mother and who finally finds happiness by her faith and the strength gained from the spirit world.

The picture is in six reels and is presented as one of the best features on the current Paramount program.

SUGGESTIONS

Selling this picture to the public has several angles. One which probably would be productive of some results is the spiritualism theme. Otherwise bill Ethel Clayton, the author of the story, the director and the production as a Paramount picture. Stories alleging the existence of a spirit world, the cooperation of people who believe in the occult, etc., will be good if you decide on the other angle.

CATCH LINES

The story of a girl who was guided through many years of sorrow by the spirit of her mother and who finally achieved earthly happiness because of her faith in the occult world.

Henry Arthur Jones, England's most famous playwright, wrote it. Ethel Clayton, one of America's most talented actresses, is the star. William D. Taylor, who has many notable pictures to his credit, directed it.

"BLACK SHEEP"
(Chaudet-Hurst-Pinnacle-State Rights)

Western With Neal Hart Makes Good Program Offering

A FIRST class program release is offered in Neal Hart's newest western, "Black Sheep," which is based upon a familiar formula—that of the conflict between the cattlemen and sheepherders. Notwithstanding this conventional pattern and its obvious development it carries moments of lively action and interesting incident. The scenes are principally exteriors and shots of the western hill country are furnished which carry breadth and atmosphere. Against these backgrounds moves a story which is always vigorous because of its wealth of gun-play and typically western incident. It is a feature of very few faults as westerns go—its chief weakness being an episodic line of action which might be blamed upon the cutting.

The punch scenes are not compact enough in the middle of the picture because of the elimination of the melodramatic conflict and what is substituted takes on the form of character studies and incidental by-play. Hart has a heroic part of which he takes full advantage. It seems to us as if the role might have appeared more genuinely had he not triumphed so easily over his adversaries. He engages in several fistic encounters without once losing his poise. The he-man flavor of the plot will compensate for the unrealities. The hero is a stickler for fair play regardless of the fact that he is a cattleman. And when his relatives and pals are determined to exterminate the sheepherders he is equally determined to stand by and see that everything is above board.

A minor conflict revolves around a mysterious highwayman which does not carry much suspense due to the careful planting of the character. One knows for a certainty that the real culprit is the Mexican. Meanwhile the hero's father expels him from home and he wanders about for two reels with a stray lamb in his arms. In fact much of the incident concerns the protection of this tiny black sheep. The figure of the Westerner is one that exacts a deal of sympathy from the spectator because of his desire to do the right thing at all hazards. The romantic element is mostly negative but the heroine enters into the picture in time to straighten out the complications and identify the real culprit. The long shots of sheep grazing, the hard riding and straight shooting, the adequate acting, the picturesque backgrounds—these are sufficient to attract the spectator. "Black Sheep" should interest most every type of patron except those who are exceptionally hard-boiled.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Rex Carson ..... Neal Hart

By W. C. Tuttle.
Directed by Paul Hurst.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A swiftly moving and picturesque film of the feud between the cattle-men and sheepherders is offered in "Black Sheep," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— starring Neal Hart, considered as one of the best exponents of the spirit of the West on the screen. It is a picture which carries a lively line of action which is always punctuated with interesting incident and dramatic punch. The star enacts the part of Rex Carson whose father is one of the influential cattle-men. The latter expels his son from home when Rex declares his purpose of seeing that fair play is extended to the sheepherders.

As the picture develops the figure of Carson arouses a deal of sympathy not only because of his sincerity but because of his friendliness for animals in distress. He rescues a black sheep who has strayed from the fold and it is in the protection of the animal that most of the melodramatic incident is concerned. The picture moves against a truly colorful background and engenders a deal of suspense.

PROGRAM READER

A smash-bang, vigorous, two-fisted picture of the West is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "Black Sheep," adapted from W. C. Tuttle's story, "Baa, Baa, Black Sheep," and which features the colorful Neal Hart, than whom there is no better exponent of the spirit of the vast reaches beyond the Mississippi. The picture details the conflict between the cattle-men and the sheepherders who migrated to the West and raised havoc with the ranchers who naturally were provoked by the trespassers upon their domains. It is a picture which carries rich photography appreciated in the fact that the backgrounds take in the hilly country and present a series of exceptional views. Remember next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Since this is a Western it would be a good idea to exploit it as above the ordinary because of the fact that most Westerns are of obvious design. You can tell them that it is a worthy vehicle for Neal Hart, one of the best delineators of western characters upon the screen. You can put over an all-Western bill, featuring some rodeo show or round-up for a short number—a film that should be easily obtainable. You can put over a prologue featuring a cowboy quartette with such numbers being used as "Jim Along Josie," "Wait for the Wagon," etc. Bill it as a snappy, vigorous, smash-bang Western which carries lively action and suspense.

CATCH LINES

He was considered a black sheep by his father and when alone and friendless he found companion in a tiny black lamb. Did he return to the fold? See "Black Sheep."

See Neal Hart in the fighting, smashing picture of the West. See this vigorous star in a stimulating melodrama, "Black Sheep."

"THE SERENADE"
(R. A. Walsh-First National)

Lots of Atmosphere and Acting, But Not So Much Action

"THE SERENADE" is from a story translated from the Spanish, which had previously been dramatized under the title of "Spanish Love," same having met with some measure of success on Broadway due mostly to excellent acting and the work of a company of Spanish dancers. It was a romantic drama, founded on a slender plot, having to do with the love making of two Castilian sons, each trying to win the hand and the heart if possible, of a Spanish beauty. The lady accepts the least desirable of the pair according to her parent's viewpoint, so the rival still presses his suit. The two men have a fight with knives, the lover favored by the parents, being wounded. This results in it being necessary for the other to flee for his life, since the wounded man is the governor's son, and the penalty is death for attacking a member of an official's family. The girl promises to marry the suitor who has been wounded on being assured that the life of the man she loves will be spared. However, the two rivals get into another quarrel. The lover the girl favors, refuses to take advantage of an opportunity to kill the other, although it is a fair fight, which in the Castilian code of honor makes it imperative that the governor's son announce himself out of the race. This he does and then dies of what is inferred to be a combination of a physical and a heart wound.

With this material and an added sequence which is anti-climaxic R. A. Walsh has made a picture rich in atmosphere, but told largely by titles, and which is exceedingly short on action except for some interpolated incident rather reminiscent of "The Mark of Zorro." The production as a whole drags badly. A portion of this may be safely laid to the camera work, shots so long that the characters are scarcely distinguishable being much in evidence. The photography is not of the best either.

A good cast of types in which Brother George, Miriam Cooper and Bertram Grassby have the principal roles and about equal opportunity, do as well as is possible with the material provided.

The picture has cost money, many big sets and ensemble scenes being presented.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "Serenade" an R. A. Walsh production, featuring Miriam Cooper. It is a romance of old Spain—the land of dark-eyed senoritas, bold fighting cavaliers—daring deeds and thrilling adventures. It is a picture of tender romantic scenes which are tinctured with moments of thrills. The action is laid in the town of Magdalena, a Spanish possession, and depicts in an interesting manner the love affairs of Maria del Carmen, prettiest girl for miles around, and Pacho, the son of the governor.

The arrival in town of Ramon results in complications, duels and misunderstandings which threaten the peace of the town and the love of Pancho for Maria, but affairs are untangled in a novel manner. Miss Cooper, because of her dark beauty, makes a bewitching senorita as she leans over the balcony of her hacienda, listening to the serenade of love and passion. It is a picture of tempestuous love which is thoroughly appealing and charming.

PROGRAM READER

A tale of fiery love and tempestuous wooing on the Spanish isle of Magdalena is R. A. Walsh's "Serenade" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Miriam Cooper and George Walsh as the featured players. It is a picture of dusky Spanish beauties who dance, flirt, scorn and love—of Spanish Dons who ride, fight, hate and love. Come next ———— and see this picture of wondrous adventure in old Spain. Visit the land of song and dance. See the bold, fighting cavaliers. Watch the dare-devil horsemen in a wild chase. Come and see Miriam Cooper whose bewitching loveliness is given perfect expression here. See George Walsh as the bold, dashing Don. Come and be royally entertained.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture which lends itself admirably to exploitation. The very title is suggestive of various methods of advertising. You can put over a Spanish prologue, preseneting in a tabloid musical act a Spanish musical comedy, with the principals correctly attired and singing and dancing to Spanish numbers. Also play up R. A. Walsh, who is considered one of the leading directors of the screen. Play up Miriam Cooper and use stills of her. She is beautiful and her personality is suggestive of Spanish temperament. Play up that George Walsh is in the cast too. Bill it as a tempestuous drama of passion and love in old Spain. Use your colorful descriptions in exploiting the picture. Have your ushers garbed as senoritas.

CATCH LINES

See the vivid, tempestuous drama of love and passion in old Spain. See R. A. Walsh's "Serenade" at the ———— theatre next ————.

"BEATING THE GAME"
(Goldwyn)

"Fortune Hunter" Idea Developed Into Fine Entertainment

A NEW twist to "The Fortune Hunter" idea and some good rural incident in addition to the characterizations of a fine cast of types is responsible for a picture that ought to go over as very good entertainment with most any audience.

It has an extremely well developed plot, even if somewhat inconsistent; some suspense, an occasional bit of comedy, good settings and titles, many fine rustic types and a likeable star in a part which fits him exceedingly well.

Among the players deserving equal praise with the star is Dick Rosson, Nick Cogley, Tom Rickets and Lydia Yeamans Titus. Victor Schertzinger, who directed, has shown a real knowledge of the rural life, although he might have been more consistent with his village election scenes. The mayoralty or presidency of towns the size of that in which "Beating the Game" is largely laid carry little responsibility, nominations are made by a half dozen of the faithful of the two principal political parties, and the chance for grafting consists principally in getting a couple of "Annie Oakleys" to the annual circus. However, most people will not quibble over such small matters. "Beating the Game" is a good evening's entertainment, has a fine moral, will be apt to fool some of even the wise ones as to its ending and need have no fear of censors, preachers or reformers. If there were more pictures like this latest Moore vehicle there would be less talk of dull business in the hinterland.

The story of "Beating the Game" concerns a young burglar who is sent to a small town by a supposedly master crook to make a reputation for honesty, so that the village may be fleeced. The erstwhile criminal finds being honest is better than dodging cops, meets the right girl, defies the alleged master mind and then finds out that it was all a put up job to give him a chance to go straight, the "master mind" being a senator from that district.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

Ben Fanchette	Dick Rosson

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Moore in his latest Goldwyn vehicle, "Beating the Game," a story of a burglar who went to a small town to gain a reputation for honesty that he might fleece the whole community, is the feature attraction scheduled for the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

Mr. Moore is supported by a strong cast of great types. The roster includes such favorite players as Hazel Daly, Nick Cogley and others who have a strong following with the fans.

The role of "Honest John Jones" gives Mr. Moore one of the most likable parts of his career and in the scenes taken in a small town locale, where the action of the larger part of the story transpires, some interesting rural incident has been evolved. "Beating the Game" is a picture built on the theory that environment makes the man, and a strong case is made in relating how Moore as the slick young crook in the city becomes the honest, energetic and trustworthy young business man of the little country village.

The picture is in five reels and was directed by Victor Schertzinger.

PROGRAM READER

A new five-reel rural comedy, "Beating the Game," with popular Tom Moore in the leading role and supported by a strong cast of players, is the feature picture booked for the ———— theatre for a ———— days' showing beginning ————.

"Beating the Game" is a picture play that will please the most exacting. It presents the star as a slick young city crook who is reformed by his contact with honest rural people and who finds a wife, happiness and business success in a little village.

In support of Mr. Moore is a strong cast of players, among whom Hazel Daly and Nick Cogley play strong roles. The picture was directed by Victor Schertsinger from an original story. It is fine entertaiment and a welcome change from problem and sex plays.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill this strong from the story angle promising a plot that is faultless with perhaps some comparison to "The Fortune Hunter" as to style. Give Tom Moore the headlines but do not neglect the supporting players especially Hazel Daly and Nick Cogley. This is a picture where newspaper advertising in which good selling talk about the theme will be especially effective. Lobby displays and prologue numbers should be along rural lines.

CATCH LINES

The story of a wise city slicker who came to a one horse burg intending after getting a reputation for honesty to bamboozle the entire population and then found that he liked the simple life so well that he just couldn't be anything but straight.

Just a homely tale of a smart city crook who blew into a tank town intending after building up a reputation as a model young man, to steal everything from the church pulpit to the widow's cow—but who changed his mind when he found out being honest was profitable and better suited to his tastes.

"THE BROKEN SPUR"
(Ben Wilson-Arrow)

Scenic Values Add to Average Western

AS program Westerns go, this will probably be called a passable picture in the houses that have played the previous Hoxie productions, although the story told is highly improbable and convenient, with the ending always in sight.

It also lacks the action and incident usually counted upon to put over the Western feature and suffers considerably from wordy and unnecessary titles, written in a poetic vein.

The picture's greatest audience asset is a widely varied and extremely beautiful collection of scenic backgrounds. They give the offering a distinct educational value that should make it interesting to a class of people who will not care especially for its dramatic side.

The star plays a dual role. He is a civil engineer building a railroad and an outlaw sojourning in the mountains through which the road is to run. Neither role presents much of an opportunity for the sort of stuff that has given Hoxie his following, stunts and horseback riding, and the two characters are so near alike that only the color or horses and attire enable the spectator to know whether heavy or hero is on the screen.

The story of "The Broken Spur" concerns the stealing of the railway payroll by Hoxie as the outlaw, with Hoxie as the engineer being accused of the crime. Both men are arrested, each claiming to be innocent. The method of determining this point is a broken spur on the heel of the bandit, the missing part having been picked up at the scene of the holdup. A counterplot along the same lines is worked out by having the heroine see the outlaw making love to a woman whom she thinks is her rival in the affections of the engineer.

The story and continuity for "The Broken Spur" was written by J. Grub Alexander. Ben Wilson directed. The photography is excellent, with most of the scenes being shot out of doors.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

Bill Lambert ..... Jim Welch

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

To the majority of people it is difficult to be other than just what we are, although we do read from time to time of a "Raffles" or a "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." An actor who can take the part of two characters in a play or motion picture always proves his real ability in his art. Jack Hoxie, who comes to the _____ theatre on Monday in his latest Western feature, "The Broken Spur," proves his ability to accept a dual role, for he is both the big good-natured camp foreman, beloved by his men, and the roving bad-man of the Canadian wilds who fights as quickly with his fists as with his revolver.

PROGRAM READER

To us who cannot, for many reasons, roam the world as we might like to, the motion picture has brought the many places we should like to visit to us. The beautiful and interesting places, the rugged mountain peaks, the scorched desert, the habits and modes of living of the Eskimo, the African, the peoples of the old and new worlds.

In Jack Hoxie's latest Western feature, "The Broken Spur," coming to the _____ theatre next Monday, the beautiful mountains and valleys are pictured in all their splendor, also views of a lumber camp in full operation, from the cutting down of the big trees to their being cut up into planks for domestic use.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the scenic locations in all your advertising especially in the matter of stills. Give the star the usual billing but do not promise him in his usual stunts. For a lobby display the log cabin effect will be appropriate. Prologue ideas are to be found in the scenes of the picture showing a logging camp. Good posters, window cards and heralds are available from your exchange.

CATCH LINES

A story of the great out doors enacted among the most wonderful scenic locations ever caught by the camera.

Big Jack Hoxie playing a dual role in a heart interest story of the West. A broken spur mended a broken heart and proved a man innocent of a great crime.

Additions Made to Cast of R. A. Walsh Picture

The following Los Angeles photoplayers have been added to the cast of R. A. Walsh's First National production, "Kindred of the Dust": Eugenie Besserer, three-year-old Bruce Guerin, Maryland Morne and Pat Roney.

The "Kindred of the Dust" cast now consists of the above recently acquired players and of the principals: Miriam Cooper, Ralph Graves, Lionel Belmore and W. J. Ferguson.

"Tailor Made Man" to Star Jack Pickford

Al Green and Jack Pickford, who came East to submit to United Artists the finished picture, "Little Lord Fauntleroy," starring Mary Pickford, are scheduled to return shortly to the Coast where they will begin production on "The Tailor-Made Man," which Green will direct and which will be the medium that will change Jack Pickford from a director to a star again. This feature is scheduled for release through the United Artists.

Loew Gives 100 Days to "Cup of Life"

Three productions distributed by Associated Producers, Inc., attained the honor of being the first to be accorded the extended time bookings of 100 days on Loew time, made possible through the opening of the State theatre and other houses. Previously the maximum number of days available for motion pictures in the metropolitan district was 83.

Thomas H. Ince's "The Cup of Life" is the first feature to be booked for the extended time. Two Mack Sennett comedies, two-reelers, were also booked for the same number of days. They are "Love's Outcast," the first of the series, starring Ben Turpin, and "Call a Cop."

Goldwyn Films Near Finish

Rupert Hughes Story Among Three Productions Completed This Week

THE photography on three big Goldwyn productions will be completed this week, and the titling and editing of the films begun next week.

One of the three is Rupert Hughes' new and original screen story, "The Wall Flower," in the directing of which the author has assisted E. Mason Hopper. Production chiefs at the studios are enthusiastic about "The Wall Flower" and the acting of Colleen Moore, who was especially engaged to play the chief role after the entire field of leading women on the coast had been canvassed. Richard Dix plays opposite Miss Moore. Others in the cast are Tom Gallery, Gertrude Astor and Fanny Stockbridge.

Albert Payson Terhune's picture, "Grand Larceny," made from his novel of that name, is said about the studios to be in Goldwyn's big picture class. Wallace Worsley directed it. Elliott Dexter, Claire Windsor and Lowell Sherman play the leading roles. Others in the cast include Richard Tucker, Tom Gallery, Roy Atwell and John Cossar.

The third big production now nearing completion is "His Back Against the Wall," in which Raymond Hatton, the character actor, plays the leading role, that of a timid New York tailor who goes West and develops all the courage and stamina that, in his secret thoughts, he had often longed to possess. The story is said to be an unusual and intriguing one, written by John Alexander. Virginia Valli was especially engaged for the leading feminine role in this picture. Rowland V. Lee was engaged to direct it.

Frank Lloyd's production, "The Sin Flood," is now being titled and edited. "The Sin Flood" is an adaptation of Henning Berger's 'Syndafloden." Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix head the cast which also includes James Kirkwood, Ralph Lewis, Otto Hoffman, William Orlamond, L. H. King, Will Walling, Darwin Karr, John Steppling and Howard Davies.

Bosworth Busy on Coast

Star Boosts Northern California as Ideal Location for Production

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA as an ideal place wherein to conduct motion-picture production on an extensive scale is the recommendation advanced by Hobart Bosworth in a statement issued from the headquarters of the F. B. Warren Corporation. Mr. Bosworth is at present busy with the scenes for his first production for Warren release at the Pacific Studios in San Mateo. The picture now under way is titled "White Hands." It was written by C. Gardner Sullivan. Lambert Hillyer is the director, and the picture is being made for the Graf Productions. "White Hands" will be released by the F. B. Warren Productions.

Bosworth has long been impressed with the picture possibilities of the bay cities and has continually stated not only to producers, but to prominent business men that, all things being taken into consideration, the country around San Francisco has as much right to claim picture companies as the communities around Los Angeles.

"I say now, as I have always said, that this is the country for picture making. The desert, the mountains, the lakes and the sea are all near at hand. The southern part of the state has been photographed to the last possible nook and cranny.

"One of the particular satisfactions in coming here is that at last I have proved my contention, and nothing will give me greater pleasure than to show the world what we can produce in the way of excellent photoplays. That other companies will establish their bases here, in the near future, there can be no doubt."

Max Graf, head of Graf Productions, would also have been identified with Northern California motion picture work five years ago if Bosworth's plans were successful, for the star had him in mind as studio manager for earlier schemes which Mr. Bosworth promoted, but which fell through because of lack of co-operation on the part of the city officials in San Mateo.

Former Football Hero Made Screen Star

MAURICE FLYNN, famous as a football star at Yale, has been promoted to stardom on the screen by William Fox. The stories selected for the new Fox star will reflect the life he came to know well in a period of adventuring after leaving college. The first, upon which work will be begun immediately, is "The Real Man," a popular story by Francis Lynde, which will provide the athletic young actor with excellent opportunities to display his demonstrated abilities and engaging personality. Carl Marbaugh will direct the production.

The first picture in which Maurice Flynn appeared was "The Silver Horde" by Rex Beach. Since that time he has appeared in "Going Some," "Officer 666" and other pictures.

New Faces Seen in the Christie Casts

Three new Christie Comedies are now in the making for early release through Educational Film Exchanges. Director Frederic Sullivan is finished up "A Pair of Sexes," with Neal Burns playing the role of a "temporary" parent and Henry Murdock as the real father. In this picture Viora Daniel, a new Christie acquisition, is co-starred with Burns.

After "A Pair of Sexes" will come "Pure and Simple," a story being made by William Beaudine with Bobby Vernon in the featured role. With Bobby is Josephine Hill who made her first appearance with Christie in "Let Me Explain."

Scott Sidney has started another comedy which will be called "Saving Sister Susie." Dorothy Devore is featured in this comedy. Earl Rodney and Katharine Lewis are also in prominent parts.

All Elements of Appeal in "Enchantment"

That desirable quality in a photoplay—an appeal to all classes of audience—is claimed by Cosmopolitan Productions for its forthcoming release "Enchantment," starring Marion Davies. The modern society atmosphere in which the picture is acted, the interesting quality of its story will appeal to men and women of all sorts, and the fairy tale episode, which is a significant part of the plot, will not only delight the grown-ups but is calculated to send the youngsters into ecstacies of delight.

"Enchantment" is the screen version of a popular story by Frank R. Adams that apeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine under the title of "Manhandling Ethel." The scenario was written by Luther Reed and the production was directed by Robert G. Vignola.

"Over the Hill" Is Used Again as Pulpit Text

Following the opening of a run in San Francisco, "Over the Hill" was chosen by the Rev. Dr. James L. Gordon, pastor of the First Congregational Church, not only as the subject of his Sunday evening sermon, but as that of a question box conducted in the church and of another sermon two weeks later. On the second occasion the Columbia Park Boys' Club, a famous San Francisco organization, attended the services by special invitation, in uniform, and occupied the choir section of the church.

Next Lloyd Re-Issue Is Titled "Pinched"

"Pinched" is the next re-issued one-reel Harold Lloyd comedy which has been selected by Pathe for release during the week of September 11th. The comedy not only boasts of having the spectacled comedian as a star, but also has practically a three-star combination in the cast, inasmuch as Bebe Daniels, now a star in her own name, plays opposite Lloyd, and "Snub" Pollard, featured in Hal Roach comedies, is his running mate in the offering.

Laud Scenario Writers of DeMille Subject

William de Mille's new Paramount production, "After the Show," which was adapted from Rita Weiman's story, "The Stage Door," is said to have evoked high praise from the company's executives when shown at the Paramount home office. Much favorable comment was drawn forth by reason of the excellence of the scenario which was the joint work of Hazel MacDonald and Vianna K. Knowlton, staff members of the scenario department of the Lasky studio.

Production Starts on Forward Film Series

The advance guard of producers left New York Saturday evening, bound for Portland, Maine, to shoot the first feature of a series of six for Forward Film Distributors, Inc.

Wray Physic Productions is the name of the producing concern that has contracted to make a series of five-reel stories of the better type for Forward. The first picture will be built under the title of "The Heritage of the Sea," and it is said that the story contains the material to make it one of the best pictures to be released during the coming year.

Lasky Announces Future Swanson Picture

Jesse L. Lasky announced in Hollywood Friday the purchase by Paramount of another original story by Elinor Glyn for Gloria Swanson. "Beyond the Rocks" is the title, and Mr. Lasky believes that it will duplicate the success of "The Great Moment," by the same author. Albert Shelby Le Vino is now writing the scenario. Sam Wood will direct and Thompson Buchanan will supervise the production.

"Beyond the Rocks" will follow in production "The Husband's Trademark," the Clara Beranger story, which Miss Swanson will star.

Late Additions to Cast of "Turn to Right"

Recent additions to the cast of "Turn to the Right," which Rex Ingram is making for release by Metro, include Margaret Loomis, formerly with the Ruth St. Denis company of dancers; Lydia Knott, who will play the "mother" role, and Harry Myers of "Connecticut Yankee" fame, who will appear as the crook with a sense of humor.

Lester Scott, Jr., with C. C. Burr Company

Announcement was made this week by Charles C. Burr, President of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., of the completion of negotiations whereby that organization adds to its personnel Lester Scott, Jr., well known in the independent field as a travelling representative. Mr. Scott has already entered upon his duties of field representative for Affiliated and will specialize in the allotment of territorial franchises for "Burn 'em up Barnes."

Variety in Movie Chats

Wide Range of Subjects Brings International Commendation

WHILE the critic of motion pictures would hardly compare Charles Urban's Movie Chats with a vaudeville bill, they have one element very much in common. That is the quality of variety. In all probability it is this variety which has won for them such an emphatic success in all parts of the world.

Letters from England and the countries on the Continent; from many places in America and many other countries often stress this point. This is particularly true of America where audiences are made up of persons who come from many different countries. Sooner or later all persons in these audiences are sure to see something about their home country, oft as not, about their home town, for the Movie Chats penetrate everywhere and into everything.

Their instructional quality is never lost sight of and everything that goes into them is designed to be of some educational helpfulness, but they are light in treatment and always highly entertaining.

Travel, the arts and sciences, religion of all countries, costumes and customs of all countries, military and naval subjects of all countries—these and a score of other topics are constantly finding their way into the Movie Chats. Each Movie Chat is edited in lengths of one reel and each contains anywhere from three to twenty subjects.

In England they are being used by practically every theatre and in every other country their use is growing constantly. Here in America in one brief year they have secured a remarkable hold and have won many adherents to the claim made for them that they are the best single reel of all.

Mr. Urban is now engaged in editing a new series and in each of the new Movie Chats there will be contained a message that will stir the best thoughts of the millions of motion picture audiences. One hundred Movie Chats are now completed and in release. Mr. Urban plans to add 100 yearly to the library of the Urban Popular Classics.

Clyde Cook at Hippodrome

Dillingham Breaks Tradition to Include Comedian in Big Show

WHAT the other fellow is doing in his sphere of activities, and how he is doing it, is always of interest to exhibitors—more particularly when that "other fellow" happens to be one of the biggest showmen in the country and, among other ventures, manager of the world's biggest playhouse.

During the season 1921-1922, for the first time in the history of the New York Hippodrome, Charles B. Dillingham, its manager, will include a motion picture as part of his program, making of it one of the features; and for this departure from the customs and traditions of the institution Clyde Cook, the Fox comedian, in a series of Clyde Cook Special Comedies, has been chosen.

The arrangement between the Hippodrome management and Mr. Fox provides for the running of the Clyde Cook Special Comedies as they are released—as the first run engagement in the United States—each one to run continuously until the next is ready, so that a Clyde Cook comedy will form a part of the Hippodrome program at all times and will be the only screen feature used.

Clyde Cook is no stranger to Hippodrome audiences. He was appearing there in person when William Fox found him and signed him to appear in screen comedies.

The Hippodrome show runs five hours a day—two and a half hours at each performance—or thirty hours a week, at an aggregate cost of $75,000. The running time of Clyde Cook Special Comedies is twenty-five minutes—fifty minutes a day, or five hours a week, one-sixth of the total playing time for the entire show per week. When it is considered that the Hippodrome bill comprises a very large number of acts, each one featuring world-famous artists, it can be seen what a remarkably strong drawing attraction this Fox comedian is considered.

"Heart of the North" Bought by Zierler

WITH "The Heart of the North" just entered on the States Right market, comes word that the big and important New York State and Northern New Jersey territory has already been disposed of.

The Commonwealth Film Corp. of New York, through Sam Zieler, has just completed negotiations with Joe Brandt, who is State Righting this feature, whereby it will handle the feature in Greater New York and Northern New Jersey. In addition to this, it is announced, upper New York State Rights have been taken over by Nu-Art Pictures, of Buffalo, thereby completing the sale of the New York State territory.

The picture is to be released in the New York and Northern New Jersey territory at once, and Mr. Brandt is personally co-operating with Mr. Zieler in planning a special advertising and exploitation campaign. Intensive exploitation is to be done by both Commonwealth and Nu-Art on this feature, and special novelties are being prepared, it is announced.

Exhibitors Respond to "The Blot" Campaign

Leading exhibitors of the country, who have booked Lois Weber's production "The Blot" for an early showing, are keenly enthusiastic over the Warren Corporation—Parker Pen Company tie-up to be used in exploiting this picture.

The exploitation and publicity of the Warren Corporation has been swamped with applications for the free window cards furnished by the Parker Fountain Pen Company for use during the engagements of "The Blot" in the various cities where the picture will play and a Parker agency is located. The Parker people will devote space in the National magazine advertising on the stunt.

The idea: Exhibitor's playing "The Blot" who conduct the essay stunt on "What is the Greatest Blot on our American Life of To-day?" are furnished free with the advertising material and window cards provided by the Parker people. In return they give Parker pens as prizes for the best 300 word essays on the question.

It is understood the purpose of the new corporation is to secure and operate a high-class motion picture house at Mystic, a popular summer resort, shipbuilding and textile centre.

Improved conditions have been indicated within the past week in the Bridgeport, Conn., motion picture world, with more houses being reopened and indications that still others will reopen soon. Beyond the mere reopening of the houses, it is taken to mean that industrial conditions in that city have begun to return toward normal. The Park Youngstown played it the week of August 28. From there it went to the Grand Opera House in Canton for the week of September 5, and plays the Colonial, Akron, the week of September 11. William S. Hart in

"3 WORD BRAND"

A WILD WEST romance that makes Buffalo Bill's show as tame as a sewing circle.

The real old-time stuff—with all the old thrills and fifty new ones.

Starting with a lone man's fight with a tribe of savage Indians, thundering on through surprises and thrills to a mighty climax.

With Hart in three roles—a pioneer, a plainsman, and the governor of the State!

He rescues the heroine from under the hoofs of a maddened steer; he kidnaps the governor, takes his job, and saves his friend from hanging. He's in the thick of all the action—and the action sure is thick!

It's a picture that would make even a college president stand up and cheer!

*Never have the New York daily newspapers (13 in all) so unanimously praised a feature picture.

* (Complete facsimile copies, without any deletions whatsoever, of the entire list of newspaper criticisms will be sent to any exhibitor upon request.)

PICTURES ARE AMAZING

One of the most interesting and excellently photographed films of human, animal and plant life beyond civilization's domain that has reached Broadway. Some of the pictures are amazing and all of them are entertaining. It is good to be able to add, too, that Mr. Johnson's film is shown as a full length feature of a program. It is not chopped up into fillers. Also it seems honest.
—(N. Y. Times)

A REFRESHING NOVELTY

Here is real romance, fascination and adventure found in its natural environment, supplied by the discovery of wild beasts at every turn and an unexpected meeting with a band of Sulu pirates who prey upon unsuspecting travelers. The wearied movie-goer will find in "Jungle Adventures" a refreshing novelty and welcome change from the conventional run of "movie."
—(Evening Telegram)

BEAUTY AND EXCITEMENT

But never before has he (Samuel Rothafel) been fortunate enough to capture a film with the beauty and excitement concealed in the jungle adventures of Martin Johnson and his wife, who is as daring as she is decorative.—(Alison Smith in The Globe)

A SCREEN MASTERPIECE

And their eyes met Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures," a screen masterpiece, which transforms the wilderness of Borneo into a DeMille setting with a text as fascinating as that of Kipling's masterpiece. The scenery is worthy of Urban.
—(Suzanne Sexton in The Morning Telegraph)

SHOULD BE A RECORD-BREAKER

"Jungle Adventures" should be a record-breaker in popularity among small boys and those older boys who never have grown up entirely. It's the vivid representation of all the boyish dreams about savages and wild venturings.—(Yates in The Daily News)

A RARE TREAT

Going to the Capitol and viewing Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures" after seeing "The Affairs of Anatol" at the Rivoli, across the street, is like stepping from a hothouse into the open and smelling the same greenery under the auspices of fresh air. S. L. Rothafel has presented a rare treat.—(The Sun)

MOST FASCINATING

The pictures are splendidly photographed and show the most fascinating phase of jungle travel.—(N. Y. Journal)

VASTLY ENTERTAINING

A new form of feature picture. It is called "Jungle Adventures," and was made by Martin Johnson in Borneo. It is vastly entertaining, as all real adventure pictures are bound to be.
—(N. Y. Tribune)

GIFT FOR SHOWMANSHIP

S. L. Rothafel, in exhibiting these cinematographic records of a year's explorations by Martin Johnson and his wife into little known depths of Borneo, again reveals his gift for showmanship, taking the jaded movie patron away from mere triangle tragedies and out into the open, where he can let his fancy's bare feet run wild.—(N. Y. Herald)

BY ALL ODDS THE MOST DARING

By all odds the most daring exploits among savage beasts, crawling inhabitants of the forest and Sulu pirates yet revealed to the eyes of man are thrown upon the screen at the Capitol.
—(Quinn L. Martin in the Morning World)

PENETRATED BEYOND THE LINE

The hardships of Mr. Johnson and his wife should not be subjected to minimization by any one who has not been there, and we are told they penetrated beyond the line drawn by the last white man.—(P. F. Reniers in the Evening Post)

WHERE ONLY BRAVE ADVENTURERS DARE TO GO

If you want to see not a mere elephant or two, but veritable herds roaming through an almost impenetrable wilderness, where only brave adventurers and movie cameramen dare to go, you should visit the Capitol this week.—(N. Y. Call)

EXCEEDINGLY INTERESTING

The recital of their experiences through the lens of the motion picture camera makes an exceedingly interesting film. The subtitling is clever and adds much to the interest of the picture.

At intervals a "flash" picture with spectacular big scenes and a lot of thrilling melodrama comes into the market and "cleans up" for every exhibitor who books it. "Good and Evil" in its swiftly moving six reels will score this kind of record everywhere.

"Quo Vadis" Is A Showman's Picture!

It's a clean-up picture for the exhibitor who knows what to do with it: It's the kind of picture with which the sure-fire old-timers made fortunes and paid for their theatres.

To-day—it is outstripping many costly productions enacted by stars.

Re-edited, re-titled, re-advertised as a giant among pictures that it truly is—"QUO VADIS" is playing extended engagements in the largest cities; is booked again by the important circuits; is being road-showed in some territories

And —

The only revival playing in America today that is making profits for exhibitors.

The CASE of BECKY

A powerful picturization of Edward Locke's famous stage success in which David Belasco starred Frances Starr in the same dual role

Directed by Chester M. Franklin
Scenario by J. Clarkson Miller

CAN a girl have two souls—one good and one bad?

A demon and an angel had possession of a beautiful girl's soul, and as each conquered for the moment, her character changed from that of a lovable girl to that of a virago.

Powerful drama—mystery that startles you—suspense that bears you breathless from one big scene to another—a charming love idyl—and one of the greatest fight pictures ever filmed, not the brutal battle of clubs and fists, but a far more terrible one in which two hypnotists struggle for the soul of a young girl—that's what you give your audiences when you show them "THE CASE OF BECKY."

The story of one man's power for good and another man's power for evil in a young girl's mind. It thrills you, it haunts you, it fascinates you as completely as "Trilby" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde combined!

Sign your Franchise now, and get an early playing date!

As a play "The Case of Becky" made a fortune for David Belasco. As a picture it will make money for every exhibitor who owns a Realart Star Franchise.

Trapped! . . . . . .

Caught in the cunning web of Oriental intrigue!

Struggle as she might, flee whither she would, she could not escape the shadow of the clutching fingers that stretched even across the seas to America.

What would you do to save the life of one you loved?

Would you pledge yourself to marry a yellow man?

Would you fight like a tigress when at last you were driven at bay?

Here is a story of love, adventure and intrigue on the shores of the Yellow Sea—a picture to stir one's blood—with its gorgeous settings tinged with the color and mystery of the East.

Never has Alice Brady had a more thrilling opportunity for her glorious emotional ability—a more colorful background for her dramatic powers.

A VIRGINIA COURTSHIP.

The title gives you the recipe—the recipe for full houses. It's like a mint julep—full of fragrance, refreshment and punch!

The picture is based on the famous play of the same name by Eugene Presbrey which achieved such popularity in the days shortly before the Spanish War, and is remembered along with "The Old Homestead" and other favorites of that time.

The fire-eating colonel who still fought duels, the ancient quarrel of the Fairfaxes and the Llewellyns, the single-handed battle of the heroine with a band of counterfeiters, and the romance of a lovely girl and a manly boy—all of these appeals—plus the flawless emotional acting of May McAvoy make this a picture that is a crowd-builder.

Dear Mr. Abrams:-

You will be gratified to hear that we have proved to our full satisfaction that D. W. Griffith's "WAY DOWN EAST" is just the same overwhelming attraction in the motion picture theatres as it was when presented personally by Mr. Griffith in the regular theatrical houses.

We opened it here yesterday to tremendous business. The long run that "WAY DOWN EAST" had at the 44th Street Theatre was the best kind of advertising, so far as the motion picture theatres that will now run it, are concerned. "WAY DOWN EAST" comes to the exhibitors of the country with the greatest advance campaign and good will that any production, theatrical or otherwise, ever had.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

in "DISRAELI"
"A Distinctive Production"

THE motion picture version of "Disraeli," starring Mr. George Arliss, has been accorded a measure of praise seldom given to a screen production.

THE reviewers and critics of the trade and lay press have echoed the unified praise lavished by the public upon this production, emphasizing the dignity, charm and artistry of the work.

"DISRAELI" has commanded the respect, not only of those who consistently follow motion pictures, but also of vast numbers of persons who never before trusted themselves to seek profitable amusement in motion picture theatres.

IN view of this it is a privilege to express my gratitude to Mr. Henry M. Hobart, President of Distinctive Productions, Inc., for his master work as the producer of "Disraeli"; to Mr. Arliss, who steps gracefully into a position among the screen's greatest personalities; to Mr. Henry Kolker, the Director, for his individual achievement; to Mr. Harmon Weight, Mr. Kolker's skilled assistant, and to Mr. Forrest Halsey, who translated Mr. Louis N. Parker's play for the screen.

"DISRAELI" was undertaken in a spirit of the utmost sincerity, executed in a spirit of dignity and presented to the public without clamor.

APPRECIATIVE of the duty owed to lovers of that which is best in the art of motion pictures, and to the large following won by Mr. Arliss, we shall continue to make distinctive pictures, and shall offer the public nothing less than distinctive productions.

"THE SON OF

Authors of "Get Rich Quick Wallingford"

WALLINGFORD"

"THE SON OF WALLINGFORD" is a big picture. Thousands of players appear in some of the scenes; the sets include an artificial lake, with its dams and sluiceways; oil derricks; and a complete city, modern in its appearance. But its mere bigness is not its claim to fame.

The pageants; the flaming surface of the oil-covered lake; the frenzied mob scenes—all thrill. The types—J. Rufus, Blackie Daw, Jimmy and scores of others—make it a gem of its sort. Its authors are internationally famous as the creators of "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," whose name has been a household word for nearly twenty years. Its publicity value is tremendous. It has appeared as a story in Collier's Weekly, in book form, and is being syndicated to thousands of newspapers.

The one outstanding reason for the greatness of "THE SON OF WALLINGFORD" is that it is a different sort of screen entertainment. You will say this as soon as you see it.

A sincere and inspiring story about the lives of just such people as occupy the chairs of your theatre.

A drama of laughter and tears which depicts a man's fight to be a man among men; spurred on by the trust of his daughter and opposed by the shadow of a clouded past.

A feature which your audiences will love because it is delightfully human and decidedly "different."

A Pair of Eyes in a Passing Motor a quick decision — astonishing nerve — explanations — a speedy getaway — angry relatives — desperate chase — narrow escapes — complications — strategy — yielding beauty — runaway match — then a tremendous jolt and a delicious solution.

Through it all the ready smile of Bryant Washburn as theyoung business man who brought American methods to British romance and burned up the road to London in bringing home his bride.

THERE'S BEEN A LOT OF TALK in this business of hard times, theatres closing, and what not.

But it's been mighty evident all the time that there has been good business in every line for the man who offered first class merchandise at fair prices and let people know about it. And that's just as true in the motion picture business as in dry goods, shoes or furniture.

This year is surely going to be a great big year for the man who books "Hurricane Hutch." If the people once see the first episode you won't be able to keep them away with clubs. If you book it and boost it you can forget the slow business of the first half of the year. You can make up your mind that so far as you are concerned hard times are over.

"Hurricane Hutch" is the most amazingly thrilling picture that was ever offered.

Stunt for stunt and thrill for thrill it is beyond argument the greatest picture of any length ever made

Motion Picture News

Creatures of Celluloid

THIS is written without knowledge of the true facts of the lamentable Arbuckle affair. It is fervently hoped that Arbuckle's name will be largely cleared. This much is certain, however, that the publicity thus far, has put another unbearable burden of infamy upon the motion picture. Every individual within the industry will in some degree, large or small, feel the stigma of it.

These blots are inerasable.

We wish only, in this connection, and hopefully, to put some solemn facts before every motion picture star.

They are these:

Few, very few, of you are artists, an artist being an individual who by dint of tremendous work, patience and long and supreme self-denial brings to perfection some particular endowment of talent.

You are—most all of you—just human beings.

Your picture stardom is largely the result of some one else's brains and money, plus, especially, the magic circulation of the motion picture.

Many of you are mere photographic types.

A story—generally created by another's brain; a director, by dint of hard work and years of theatrical experience; a staff of specialists; a studio plant organization, and equipment; an investment of speculative capital—a happy combination of these all-important factors and a brief but sustained series of such combinations put you into hundreds of celluloid prints.

The exhibitor puts his huge investment and risk and enterprise back of you.

In an incredibly short time and by a kind of magic your face and name are known to millions of people.

Out of their humdrum lives they weave fanciful illusions about you. They take you for the character you portray. They see their own dreams in you. They think of you not as you are but as they dream you are. They idolize you.

So when you appear in the living flesh they gape in wonderment and mob you in the streets. They write you letters. You become a household possession. The whole public takes you to its heart—adopts you.

Exhibitors book your pictures because the public knows you, and equally because most of them cannot advertise a show and rely upon your face and name on a poster or in print or electric lights to get the people in.

Like a snowball the advertisement of your name grows till producers compete sharply for your advertising worth. They pay you salaries which have become the astonishment of the modern world. The film made you and the film has to pay for its marvelous advertising power.

You bedeck yourself and strut with all the simple vanity of a peacock. You become as captious and cruel as any ship's sailor elevated by chance to the Sultanship of a South Sea Island. You think you have been touched by divine fire, whereas you've only been touched with celluloid.

This is only human, however; we are all of us vain. Your strut and assumed temperament do little harm to you if only you don't let the illusioned public see your naked humanness. Do your strutting within the studio wall. Keep the public fooled.

The serious menace of your stardom is this: You think your celluloid fame lifts you above man-made laws and the decencies of society and the sacred precepts of the home.

It doesn't.

On the contrary, you above all the people in the world have got to live the most carefully. A king owes no greater duty to his subjects, a clergyman to his congregation, a father to his family, than you owe your public. You owe a little something to those who have invested in you and made you and to those dependent upon you and to the rest of us in the same industry; but your greatest debt is to the public. You belong to the public. You have given them an illusion. Keep it; and cherish it. It's your whole capital stock. It's worth millions to you. Keep it by keeping your human self out of sight and out of print. You can't afford the slightest vagary, let alone the holy show you often make of yourself. Let only your screen personality be seen and known. Let the magic strip of celluloid carry you higher and higher in the firmament of illusion; but, for your own sake and for the sake of the rest of us, keep your feet always on the ground—and at that, don't let the public know that they are regular feet shod in leather,—and sometimes cloven.

If you don't protect yourself, the fair name of the industry, the huge fortunes at stake, the reputation of your own decent, hardworking element, then—and mark this well—the same forces that made you will rise up and put you out of business overnight, destroy you in the very same magic way you were created.

Goldwyn to Distribute Ben Hampton Productions

THE GOLDWYN DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION has contracted with the Federal Photoplays of California and Benjamin B. Hampton for the world distribution of all future Benjamin B. Hampton productions. Announcement of this deal was made during the week from the headquarters of the Goldwyn organization in New York. The contract, which was closed last week, covers a period of years, it is stated.

When asked for a statement relative to the newly announced Goldwyn-Hampton connections, W. W. Hodkinson, whose organization has been releasing the Hampton productions in the past, declared:

"Our contract, made with Mr. Hampton some years ago, was in line with our policy of encouraging new producers to put out their best product on an independent basis. Mr. Hampton's long literary experience convinced us that his ability could be turned to excellent advantage in the motion picture industry.

"The success of the Hampton productions which we released indicates the soundness of our judgment at that time. We still have a number of his pictures to be released, notably 'A Certain Rich Man,' 'Heart's Haven,' 'The Mysterious Rider,' and 'The Gray Dawn.' Upon the completion of this series we decided not to renew our contract with Mr. Hampton, since he has reached a degree of prominence in his profession whereby he can command complete financing for his productions from those organizations desiring to control their distribution.

"It has been our policy not to assume the complete financial obligation incident to the making of a picture, in the belief that so long as certain of the risk was shared by the producer we would have a freedom of action which would assure us the integrity of our selective principles.

"Our organization wishes Mr. Hampton every success in his new alliance. It is in itself an encouraging indication when an independent producer of Mr. Hampton's ability is called upon to strengthen the product of existing organizations."

According to the terms of the new contract as announced by the Goldwyn headquarters, Goldwyn will have exclusive distribution rights to all photoplays made from the novelty plays and original stories by Zane Grey, Harry Leon Wilson, William Allen White, Stewart Edward White, Clara Louise Burnham and Winston Churchill.

A part of the agreement expressly states that the production of all pictures shall be directly supervised by Benjamin B. Hampton, who is not permitted to associate himself with any other motion picture production activities during the life of the contract, it is stated.

The first picture will be a Zane Grey story, which is to be be completed and ready for release by the first of December. There will be four more during the following twelve months, selected from the works of the other authors associated with Mr. Hampton. It is understood, however, that three of the five pictures will be from the pen of Zane Grey.

Wm. Colvin to Go to Italy as Advisor to Ultra Film

Word has just been received that William G. Colvin is scheduled to sail for Naples, Italy, on September 20th. While abroad he will act in an advisory capacity to the Ultra Film Company of Rome, according to the announcement.

For over four years Mr. Colvin has been serving in an advisory capacity to Ernest Shipman and associates, and for the past eight months he has been working with Luporini Brothers and Ernest Shipman upon the Italian situation, during which time over fifty books and manuscripts have been read with a view to selecting the most promising vehicle for the first film productions.

While abroad he will discuss with Pina Monichelli, the famous Italian screen star, as to the nature of some of her future productions, carrying with him options on some noted stories for her consideration. He will also enter into conference with Enrico Guazzoni, the director of "Quo Vadis," who is about to embark upon other extensive productions for American exploitation.

'Round Europe With Rothacker

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER returned from Europe accompanied with the aerial commutating habit and an interesting close-up of the foreign situation. In the five hours he actually spent at Chicago headquarters before Rothackering back East it was possible to obtain the following interview:

"What about the tariff?" In England, France, Italy and Germany that was the question hurled at me. I frankly admitted my inability to speak other than as a humble individual, but did not hesitate to participate in the general discussion of this question, which seemingly is of great international importance.

As a topic of European conversation, next to the tariff, came conjectures as to what Eastman was going to do.

"All laboratory men in England were remarking about the rumored entrance of Eastman into the field. From every hand I heard that it was unofficially certain that before long Eastman would have a laboratory in London or vicinity. Of course, I mentioned that there was only one man who could confirm or deny the rumor—and that man was Mr. George Eastman—but I could officially state that the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company's plans for the operation of a London laboratory were progressing satisfactorily and that important announcements would appear shortly in the London trade papers.

"The fact that in Germany I actually saw completed plans for the construction of laboratories with a total capacity many times the film footage the German market is able to absorb may have very interesting significance. These German laboratory plans offer food for thought for those of us who are broadly interested in the developing and printing situation, and suggest that we mend our fences and watch our step.

"In England the motion picture business is not so good as usual, and they frankly admit it there. However, the Britons are optimistic. They feel certain that an era of prosperity for the industry is dawning gradually but surely.

"The Stoll and Hepworth companies, working at full speed, promise some productions of extraordinary merit for the market soon. At the Stoll plant I found J. Stuart Blackton very enthusiastic about his picture featuring Lady Diana Manners, which before long will be presented in America. He promises some great innovations with respect to Prizma. Through Commodore Blackton's courtesy I visited the premises near London where he proposes to build a motion picture city of the Brunton Lot type. The Stoll Company has installed a very complete laboratory to handle its own work.

"Throughout England the laboratories extended every courtesy and graciously showed me everything they had. At the Automatic Film Printers' Plant I saw some very unique printing and developing devices, which are promised to America soon. Mr. Jeapes of Topical Films also has a new automatic developing machine for which he claims much. At the new Famous Players-Lasky laboratory the tank and drum system prevails.

By A. L. Parker

"Through Al Kaufman's courtesy I visited the Famous Players Studio in London, which is beyond question the finest electrically equipped studio in England. Donald Crisp was busy there on 'Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush' and Fitzmaurice on 'The Three Live Ghosts.' New pictures have been started by John Robertson, who directed 'Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde' and 'Sentimental Tommy,' and by Harley Knowles, who created 'Carnival.'

"I found our own Harry Reichenbach loose in London. The publicity king created some stir with his novel exploitation of 'The Bigamist."

"To Mr. Greenhill's courtesy I owe the experience of an inspection of the enormous new Brifco plant at Leatherhead, where it is proposed to produce enough raw stock to supply England and some other countries. At the time of my visit the old Brifco plant was active, but the new buildings unoccupied.

"Colonel Fred Levey of Louisville was very much in evidence in London—in his usual dignified but effective manner spreading the gospel of First National. And who should I meet but David Howells, Earl Mammons and Charles Christie. I must say that the visits of such representative Americans do much toward bringing about the proper feeling between the British and American industry.

"Mr. Berman's exploitation work is certainly keeping United Artists on the English map. He is easily one of the most popular Yankees in the London film colony.

"I saw Sidney Garret dashing about London Town. Rumor has it he has something up his sleeve in the way of a new distributing organization for Associated Exhibitors.

"Manager Smith at the Goldwyn offices was discovered in conference with Joe Godsoll regarding activities of promising importance.

"J. G. Wainwright has been ringing the bell with scenic serials. Watch for him in America in about a month with a new animal series.

"J. Frank Brockliss is negotiating with American interests, the name of which he did not divulge, for the production in England of big international stories, to be made by a famous American director.

"Ben Hicks of Apollo Trading Co. has become a persistent propagandist—for bigger and better London theatres.

"In Paris I had the good fortune to have a splendid visit with Mr. Gaumont, who radiated optimism. New theatres are springing up in the devastated districts. Mr. Gaumont reported he had solved the natural color problem and to reveal the results to America soon.

"In Paris I heard that J. Gordon Edwards was putting on a new Fox picture in Italy.

"Adolphe Osso has the most beautiful motion picture offices in Paris, where he presides as the French head of Paramount distribution. He expects his company to produce in France this season.

"Luck was with me throughout my European trip, but never more so than when I was able to induce Al Kaufman to make the trip to Berlin with me.

"Big German film producers seem anxious to correct the impression prevailing in America that films can be made very cheaply in Germany. I was told that 'Deception' cost seven to eight million marks and 'The Golem' about three million marks. I was informed that 'The Indian Tomb,' which Joe May is now making, will run into about twenty million marks, and that the next big Lubitsch picture, 'The Wife of Pharaoh,' approximately the same figure.

"Important men formerly with the UFA organization have founded a new organization known as the EFA, an abbreviation for European Film Alliance. The new organization has Paul Davidson as general production head and includes such artists as Ernest Lubitsch, Joe May, Max Reinhardt, Emil Jannings, Harry Liedke, Bosserman and Paul Wegener.

"The Wonderful Poli Negri is even more wonderful in person than on the screen and far younger in appearance.

"The EFA studio-ranch, within 20 minutes of Berlin, rivals our California studio-ranches, both in size and equipment. We visited the ranch where Lubitsch was creating 'The Wife of Pharaoh.' To give some idea of the size of sets, I might relate that I saw two men standing in one of the ears of a property sphinx—and they were not crowded. At another part of the lot Lubitsch was directing thousands of extras in a battle scene. After witnessing Lubitsch in action I can advisedly say that those Americans who have acclaimed him one of the world's greatest directors are certainly not wrong.

"On invitation of Dr. Kurt Oppenheim I visited the enormous plant of Bitterfield, where Afga raw stock is made. This visit was really a revelation. The Afga factories were humming with activity. Even then new buildings were being actually constructed and others planned."

"Depression Exaggerated" Says Sam Morris

Back from Cross-Country Tour, Selznick Official Predicts Fine Business for 1921-22

MAINTAINING that the true extent of the depression in the motion picture exhibition field has been exaggerated, Sam E. Morris of the Selznick organization, who has just returned from a country-wide tour of exchange centres, declares business has been generally good throughout the country and promises to be very much better in the coming months.

"Exhibitors are showing a willingness to book pictures in a way that leaves no doubt as to their absolute confidence in the business that they are anticipating during the coming term. The number of long-term contracts being written and the frequency of requests from exhibitors for non-cancellable contracts prove that they are experiencing no panicky feeling as to the stability of their business in the future," stated Mr. Morris during the course of an interview with a representative of the News on Tuesday morning, September 13, at the Selznick headquarters in New York.

"In certain localities for brief intervals conditions have been poor," continued Mr. Morris, "but the depression has in many instances redounded to the benefit of the industry by ridding it of the 'fly-by-night' theatre owner; the really good exhibitor, who handles the exhibition of motion pictures as a straightforward merchandising proposition to be conducted on a sound business basis, has come through unharmed and confident in his ability to weather any future slumps that may come his way. In the extreme West there has been no depression at all. Business has been good, and the forecast indicates even better business for the future."

Mr. Morris pointed out that his observations are based on a careful study of conditions in the field, and he undertook to describe the mode of procedure followed in arriving at conclusions as to existent conditions. Each of the exchange managers of the Selznick branch offices was interviewed by himself and Mr. Myron Selznick. The branch manager's report was then taken and checked up with the opinions of some of the leading exhibitors in the same territory, who were also visited by the Selznick executives, explained Mr. Morris.

"The exchange men greatly discounted the talk of poor business in various parts of the country. The exhibitors by their readiness to book pictures on a long-term basis and by their willingness in many instances to pay real prices showed they have fullest confidence in the soundness of their enterprises. And what struck me particularly was the call for non-cancellabel contracts, thus proving that they anticipated no reason for cancellations in the future owing to any decline in the business at their houses."

The trip of the Selznick officials was prompted by a two-fold purpose: first, to put Mr. Morris, as vice-president in charge of distribution, in intimate touch with actual conditions in the field, and to give him the opportunity of meeting personally the branch managers who will conduct in their respective territories the sales campaign for Selznick's 1921-1922 product; and, secondly, to acquaint Myron Selznick, as vice-president in charge of production, with the ideas of exchange managers and exhibitors visited as to just what the public is demanding in the way of motion picture entertainment.

Mr. Selznick and Morris in their trip across the country established successive headquarters at New York, Detroit, Chicago, Kansas City, and Los Angeles. At each of these places sales meetings were held, at which all the Selznick branch managers from the surrounding film centres were present. The first sales meeting was held in New York City on August 8th. The trip westward started on August 11th. The Selznick executives spent two or three days at each of their stopping places, visiting in person as many Select branch offices as was possible. They arrived back in New York on last Saturday, September 10th.

Chicago Film Board of Trade Is Organized

26 Leading Exchanges Band Together; Model on N. Y. Board to Correct Abuses

REPRESENTATIVES of twenty-six of Chicago's leading exchanges have completed the preliminary organization of the Chicago Film Board of Trade, which will operate in connection with the Hoy Reporting Agency and along the lines which have been so successfully pursued by the New York Film Board of Trade.

The decision to organize was reached at a luncheon at the Congress Hotel on September 9th, at which it was also voted to subscribe to the Hoy service. Arrangements already have been completed whereby C. B. Hoy personally will come to Chicago and install a branch of his agency and arrange for the work which he will carry on in connection with the Chicago organization.

Among the objects of the Chicago Film Board of Trade, according to temporary officials, is to co-operate with exhibitors to improve trade conditions and combat legislation and other matters which are detrimental to the industry. One of the evils within the trade which will be cleaned up, if possible, is the practise of exhibitors making contracts for service with exchanges which will be impossible for exhibitors to carry out. It is common knowledge that many exhibitors have already booked double the number of pictures that they can possibly set playing dates for during the next twelve months, which works hardships on both exhibitors and exchanges and, it is claimed by exchange men, should not be allowed.

While the Board of Trade intends to see that exhibitors carry out their contracts with the exchanges, it is also especially provided in the by-laws of the board that exhibitors will have the right to file complaints against exchanges with the grievance committee of the board, which shall be given the same attention and unbiased consideration as claims of exchanges.

It was pointed out by one of the members of the new organization that 346 claims were filed with the New York Film Board of Trade by exhibitors during 1921, 334 of which were settled to the satisfaction of the exhibitor, and that a grand total of claims involving $596,653 were handled by the New York Board, and of this total, claims involving $565,993, or 82 per cent of all claims, were satisfactorily adjusted. This, according to the Chicago exchange men, shows what may be accomplished by an organization similar to the one just formed.

Misrepresentation by salesmen will receive the attention of the Board and all salesmen will be given uniform instructions against making false or misleading statements, and those violating the instructions will be called on the carpet and on repetition of the offense the exchange hiring the salesman will be required to dismiss him.

Numerous other matters looking toward the improvement of conditions within the industry also will be taken up.

Social affairs also will be arranged from time to time in order to allow the exchange managers to get better acquainted, and one of the first planned will be a banquet in the near future at which all film salesmen in the territory will be guests of the organization.

Eastman Announces Withdrawal from Film Laboratory Field

Conferences with Allied Laboratories Result in Decision that Conditions Do Not Necessitate Move at This Time —No Fear of German Raw Stock

RUMORS current for the past two weeks, as told in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS, were given definite form on Thursday by an official announcement from the Eastman Kodak Company of its withdrawal from the film laboratory field. The announcement, coming scarcely a month after the news that Eastman had purchased three big laboratories, is as follows:

Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 14, 1921.

Owing to the statement of the Allied Film Laboratories, Inc., that it is their intention to use only American-made film, the menace from the German-made film has become so lessened that we have decided not to operate our own laboratories. It was unwillingly that we entered this field in the photographic industry and we have no intention of reentering it so long as the business of American film manufacturers is not threatened with extinction by the importation of foreign, and particularly of German-made, film.

In view of the recently reduced price of raw film it is apparent that the producers will be able, on regular releases, to obtain processed films on American Stock at three and a quarter cents a foot. In making our reduction it was the ultimate consumer whom we had in mind.

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY.

When shown the statement issued by Mr. Eastman, the following announcement was made by the Allied Film Laboratories Association, Inc., which now has headquarters at 220 West 42nd Street, New York City.

"As we stated last week, a committee from the Allied Film Laboratories Association, Inc., has been in conference over a period of several weeks with Mr. George Eastman and Mr. Jules E. Brulatour. These meetings have produced definite and highly pleasing results whereby the entire motion picture industry will benefit.

"Our Committee was received with the utmost courtesy by Mr. Eastman and Mr. Brulatour, and the difficulties with which the laboratory situation has been fraught for several months past were carefully analyzed and considered, and we found on the part of both Mr. Eastman and Mr. Brulatour an earnest desire not to do our business an injury, but, on the contrary, to help us create better business conditions that would reflect beneficially upon the whole industry by raising the standards of motion picture film manufacture and the processes of printing and developing.

"With the active cooperation of the Eastman Kodak Company we are proceeding upon the basis that the American motion picture industry must be preserved for America and Americans, and that in maintaining the supremacy of our industry's position of today, the motion picture industry of the world will be benefitted.

"In purchasing three of the large laboratories in the East, Mr. Eastman had in mind no interference with the independent laboratories, which we have built and developed, but rather he foresaw conditions, which, if permitted to go on would jeopardize the industry in this country. We are aware that if the independent laboratories and American manufacturers of raw film stock do not eliminate these conditions the resulting confusion will present an opportunity for the German dye trust, through its raw film manufacturing subsidiary, to invade this country, not only with its raw stock, but with laboratories and, within a short time, drive us out of business. We conceive it to be our duty, as does the Eastman Kodak Company conceive it to be its duty, to protect this business, which has prospered and grown through the investment of American dollars for the development of American industry.

"We were pleased to find that the Eastman Kodak Company's interest is not confined to the betterment of its own product, on which it is spending huge sums, but extends as well to the theatre and practically every other branch of the industry. The Kodak Research Laboratory has been highly successful in improving the conditions that affect projection, the lighting problem in theatres, and safety; all of which are proving of great benefit to the industry and to the public.

"Members of the Allied Film Laboratories Association are a unit in their stand for American raw film stock. The Association is stronger today than ever and constantly growing. Such an organization, bound by strict rules and a creed of fair dealing, insures to the producer, distributor and exhibitor a well organized body of business men who can be depended upon not only for fair dealing but to aid any cause which has as its object the protection and betterment of the entire industry, and to fight any menace to the industry's welfare."

M. P. T. O. A. Official Statement on Arbuckle Films

CLOSING its official statement on the Arbuckle case, which calls upon the public to render the same judgment on the motion picture industry that it would on the ministry, the banking profession, etc., the Public Welfare Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America declares:

"While various States and local associations have already declared that they will not show Roscoe Arbuckle pictures until he shall have purged himself of this charge, no more so shall we tolerate the showing on our screens of any picture of the unfortunate Virginia Rappe. We make this observation because our notice has been called to the fact that a certain distributing company has decided to reissue an old comedy picture showing Miss Rappe, who appears in a very minor and inconspicuous part, and we want the people to know that they will never turn morbidity into dollars with our assistance."

J. D. Williams wired all First National exchanges on Thursday instructions that the home office would refuse to honor any contracts signed since Sunday, September 11, on pictures in which Virginia Rappe appeared. All prints of such pictures were ordered withdrawn.

Urge Tax Removal

Two briefs, each calling for alleviation of taxation at present imposed on the picture industry, were filed with the Senate Finance Committee the past week.

The National Association, through Chairman Rogers, requested the removal of the 5 per cent film sales tax and the reduction of the admission tax 50 per cent, together with the elimination of the seating tax.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners in another brief urged removal of all taxes, stating that they at present amounted to 20 per cent of the gross admission of theatres.

Missouri-Kansas Exhibitors in Convention

Theatre-Owners of Two States Meet in Joint Assembly to Act on Common Problems

SISTER states, in which motion picture exhibitors have heretofore struggled separately with their problems, assembled on a common meeting ground at the first Missouri-Kansas joint convention at the Hotel Baltimore in Kansas City, Mo., on Monday and Tuesday of this week.

Mutual troubles were discussed, vital problems analyzed, and plans laid to stand united in the future for the strengthening and progress of the industry. Men regarded as capable of coping with threatening situations as well as men powerful in political life were among the speakers who pledged their fullest co-operation with the exhibitors.

The morning session on Monday was devoted chiefly to reports and routine business, while in the afternoon a large joint meeting was held, 400 exhibitors being present. The Rev. Fred V. Loos, of Liberty, Mo., a prominent minister, not only openly denounced half-baked reformers but also declared that the screen of today is superior to both the church and the school in the educating of mankind.

Senator David M. Proctor, of Missouri, told the exhibitors the exact reasons why the two proposed censorship bills were killed at the Missouri capital at the last session of the legislature. Senator Procter said specifically that the film industry was not to be confined to the boundaries of cities or states, but was a national affair and that the only effective censor was public opinion. "Missouri does not care for a censorship board, ninety-nine per cent political and one per cent efficient," said Senator Procter. "The majority of persons who are advocating censorship boards are either seeking appointments for themselves or for their friends."

A theatre party on Monday evening at the Gayety was followed by a midnight banquet, at which Richard Hopkins, attorney-general of Kansas, was toastmaster. Among the speakers who pledged their alliance with the exhibitors were Senator Charles Ridgeway, of Kansas and Ralph Ellis, editor of the Kansas City Journal.

No session was held on Tuesday morning and the afternoon sessions, which were originally designated to be separated, were combined into a joint business meeting of the exhibitors of the two states.

A resolution was adopted, urging a boycott of all films featuring Roscoe Arbuckle until the film star shall have been proved not guilty of the offense with which he is now charged.

Other resolutions were adopted, opposing the present admission tax, urging that pressure be brought to bear on the bill now in Congress regarding music tax, endorsing the hearty co-operation received from the M. P. T. O. of A. and the Missouri Public Service Bureau, and condemning prices of posters, photographs, and slides as too high and out of reason.

Charles T. Sears, of Brookfield, Mo., was re-elected president of the Missouri organization. The other officers elected were: first vice-president, I. W. Rodgers, Poplar Bluff, Mo.; second vice-president, S. E. Wilhoit, Springfield, Mo.; third vice-president, G. W. Summers, Unionville; secretary, Lawrence E. Goldman, Kansas City, Mo.; treasurer, Jack Truitt, Sedalia, Mo.; sergeant-at-arms, E. T. Burgan, Kansas City, Mo.; assistant sergeant-at-arms, B. O. Jones, Carrolton, Mo.; counsel, Lawrence E. Goldman, Kansas City, Mo.

Executive Committee: J. I. Wright, Divioro; W. P. Cuff, Chillicothe; W. W. Wertenberg, St. Joseph; C. H. Burkey, Kansas City; T. S. Goodnight, Warrensburg; J. R. Pratt, Fulton; Joseph Mogler, St. Louis; J. H. Gentnor, St. Louis; A. C. Norwein, Bonne Terre; O. W. McCutcheon, Charleston, and E. T. Peters, Bunceton.

Kansas Association officers were elected at the meeting last March.

The following committees were named:

Resolutions: I. W. Rogers, Poplar Bluff, Mo.; James Haggard, Nevada, Mo.; C. W. Hunt, Higginsville, Mo.; A. M. Rees, Wellsville, Mo.; C. A. Bessier, Eldorado Springs, Mo.

Blue Laws: W. P. Cuff, Chillicothe, Mo.; D. J. Michael, Parksville, Mo.; Ben Levy, Joplin, Mo.; W. W. Smith, Springfield, Mo.; David Harding, Kansas City, Mo.

Ways, Means and Finance: A. F. Baker, St. Joseph, Mo.; C. R. Wilson, Liberty, Mo.; W. P. Cuff, Chillicothe, Mo.; A. C. Norwein, Bonne Terre, Mo.; S. E. Wilhoit, Springfield, Mo.; Jack Truitt, Sedalia, Mo.; Joseph Mogler, St. Louis, Mo.

Convention: W. C. Sears, Brookfield, Mo.; Jack Truitt, Sedalia, Mo.; H. Burgan, Kansas City, Mo.

Auditing: T. C. Goodnight, Warrensburg, Mo.; H. J. Nash, St. Louis, Mo.; C. Travis, Liberal, Mo.

Nominating: C. H. Burkey, Kansas City, Mo.; I. W. Rogers, Poplar Bluff, Mo.; B. Peters, Bunceton, Mo.; H. Boussad, Kansas City, Mo.; G. W. Summers, Unionville, Mo.; Jack Truitt, Sedalia, Mo.; Charles Goldman, St. Louis, Mo.

Constitution and By-Laws: J. R. Pratt, Fallon, Mo.; Sam Migoloff, St. Louis, Mo.; J. E. Hayes, Moberly, Mo.

The following telegram was received from Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. of A.:

"Congratulations to the motion picture theatre owners of Missouri and Kansas in convention assembled. In extending my greetings I am performing a most pleasant duty. Your organization, through its able and efficient committees, leaders and members, has materially assisted the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in developing the great strength that it today possesses. You have answered every call and have given your fullest co-operation at all times, and we are counting on a continuance of your support. I wish to call your attention to the necessity of concentrated action against taxation and the adoption of a resolution outlining the necessity for relief, particularly against the five per cent film rental tax. Best wishes for a most successful convention.

(Signed) "SYDNEY S. COHEN."

Late News from the Coast

RICHARD WALLIS and William Kidder, executives of the Charles Ray company are on their way to the East, supposedly to negotiate a new contract for Ray. The present contract terminates with the picture now in production.

Thomas H. Ince will make a policy announcement shortly. He promises that it will be a notable departure from his past production policy. Victor Mapes Collier's play "The Hottentot," will be made into a comedy special, probably the first release under the new arrangements.

D. S. Dickerson, former Governor of Nevada, brought the prints of the Dempsey-Carpentier fight to Los Angeles last week, was arrested, and fined $1,000. The pictures were booked at Miller's theatre and opened to big business.

May Allison has announced her marriage on Thanksgiving Day of last year in Greenwich, Conn., to Robert Ellis, a director in the East. Mr. Ellis is expected on the Coast shortly.

The City Park Commission has advised the producing companies of an increase from one dollar per day to five dollars for five or less actors for the use of Park locations. The charges increase with the number of actors used.

The Affiliated Picture Interests has filed a petition for the repeal of the censorship ordinance creating a commissioner of films. The matter was referred to the welfare committee. Mayor Cryer has assured Manager Edward Roberts, of Affiliated that he would not veto the repeal of the ordinance by the City Council.

Daring Robberies Staged in Indianapolis Theatres

The Ohio, Photoplay, and Murat theatres in Indianapolis, Ind., were the scenes of daring robberies at an early hour on Sunday morning. Although they battered the safes with a sledge hammer, the two bandits failed to obtain much loot. The burglars gained access to the interiors in each instance by simply walking through the front entrance, it is reported.

Their total haul consisted of $225, stolen from a box beneath the safe of the Murat and five dollars taken from the janitor at the Ohio.

Big "U" Laboratory Forces Vote for Pay Cut

Proposal Made to Reduce 48 Working Hours to 43, Thus Eliminating Work on Saturday

ANOTHER instance of the working of Industrial Democracy at the Universal Laboratory at Fort Lee, N. J., has just been disclosed by the announcement from the Universal office of the adoption of a joint Senate and House bill, which has the effect of reducing the payroll of the factory eighteen per cent.

The action taken by the Universal employes in the laboratory was a voluntary one, states the Universal home office, and followed a plain statement of the laboratory situation from the labor standpoint made to a mass meeting of the laboratory workers by R. H. Cochrane and Edwin F. Murphy.

After a thorough discussion, following this mass meeting, it was proposed to cut the working hours of the employes from 48 to 43, thus eliminating all Saturday work in the plant and permitting a complete shutdown of the factory from Friday night until Monday morning. There was no cut suggested or required in actual wages, it is stated, and, as a matter of fact, the arrangement under which the employes are working with the bonus system will result in very little actual reduction of their individual pay.

The elimination, however, of this Saturday work means a reduction in the payroll to the Universal of a little more than eighteen per cent, a saving which is extremely gratifying to the officials of the Universal, as well as to the officers and members of the Industrial Democracy.

The mass meeting also passed unanimously the following resolutions:

"Whereas, the general conditions of business are unsettled and unsatisfactory and, to all people who THINK, it is quite evident that prices should and must come down and

"Whereas, many plants in our industry are either shut down or running part-time and those operating are now, and for some considerable time to come will continue, doing business at no profit, and

"Whereas, such condition, and the destructive competition which is sure to follow jeopardizes steady work for the members of the Universal Organization and tends to lessen the confidence of the investor in the stock of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., be it

"Resolved, that we the employes in Mass meeting assembled do hereby pledge our earnest, individual and collective support to our Company in the plans for turning these difficult times into mutual good. Good for the Employes, for the Stockholders and for the Public through more intelligent, individual and collective SERVICE.

"Be It Further Resolved, that we tender our sincere thanks to the Officials of this Company for extending to us their full confidence in business matters."

A Word to the Wise

Mr. Wm. A. Johnston, Editor,
Motion Picture News,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

In the beginning of a rather speculative Fall season, I am writing to voice my disapproval of some of the advertising campaigns which are being conducted by the bigger first run theatres of the country. With the industry being attacked on all sides by censorship agitation we need use common sense in our appeal to get the public into our theatres.

Take for instance the enclosed copy from one of the big ads running in today's paper. Do you believe it necessary to make an appeal for patronage by using such Big Moments from the picture as they have done? I have personally seen this attraction and believe it could be sold in a better way making the appeal to women on the strength of the author and not trying to bring out the side that is risque.

If we are to get proper recognition from the opposition we should start in by using discretion in our advertising. An editorial along this line would no doubt improve this evil.

Very truly yours,

Elwyn M. Simons,
New Family Theatre,
Adrian, Mich.

This letter speaks for itself. Mr. Simons is right. The wave of censorship last year was very largely brought on by the advertising of the picture. The newspaper advertisement submitted by Mr. Simons is right in with the deluge we had a year ago. It is the same deliberate effort to SUGGEST immorality in a picture which is utterly free of it. This sort of thing has got to stop. It is up to reputable producers, distributors and exhibitors to see that it does stop. As a matter of fact this sort of advertising isn't good advertising; it isn't good business. More people are kept away than attracted by it. The time is fast coming—it should already be here—when the kind of advertising that pays will be the kind that assures people that the picture advertised is a good and wholesome thing to see, that this has been a big factor in its selection.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Six months ago, in a report to Mr. Laemmle of the progress made under Industrial Democracy, a great deal of emphasis was laid upon the saving effected in the plant, the reduction of waste and the greater producing power of the average employe. It was considered that a waste of only 3.01, representing over 100 per cent of saving in this particular, was a remarkable evidence of the efficiency of the new system. So it was, but even that reduction looks infinitesimal in comparison with waste as it exists in the plant today. In last week's report, waste in all departments is .82, and for several weeks during the summer it was as low as .68, an unheard of percentage in the laboratory business. In addition to this, the production per man in January, after a six months' trial of Industrial Democracy, had been increased exactly 25 per cent. In August there had been a 25 per cent increase over that of January.

National Ass'n at Work on Film Freight Problem

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, through its transportation committee, is now endeavoring to secure an amendment to the freight classification of used motion picture film to permit the shipping of such film by freight without its actual mutilation.

P. H. Stilson, chairman of the transportation committee, and Albert de Roode, counsel for the committee, have arranged for a hearing early in October before a joint committee of the Official Classification Committee, the Western Classification Committee and the Southern Classification Committee, at which arguments will be presented on behalf of the industry to abolish the present requirement of the railroads whereby all used film must be scrapped before it can be transmitted by freight from the film exchanges to their home offices.

A. M. P. A. Elect Officers for Ensuing Year

A gala meeting commemorated the election of officers of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers for the ensuing year on September 8. The meeting marked the association's return to the renovated Cafe Boulevard.

Wells Hawks, whose appointment by Secretary of the Navy Denby as publicity officer for the Navy had just been announced, was present to make his maiden speech in his new capacity. The other impromptu speeches were made by Harry Reichenback and Adam Hull Shirk, west coast publicity chief of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

With one exception, the slate of officers for the ensuing year was elected by acclamation as reported by the nominating committee. The exception was Harry Reichenback, who pleaded pressure of other business as cause for declining a nomination to the Board of Directors. His place was filled by Vincent Trotta.

The complete slate as elected was: President, C. L. Yearsley; Vice-President, Jerome Beatty; Secretary, Tom Wiley; Treasurer, Victor Shapiro; Editor of the Year Book, Walter F. Eberhardt; Business Manager of Year Book, J. Irving Greene.

Gang Attacks Jos. Goodstein in Front of Theatre

Joseph J. Goodstein, general manager of the Arrow Photoplay Company of Denver and owner of a string of theatres in Philadelphia and the mid-West, was attacked by a gang of young ruffians when he refused to admit one of their number to his theatre at Denver recently, and now is in the hospital in a serious condition as a result of the attack. George Cohen, 17, has been arrested on the charge of having participated in the attack. Other arrests will follow, it is stated.

To Please One Woman—
A corking good picture and pleased our fans hugely. Business was splendid. (South.)

Barclay's Idea Works Two Ways

Novel Exploitation for "Mother O'Mine" Put Over at Johnstown

A double-action publicity stunt that gave the current attraction plenty of advertising, made the showhouse one of the chief topics of discussion all over town, and incidentally won first honors and a big silver cup in a convention parade, was put over in connection with the showing of "Mother O' Mine," in the Nemo theatre at Jamestown, Pa., operated by the Grand Amusement Co.

The Pennsylvania State Elks Association held its Fifteenth Annual Convention in Johnstown the week of August 23, winding up with a parade on Thursday afternoon, in which about 8,000 Elks from all over the state marched.

George Panagotacos, president of the Grand Amusement Co., has a big Packard limousine. Six prizes, silver cups, were offered for the best decorated cars in line on the day of the parade. Managing Director L. W. Barclay called in Joseph Simons, decorator for the concern, and gave him a design for the machine—a reproduction of the floral-covered cars that line up in the annual parade at Pasadena, Cal. Simons went to work.

On the parade day, the car, covered entirely, roof and all, with an imitation white chrysanthemum background, trimmed in purple streamers and dotted all over the front, sides and rear with imitation purple chrysanthemums, carried Messrs. Panagotacos and Barclay, with some friends along the line of march. There was a continual chorus of "ohs" and "ahs" from the thousands who lined the streets to see the procession. At the conclusion of the parade, the judges awarded the Nemo first prize, a silver cup 18 inches high.

The machine was kept on the downtown streets all day and evening after the parade, and served better than a 24-sheet stand as advertising. The beauty of the decorations stopped the passersby, and the advertising signs on "Mother O' Mine" sent them to the theatre.

The Nemo management took advantage of another feature of the convention. On parade day, aviators flew over the route of the procession and dropped messages and prize numbers among the crowds. Twenty parachutes that were let down from the planes bore numbers calling for double tickets for "Mother O' Mine" at the Nemo.

In arranging the theatre front, the same idea as that used for the car was carried out.

"Way Down East" Prologue Presented at Brooklyn Strand

With the aid of the right stage properties, light shadings and properly garbed singers and dancers, Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, presented a prologue for "Way Down East," that started the film off with a bang.

A picket fence ran the length of the stage in the style one finds so often in the rural districts. Set foliage and a back drop showing a semi-pastoral maritime scene with emphasized rock and lichen covered projections furnished just such a countryside scene as is found in New England, not too colorful, but made warm with the glow of early evening lights from the projection room.

The sky of the back drop was tinted with a rosy crimson relieved below with a filmy blue, a rich sunset effect. The curtain revealed naught, but the scenic art presentation. A country maiden came from left, her long ribboned hat dangling at her side. She wore a print dress and advanced to center stage behind the picket fence. She loitered here where another dancer garbed as a farm hand, straw hat, jumper, etc., stole up behind her and greeted her. The pair then came through the gate to front stage center where they gave a pretty rustic dance.

The Mark Strand mixed quartette attired as the principal characters of the picture came on to sing "Love's Old Sweet Song," while the couple staged an impromptu love scene at one side of the stage.

Inexpensive Exploitation Gets Results at Richmond

The want ad column, in which was inserted the following:

"Wanted—A young lady with dark eyes, dark hair, about 4 feet, 6 in. tall; very beautiful and about 19 years old; Answers to the name of Constance Binney. If you ever find "Such a Little Queen," bring her to the Alhambra and Opera house, Thursday, September 1st. A Royal throne is waiting for her" was the first exploitation gun which Anna Bell Ward, publicity director for the Phoenix Amusement Co. of Richmond, Ky., fired in a campaign staged for the showing of "Such a Little Queen."

The day before the picture opened at Alhambra theatre and the Opera house, two of the Phoenix string, sandwich men were sent out displaying a picture of Constance Binney and appropriate selling talk.

On the morning of the first day's run, a post card with a cut of the star and a "royal proclamation" was mailed to a thousand telephone subscribers.

The papers were used on the same day with big display ads.

The result of the campaign, Miss Ward states was "Big dollars to the box office, some new customers and a good many old ones renewed."

Candy Company Aids Salt Lake City Exhibitor

The McDonald Candy Co., the largest concern of its kind in Utah, has announced the Betty Compson Chocolates as its latest contribution to confections. Incidentally the candies will make their debut in towns simultaneously with the playing of "At the End of the World."

Window tie-up secured for "At the End of the World," playing recently at the Paramount-Empress theatre, Salt Lake City. Story appears on this page

George Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre, Salt Lake, and Rick Ricketson, the Paramount exploiteer, sold the company on the idea after six weeks dickering. But it was worth it. Twelve windows were landed to exploit both the chocolates and the pictures. These were decorated and paid for by the candy company. The theatre also gave a "candy matinee," at which small boxes of Betty Compson Chocolates were given away.

Ricketson has arranged from Mrs. Compson, mother of the star, to be present at the Ogden, Utah showing, and distribute the sample chocolates from a booth. Mrs. Compson is a native of Ogden. The candy tie-up is available everywhere for the showing of the picture.

Unusual Lobby Display Used at Philadelphia

Frank D. Buhler, general manager of the Stanley Company of Philadelphia and H. D. Cherry, house manager for the Stanley's Victoria theatre, have just put over a campaign for "A Tale of Two Worlds," that brought great business in spite of a belated heat wave was playing in opposition.

The lobby of the theatre was hung with Chinese lanterns, while above the ticket booth was a genuine Chinese gong, rigged with a hard fibre mallet fastened to an ordinary trip-bell and worked by the cashier when the latter was not selling tickets. Manager Cherry says this gong was the real money maker of the engagement.

But he did not stop with that. In front of the theatre was placed a large cut-out figure of Buddha, made by the house artist. The front and the back pieces were separated by eighteen inches to allow for a sixteen inch fan. The front piece carried the title of the picture and on the back was fastened a four-light strip with red lamps and a string of baby ribbon. The result was that passers-by, prompted by curiosity, came up the steps to take a look, and were turned into the ticket line.

Two circles were placed on the attraction sign. They were four feet in diameter and outlined with 33 10-watt lamps and revolved by two old machine motors, belted down to a speed of 1 to 18, thus giving the effect of the rotating globe. The ushers and doorman were costumed by a theatrical costumer, helping to carry out the Chinese atmosphere.

Original Prologue Written by Knoblock

"Three Musketeers" Presentation Number at New York

Lyric by Noted Author

A PROLOGUE written by Edward Knoblock is being used most successfully at each performance of the "The Three Musketeers" now playing at the Lyric theatre, New York, under the direction of Joseph L. Plunkett.

Mr. Knoblock's effort is in verse, and he has concentrated in it the spirit of romance, its theme, and its atmosphere. His reputation in letters as an internationally successful dramatist and author, gives Mr. Knoblock's lines particular significance. The text of the prologue is as follows:

Out of the shadows of the past
As from a faded tapestry
Of Time's procession slow and vast
I step to bid you bear with me;
The while your fancy I engage
To look upon another age.

An age, when on the human tide
The plumed wave of chivalry
Rose to its summit, sweeping wide
Across a Nation's mighty sea;
France never shone a brighter power
Than in this high, romantic hour!

Louis the Thirteenth reigned as King,
And by his side the gentle Queen
Smiled softly as the sun in spring
Upon a people, all serene.
Yet stay! What is yon fiery cloud
That o'er the heavens casts a shroud?

The Cardinal's red mantle sets
Aflame the court and country wide,
And vile Intrigue spreads out its nets
To tangle monarchs in their pride.
The Queen of pure, untarnished name
Is threatened with eternal shame!

Lo! From the South of sunny France
There rides a champion, keen as steel,
Whose courage snatches every chance
To make the boldest plotter kneel;
'Tis D'Artagnan of dauntless youth,
Straight stabs his blade, defending truth.

Rare honor and reward are his!
But best, the friendship tendered him
By Athos, Porthos, Aramis,
Which fills his fortune to the brim:—
And shall endure while life doth run
With "One for all and all for one!"

So follow me to France of old,
To fiery days when hearts beat high,
When blood was young, and hate was bold,
When sword crossed sword to dare and die.
For love and honor gloried then,
When life was life, and men were men!

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

Steve Bennis, of the Lincoln theatre, Lincoln, Illinois, reports that he finally has won the fight for Sunday movies, which he has persistently waged since 1908, having been defeated at three general elections on the proposition to allow motion picture theatres to operate on Sunday, during that time. Mr. Bennis, however, continued to work with the city council and now has succeeded in having an ordinance passed allowing motion picture theatres to open their doors on Sunday. Mr. Bennis is determined to show his fellow townsmen that Sunday shows can have a moral as well as amusement value, and is booking his pictures for Sunday showing with great care. The first to be exhibited will be "The Great Redeemer," followed by "The Old Nest," "Mother O' Mine," and others of similar high class.

Manager Lesserman, of Universal, reports that Lubiner & Trinz have booked "The Rage of Paris," the first Universal feature starring Miss Dupont, for pre-release showing at the Pantheon and Senate. This special feature was signed for by Lubliner & Trinz representatives for a full week at each house after a careful review of the picture.

Edward P. Steinberg, well known to the motion picture industry of Chicago, is engaged to marry Miss Anna Lubliner, daughter of Mrs. Goodman Lubliner of 4338 Clarendon avenue.

A trio of well known salesmen have been added to Robertson-Cole's Chicago staff within the last few days. They include H. A. Washburn, who will make the key cities of the territory; O. Wooden, formerly of Select, who will cover the south side territory, and Paul Deoto, who will cover the west side of Chicago.

Manager Clyde Eckhart is back at his desk after spending several days in New York conferring with Fox officials there. He is very much pleased over the way the first of the Fox super specials are getting over and says the outlook for good business is excellent.

George De Kruif, of Exhibitors Supply Company, has returned from a trip to Minneapolis where he inspected the branch located there. The supply business in that territory is showing a decided improvement, according to Mr. De Kruif, who states that the steady increase in mail business at the Chicago headquarters is also a very encouraging feature of the business situation at present.

W. D. Burford is back on the job after a vacation spent at Petoskey, Michigan. Mr. Burford, as usual, divides his time between Aurora and Chicago and is kept very busy looking after the interests of the powerful chain of theatres in which he is interested, as well as filling his duties as secretary of the Illinois Exhibitors Alliance.

District Manager Givens headed a delegation of department heads and the Paramount sales force which motored to Fox Lake, Saturday, for a day's outing in celebration of Paramount week and the record business done during that period. Outside of the splendid luncheon and dinner, a feature of the outing was a baseball game between the married men and the single men, in which the Benedicks went down to defeat to the tune of eight to four. The batteries were Givens and Busch for the married men and Bernstein and Gore were their opponents. Manager Givens proved himself a regular pitcher, holding the bachelors without a hit up to the seventh when the married men's team went up in the air and allowed five runs. High lights of the game were Harry Manning's slide from first to second; Milt Hirch's muff of a fly in a field of cockleburs; Goldberg's daring attempt to block Agnew off first and Rockabrand's "Adam" style costume. The success of the day was largely due to the efforts of salesman Jack Wolfberg, who had the entertainment in charge.

Abe Stern stopped off in Chicago last week en route to the Coast and reports he has some big production plans in the future for Universal. The motion picture business is showing a steady improvement, according to Mr. Stern.

Paramount's Milwaukee exchange has opened its doors and Branch Manager Al Bernstein is proud of the splendid new offices and sales rooms, which have just been completed. The exchange is located at 7th and Sycamore and is all on one floor, Paramount being the only occupant of the building. The Chicago office of Paramount has moved the sales, booking and exploitation departments from the third to the fifth floor of the building at 845 S. Wabash avenue.

Carl Lesserman, Universal salesman, and son of Manager Lesserman, who has been covering the Chicago territory for some time, has started on a selling trip throughout northern Illinois and may be continued in the country territory.

More than fifty Chicago exhibitors attended the mass meeting held at Schaffer's Projection Rooms, 24 E. Eighth street, last week and heard two brilliant speeches on the advantages of organization. Michael L. Igoe, former member of the legislature and closely connected with politics, was one of the orators and Sydney Lyon, a sitting member of the legislature, also spoke and pointed out the advantages of getting together and organizing in a brilliant way. This meeting was the first gun in the campaign of education which is being waged by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Chicago to awaken exhibitors of the territory to the necessity of lining up with an organization. The exhibitors who attended the meeting were told of the legislative and other perils confronting the industry in Illinois and urged to take an active part in combating the evils with which the industry in this state is menaced.

Fred J. Ireland, who for several months following his retirement from Reelcraft, made his headquarters in Los Angeles and Hollywood, has returned to Chicago, and it is understood will become interested in a theatrical producing company.

H. E. Belford, salesmanager of Kipling Enterprises, has returned to the Windy City after two weeks spent in New York and Boston, during which he closed territories on some of the Kipling product. Mr. Belford states that while there is some improvement in Eastern motion picture business, the better tone in the central west is more marked than it is on the Atlantic Coast.

A meeting of all Chicago exhibitors except members of the big circuits has been called for September 8th at Schaffer's Projection room, 24 E. Eighth Street. Well known speakers of ability are scheduled to address the gathering and problems of great interest to local exhibitors will be taken up.

First National to Hold National "Get-Together" in October

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES will hold a national "Get-Together" in October. Delegates are to be selected to represent every territory in the country. The "Get-Together" will probably cover four days of meetings. Detroit has been tentatively selected as the "Get-Together" city, and October 17 to 20 as the tentative dates. A final meeting is suggested to be held in Chicago, the delegates going from Detroit to Chicago on Wednesday, October 19.

While the place and date are subject to the final action of the executive committee of First National franchise holders may rest assured that the city chosen will be centrally located for the general convenience of all the delegates from the various territories, and the date will positively be sometime between October 15 and October 31, declares the statement from First National's headquarters in New York. This statement describes the mode of selecting the delegates as follows:

"The initial step is the issuance of 'A Call for Volunteers.' This was sent out this week, and all franchise holders who are willing to have their names placed in nomination as delegates to the 'Get-Together' have been urged to send their names and addresses to the home office. All franchise holders who are willing to serve as delegates have been requested to have their names in before September 20, in the case of territories east of the Mississippi River, and not later than September 25 in the case of all territories west of that point.

As soon as the names of the nominees are all in, ballots will be prepared and mailed to every franchise holder in the United States and Canada. Each franchise holder will be asked to vote for three delegates from his territory. A Ballot Committee of three franchise holders will be selected in every exchange center, and to this committee all ballots from the territory will be mailed. The polls will be closed and a count of the votes taken on October 1st in all axchanges, east of the Mississippi River, on October 5th in all exchanges west. As soon as the Ballot Committee has completed the count, in each exchange, a tabulated list will be prepared by the exchange manager, showing the name, address and theatre of each volunteer nominee and the exact number of votes cast for each one by the franchise holders of the territory. A copy of this report will then be sent to every franchise holder in the territory. In the case of a tie between any two delegates, the ballot committee will be authorized to cast the deciding vote."

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Elmer Harris to Have Two Aids on Coast

HIS work having grown to nearly double proportions during the past year due to the centralizing of five Realart stars at the Hollywood studio, Elmer Harris, supervising director, announces the appointment of Percy Heath and Dwight Cleveland as his direct assistants in the work of supervision and editing. Wells Hastings heads the newly organized title department.

Percy Heath has been for some time a member of the Realart scenario staff. Formerly one of America's best-known press agents he has also won considerable notice in the scenario field.

Dwight Cleveland, the other assistant, is a newcomer. Not new to pictures, however, as he started continuity writing for Vitagraph nine years ago later being connected with the editorial departments of Universal, Jesse D. Hampton and Irvin Willat.

"Flower of the North" Is Completed

The film of "Flower of the North" has been completed to the last shot. The large cast which director David Smith led out into the woods and mountains of Northern Oregon has returned to Hollywood after several weeks absence from civilization. The result of their labor, several thousand feet of film, has been shipped to the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn, N. Y. There it will be developed in Vitagraph's own special laboratory.

Henry B. Walthall and Pauline Starke head the all-star cast in this production.

R-C Seeking Stories of a High Standard

According to word from Eve Unsell, head of the R-C scenario department at Hollywood, stories adaptable for service as screen vehicles for the R-C stars and special productions are now being sought. Only stories with a real idea and a wholesome character will be selected, declares Miss Unsell.

"R-C does not want lurid sex dramas, crook stories or themes that have too strong a religious angle. We are working in close cooperation with the censorship board and wish to produce only the best entertainment," advises Miss Unsell.

R-C Assembles Strong Cast

Pauline Frederick in "The Lure of Jade" Supported by Stage Veterans

AN unusually strong cast will appear in support of Pauline Frederick in her next starring vehicle to be released by Robertson-Cole. The title is "The Lure of Jade." Production work on this subject is now under way at R-C's Hollywood studios with Colin Campbell directing. The supporting cast includes Thomas Holding, Leon Barry, Arthur Rankin, Hardee Kirkland, Clarissa Swayne, and L. C. Shumway.

Thomas Holding has a large following on the stage and screen, particularly the latter, on which he has been a prominent figure for some time. During his stage career of more than twenty years Mr. Holding appeared both in that country and Australia with such noted artists as the late Sir Herbert Tree, Sir Charles Hawtry, and George Alexander. It was as leading man for Maxine Elliott in "Deborah of Todds" that he was introduced to American audiences. Later he played opposite Billie Burke in "Love Watches."

Leon Barry has been cast in the part of Stuart Beresford. He was born in Paris, France, educated at the conservatory of Paris and appeared with Sarah Bernhardt, who selected him as her leading man from among the most talented actors in France. Mr. Barry also played opposite Madame Rejane.

Two Stahl Pictures Ready

"Child Thou Gavest Me" to Be Released; "Song of Life" is Edited

CLOSELY following First National's listing of "The Child Thou Gavest Me" for early release, Louis B. Mayer announces that the camera work on the second of the John M. Stahl productions, "The Song of Life," has been completed and that the picture is now being cut and titled under the supervision of the director.

Considerable interest attaches to this new Louis B. Mayer-First National brand because of Mr. Stahl's production record in the past. Previous to joining the Mayer forces he made "Woman Under Oath," "Wives of Men," "Women Men Forget" and other dramatic offerings. After the great success of "The Woman in His House" and "Sowing the Wind" Mr. Mayer made a new arrangement with the director by which he would have a unit of his own operating independently to make special productions with all-star casts.

"The Child Thou Gavest Me" is the first of this series, and if its triumphant career to date can be used as a precedent, the John M. Stahl productions are destined for a prominent place in the cinematic hall of fame. The picture has had two try-outs to date and the results have been more than satisfactory.

Major Jack Allen Film Seen at the Rialto

THE first release of the series of Major Jack Allen's Wild Animal Pictures which are on the Pathe schedule, got away to a flying start the week of September 5th. The occasion was a pre-release showing of "Netting the Leopard" at the Rialto Theatre, New York City. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, secured a three weeks' pre-release on the subject. "Netting the Leopard" will be regularly released the week of September 25th.

During the Rialto showing last week, the New York Evening Post paid special tribute to "Netting the Leopard," declaring it "the real feature of the Rialto program," states Pathe.

Jeffrey on Lichtman's First National Staff

George S. Jeffrey, who has held down the managership of the Boston Exchange of Associated Producers since Al Lichtman became General Manager, will remain on Mr. Lichtman's staff in the amalgamation with First National.

Mr. Lichtman's retention of Mr. Jeffrey, in the amalgamation with First National, is in recognition of the latter's ability, not only to bring in business but to make friends for the company he represents. Prior to affiliating himself with Associated Producers, Mr. Jeffrey was Canadian sales manager for Paramount with headquarters at Toronto.

Selznick Issue Minature Ad. Insert

One of the first producers to announce his plans for the coming season to picture showmen was Lewis J. Selznick who caused to be inserted in Motion Picture News and other trade publications a 16-page art supplement that attracted favorable attention and served as an effective sales-talk for the Selznick product. By using all of the important trade papers Mr. Selznick covered, in a national way, the whole field of exhibition.

These inserts were run during the month of August and to follow up the initial announcement Mr. Selznick devised a unique plan. The insert was condensed from its original size to a booklet measuring approximately, 5 x 6 inches, with a special envelope manufactured to contain them. This miniature replica of the "Forty from Selznick" is now being distributed.

Announce Two Subjects for Anita Stewart

Anita Stewart's next two starring vehicles for First National release will be "Rose O' the Sea," by Countess Bareynska, and "The Woman He Married," by Herbert Bashford. This announcement comes from the Louis B. Mayer studios together with the information that Miss Stewart intends to treminate her vacation in the East shortly and is expected back at the studio by the middle of September or October first at the latest.

The order in which these pictures will be made has not yet been decided upon, but both stories have been turned over to the Mayer editorial staff and are now being adapted for the screen. Madge Tyrone is working on the script of "Rose O' the Sea." The film version of "The Woman He Married" is being prepared by Josephine Quirk.

A "Certain Rich Man" to Be Issued Sept. 18

The cast is headed by Robert McKim, Claire Adams and Carl Gantvoort. The balance of the cast includes Lydia Knott, Joseph J. Dowling, Joan Hersholt, Walt Whitman, Frank Hayes, Engenia Gilbert, Frankie Lee and Mary Jane Irving.

Chicago Business Men Praise "Disraeli"

Emphatic praise for the work of George Arliss in "Disraeli," and his portrayal of that famous character in English history, has come from A. D. Lasker, head of the United States Shipping Board, and other prominent business men of Chicago. This picture was given an advance showing at the Lake Shore Country Club, at Glencoe, one of the suburbs of Chicago.

Playgoers Announce Film

"Across the Divide" Set for October 9; Rosemary Theby Heads Cast

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS announces that the release date of Playgoers Pictures' "Across the Divide" has been set for October 9, this being in conformity to the policy as given out in a statement last week by J. E. Storey, sales manager, to the effect that Playgoers will release three features a month on the Associated program.

Produced by G. and J. Photoplay Company, "Across the Divide" is described to be a sweeping and colorful Western drama. The cast is headed by Rosemary Theby, whose most recent successes in "A Connecticut Yankee" and "Kismet," have stamped her as a proven public favorite. In this production, she portrays the role of an ardent, warm-hearted dancehall girl. Rex Ballard, noted as an athlete, has the part of a half breed Indian, whose mixed strain leaves him with a fatalistic, resentful spirit and a combination of morals characteristic of his red and white blood. Ralph Fee McCollough, who plays the part of the "Kid," is particularly well cast. Other players include Florence Hollister, Virginia True Boardman, Thomas Delmar, Dorothy Manners and Gilbert Clayton.

"Across the Divide" concerns the struggle for possession of a rich cattle ranch, the rightful heir being a young Westerner whom circumstances have made ignorant of his true parentage. Life and love are staked upon a daring coup which speeds to an exciting climax, suspenseful and warmly romantic. Through it all stalks the silent figure of the young half breed, in whose hands rests the ultimate solution.

Distinguished by a wealth of gorgeous exteriors and scenic wonders new to the camera, "Across the Divide" is a notable production. It was directed by John Halloway from the story by Beatrice Frederick.

Mr. Hoffman expressed himself as being highly pleased with Dr. Burlingham's pictures.

"Runaway Train" Returns to Another Big House

In connection with the return to the capitol theatre in New York for its third showing there of "Lyman H. Howe's Famous Ride on a Runaway Train," it is interesting to note the many other return engagements played in first run houses by this striking one-reel novelty released by Educational.

One of the latest of the big houses to take "The Runaway Train" back for a second showing is the big Pantages theatre in Salt Lake City, Utah, where it will be given its return run in the near future.

Vitagraph Starting Special

AFTER weeks of preparation, spent mainly in seach of suitable locations, and a thorough investigation of the suitability of the scores of applicants for the various characters, Vitagraph's special production of "The Prodigal Judge," adapted from the novel of the same name by Vaughan Kester is now under way. Not alone is the story one of the most successful novels of its day, laid in the romantic and beautiful spots along the Ohio, Tennessee and Mississippi Rivers, affording a wealth of beautiful scenery, but the characters are all clean-cut types necessitating a cast of unusual merit, down to the least important "bit." Already a sufficient number of the lesser members of the cast have been engaged to begin the actual filming and within a week or ten days the cast will be complete. Jean Paige, it has been known since the picture was first planned, will have the leading role of Betty Malroy.

William Wright, production manager at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studios, returned on Thursday from a two weeks stay at a small French-Canadian village on the St. Lawrence River. There has been built an exact copy of a Mississippi keel boat of the early years of the last century and a Mississippi River raft with double cabins, one at each end. These are now being taken up the river for thirty miles, avoiding the LaChine Rapids by canal. A little later several members of the company will go through the rapids on the boat and raft for some of the exciting scenes in the play. These will be among the earlier scenes taken, although they occur late in the story. No risk will be taken in having cold weather set in and upset plans.

For several days past Edward Jose, who is in personal charge of the production and who will direct all the scenes, and William Dunn, casting director, have been at work on the cast and on Friday they were joined by Mr. Wright.

The picture version of "The Prodigal Judge" will retain all the principal characters so clearly drawn and described by the author.

After the boat scenes have been taken on the St. Lawrence River the entire company will go South where all the remaining exteriors will be made. Considerable time will be spent in South Carolina, where the earlier scenes, those around Hannibal's boyhood home at the Barony, the homestead of his great-grandfather, old General Quintard, will be taken, but the bulk of the picture will be made along the Mississippi River in Tennessee.

New Vitagraph Special Elicits High Praise

"THE SON OF WALLINGFORD," the new Vitagraph special production, which was written and directed by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester, was shown last week to the Vitagraph executives at the home office of that company and elicited the highest praise from the officials who attended the showing. The consensus of opinion is that "The Son of Wallingford" will prove one of 1921's master film productions.

"The Son of Wallingford" has been more than a year in the making. It is eight reels in length. Upwards of 3,800 players appear in some of the scenes. The cast includes such screen players as Wilfrid North, George Webb, Priscilla Bonner, Antrim Short, Van Dyke Brooke, Sidney D'Albrook, Andrew Arbuckle, Bobby Mack, Walter Rogers, Margaret Cullington, Martha Mattox, Florence Hart and Lyla Leslie.

The building of an artificial lake near Balboa, Cal., for this picture is regarded as one of the biggest engineering feats in film history. A story version syndicated to newspapers all over the country has excited considerable comment. Elaborate exploitation matter for this production has been prepared by Vitagraph.

"His Nibs" Premiere on Oct. 6

EXCEPTIONAL PICTURES CORPORATION announces that arrangements have been definitely made for the initial presentation of its second picture, Charles (Chic) Sale in "His Nibs." The showing is to be held in the Grand Ballroom of the Hotel Astor, New York City, on the evening of October 6.

Prior to arranging its first prerelease run in a representative motion picture theatre, Alexander Beyfuss, vice president and general manager of Exceptional Pictures Corporation, has decided to have the private showing where the industry will have an opportunity of seeing this unique film, the first motion picture offering in which Chic Sale has appeared.

The following statement has been issued by Exceptional Pictures Corporation in connection with the special showing of "His Nibs," on October 6:

"This performance will be looked forward to with interest on account of the expectation 'His Nibs' has aroused in the industry and also for the reason that it will bring to the screen an artist who has made an enviable record for himself with the amusement-going public. Chic Sale has been for a number of years one of the stellar attractions on the Keith Vaudeville Circuit, besides playing in a number of New York successes.

"He is conceded the foremost delineator of rural characters on the American stage today, columns having been written in the press of this country and in Canada, of the remarkable portrayals of his different types. And, yet with all the humor he puts into each one, it is always human, and true-to-life. Mr. Sale never holding any one of them up to ridicule. This quality alone has made him loved by all who have seen his work.

"In his first motion picture Chic Sale has been given the opportunity of playing seven different parts which include all the people which have become endeared to the public through his stage characterizations.

"As this is probably the first time in the history of motion pictures that one artist has played seven different, distinct roles in a feature porduction and because the picture itself, 'His Nibs,' is said to be a distinct and unusual departure from the accepted form of the photoplay, the Hotel Astor showing is certain to arouse keen anticipation.

"Outside of these facts no inkling of the story of 'His Nibs' has been given out and all information regarding the actual theme will be withheld by Exceptional Pictures Corporation until it is presented on the screen.

"Invitations are being issued to all executives, to the friends of Mr. Sale in the theatrical and motion picture industries, and to all the trade papers, and a notable gathering is to be expected at this premier showing.

"Black Panther's Cub" Sold for South

ANOTHER deal that almost closes all the open territory remaining on Equity's "Black Panther's Cub" is the purchase by Adolf Samuels, of the Southeastern Pictures Corporation of Atlanta, Georgia, of eight States, including North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Louisiana and Mississippi.

But four territories are still open on this big picture and negotiations are now pending for the final closing of these within the next few weeks, according to Joseph Schnitzer, president of the Equity Pictures Corporation.

Unusually elaborate plans for releasing the picture in the eight States purchased by the Southeastern Pictures Corporation are now under way in the offices of the company in Atlanta, Ga.

Tom Buckingham Back on Century "Lot"

Tom Buckingham, veteran director of many Century Comedies, has returned to the Century "lot," following a long absence due to ill health.

Buckingham's first directorial feat may be the making of "Shipwrecked Among the Animals" a burlesque on Universal's "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals." The preparing of this script was part of Buckingham's recreation while tramping the mountains in an effort to regain his lost health. Others on the list will be "Passing out the Rye," "Semi-mental Tommy" and one or two other burlesques on famous photoplays of today.

Buckingham, in all likelihood, will resume the direction of Harry Sweet in all his comedies, and has been given a contract that will run for some time yet. The comedy Buckingham is now working on bears the tentative title of "The Landlord," and will feature Harry Sweet and Bartine Burkett.

"Conquering Power" Is Lauded by Critics

Los Angeles critics who witnessed "The Conquering Power," Rex Ingram's Metro production adapted by June Mathis for the screen from Balzac's story, at its first showing in that city at the Mission Theatre on August 10, were unanimous in giving expression to enthusiastic praise for its artistry and force.

Photographic excellence, directorial genius, dramatic force and acting—all came in for their share of encomiums. The critics agreed that the picture is one of the high-peaks of cinematographic production.

Additions to Goldwyn Studio Staff

The reorganization of the editorial and scenario staff at Goldwyn's Culver City studios has brought many new faces on to the Goldwyn lot.

Two of the newcomers are directors. By special arrangement, Irvin V. Willat, who has been producing at his own studio, has been engaged to direct "Yellow Men and Gold," a Gouverneur Morris story about to go into production. Rowland V. Lee, a screen actor and director, who recently directed Hobart Bosworth in four photoplays, was engaged to direct John Frederick's "His Back Against the Wall," in which Raymond Hatton and Virginia Valli have the leading roles.

Additions to the scenario department include: Agnes Smith, until recently motion picture critic on the New York Morning Telegraph, who has just arrived at the studios to write sub-titles for Goldwyn pictures. Emile Forst, author of a dozen or more produced screen stories and a distinguished linguist, has been taken on as an expert in foreign literature. Mrs. E. Magnus Ingleton, a continuity writer of established reputation, now preparing a Cynthia Stockley story for the screen. Hope Loring, also a continuity writer of ability, who is making film adaptation of an Alice Duer Miller story. J. G. Hawks, who recently resigned as editor of the Goldwyn scenario department, has been engaged to adapt a story to the screen.

Torchy Comedy Opens New York House

"Torchy's Night Hood," a Torchy Comedy featuring Johnny Hines, the famous screen impersonator of Sewell Ford's red-headed office boy character, was chosen for the short subject comedy for the opening programme at the big Tivoli theatre in New York.

The programme which included this popular Educational release was shown for three days, and at each performance made a distinct hit.

C. B. C. to Release Eight Features During Year

Eight big features for release to the States Right market, is the line-up announced by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation for the coming season.

Word comes from the C. B. C. office of an even wider scope of activity than has ever been attempted by this company, and of the securing of a series of releases, each one of which is in the first-run feature class.

Pickford Picture on B'way

Star Gets Rousing Reception When "Fauntleroy" Opens at the Apollo

"LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY," in which Mary Pickford plays the title role, opened on Thursday evening of this week at the Apollo Theatre, New York City, amid a demonstration of public favor rivalling that which attended the premiere of Douglas Fairbanks' latest United Artists' release, "The Three Musketeers," at the Lyric Theatre in New York two weeks ago. Both Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford attended the opening performance and were the recipients of a noisy and enthusiastic reception on the part of the great crowd which had gathered before the doors of the theatre to witness the arrival of the film celebrities. Parties of Miss Pickford's friends from Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago, and even as far west as San Francisco and Los Angeles were on hand to do the star special honor.

It also was more than noticeable that for the first time the names of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks blazed out side by side in tremendously successful film plays being shown at legitimate theatres, since "The Three Musketeers" is being shown to capacity crowds at the Lyric Theatre, next door to the Apollo.

"Little Lord Fauntleroy" is the largest, most costly and most pretentious motion picture Miss Pickford ever has made. Miss Pickford's success in this splendid silent drama built from Frances Hodgson Burnett's world known story was all the more marked for the reason that she appeared as a boy for the first time in her screen career and played the dual role of the little Lord and "Dearest," his mother. For the reason that "Dearest" is naturally much taller than the seven-year-old heir to the earldom of Dorincourt, this dual role involved many instances of camera work most ingenious and difficult.

The story has followed the book faithfully as to plot, and Miss Pickford's inimitable genius for characterization has for perhaps the first time been given full play for the development of the wholesome human and splendidly humane traits found in this famous character.

With a large cast selected from the best players best suited to the roles, and made under the direction of Jack Pickford and Al Green, the picture moves swiftly and easily to the finale.

Agnes Ayres Starts Her First Starring Picture

Agnes Ayres, Paramount's newest star, who has just finished her work in George H. Melford's production, "The Sheik," in which she is featured with Rudolph Valentino, was scheduled to start this week at the Lasky studio on her first starring picture, an adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Lane that Has No Turning."

Laud Binney's Versatilitys

Gives Wonderful Character Delineation in New Film, Says Realart

REALART announces that never before has Miss Binney appeared to so great advantage as she does in Edward Locke's celebrated drama, "The Case of Becky." It is said that seldom has been seen such a wonderful character delineation as that portrayed by the Realart star in the same story which David Belasco produced in New York with Frances Starr in the title role. The part of Dorothy Stone, the girl of two personalities, was a particularly arduous one, the character continually veering off into her other self—Becky, the girl of tantrums and wild escapades. Constance Binney goes from one character to the other with equal facility, it is declared by Realart, and it is doubtful if any role other than that of Dr. Jeckyll and Mr. Hyde calls for such versatility.

Montague Love in the role of Balzamo, the wicked hypnotist, earns all the opprobrium that will be heaped upon him for his cruel deeds in the picture, but Frank McCormack will gain the approbation of all by his kindly and sympathetic treatment of his strangely afflicted patient and the reward he receives in the end will be shared by all in the audience.

Glenn Hunter, as the boy lover, is as refreshing a character as has been seen on the screen. He is never anything else but a country beau and his devotion to his dual-lived sweetheart is a rare and beautiful thing, declares the Realart statement. Margaret Seddon, Jane Jennings and the rest of the cast are equally competent, the ensemble presenting what Realart characterizes as "one of the best pictures we have ever released."

Chester M. Franklin came East to direct this picture, the scenario of which was prepared by J. Clarkson Miller. George Folsey was the cameraman.

Five Metro Units at Work

Comedies Predominate in Round of Productions Now Under Way

COMEDIES will predominate in the new round of Metro pictures now under production or in the course of preparation at the company's studios in Hollywood. Within a few days five companies will be busy on stories, of which all but one may be classified as comedies.

Viola Dana will start work on "Glass Houses," an original story written especially for her by Clara Genevieve Kennedy, for which Edith Kennedy, the authoress's sister, has prepared the continuity. Harry Beaumont, who directed Miss Dana's most recent Metro picture, "The Fourteenth Lover," will do "Glass Houses."

Bert Lytell has completed his work in "Lady Fingers" and will start "The Right That Failed" within the next few days. This story, by J. P. Marquand, was published recently in the Saturday Evening Post. Bayard Veiller will direct Mr. Lytell in this new production.

Alice Lake will have the only dramatic role in the new round of pictures. "The Hole in the Wall," a story by Fred Jackson, has been selected for her new Metro starring vehicle. Maxwell Karger will direct "The Hole in the Wall." June Mathis prepared the continuity.

George D. Baker is busily engaged in the preparation of a new series of productions in which Gareth Hughes will star. There will be five comedy dramas in this new group of Baker productions, to be filmed by S-L Pictures for Metro.

After-Breakfast Picture

Chicago House Opens at 8:30 A.M. During Run of "Three Musketeers"

THE midnight motion picture is no longer a novelty. Chicago has gone it one better and announced an eighty-thirty A. M. daily showing of Douglas Fairbanks' production of "The Three Musketeers," which has made as big a hit and is drawing as large crowds at the Randolph theatre there as it is at the Lyric in New York.

The fifteen hours daily showing of "The Three Musketeers" was made necessary by the immense crowds that filled the streets in the vicinity of the Randolph, which has a seating capacity of but 700. The picture was shown to approximately 28,000 persons in the first week of what has become an indefinite engagement of the Fairbanks production. Despite the fact that the management of the house, in order fully to satisfy its patrons, is willing to pay a higher price per seat for such attractions as "The Three Musketeers" than any other theatre in the world, it became necessary to extend the daily performances. As a result, Aaron J. Jones, of the management, has issued an appeal to Chicago devotees of Mr. Fairbanks and the Dumas hero to attend the early morning showing, and virtually says that eight-thirty A. M., is the only hour at which he can promise a seat.

THE REMARKABLE ROMANCE OF THE WORLD-RENOWNED ADVENTURER

Against exceptionally strong competition the Capitol theatre, New York, used half page copy in the New York Evening Telegram on Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures," an Exceptional Pictures Corp. release, upon its presentation there. Different copy was used in each Metropolitan daily. Reproduced is the advertisement which appeared in the Telegram

Johnson's "Jungle Adventures" Meet Stiff Competition

EXCEPTIONAL Pictures Corporation's first release, Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures," ushered in the new season at the Capitol theatre, New York City. Against the greatest array of the motion picture industry's real accomplishments ever known to have played simultaneously in one city, Martin Johnson's romance opened on Sunday, September 11th, playing to a remarkable business, which continued during the week, until at the time of going to press, all indications point to a record-breaking performance.

When it is taken into consideration that in inaugurating the new motion picture year, "Way Down East" is being shown at the Mark Strand theatre, for the first time in New York at popular prices, "The Affairs of Anatol" is playing both the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, Mary Pickford in "Little Lord Fauntleroy" opened at the Apollo theatre and Douglas Fairbanks in "The Three Musketeers" is in its third week at the Lyric theatre, it becomes more evident that the first Exceptional picture had a task on its hands.

Alexander Beyfuss, vice-president and general manager of the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, in commenting upon the splendid performance of the picture, said:

"In making our original annonuecment of Martin Johnson's 'Jungle Adventures,' we made the statement that it would prove itself a unique attraction. Results have again indicated that we meant exactly what we said.

"In the face of such distinguished competition this thrilling story of hardship and danger in a land never before visited by white man, has scored one of the mightiest triumphs in motion picture history. We were confident of this outcome and feel that "Jungle Adventures" has stood the greatest test it can be called upon to stand.

"This remarkable performance at the Capitol theatre will stamp it as one of the outstanding motion pictures of the year."

In exploiting Martin Johnson's strange romance the Capitol theatre took advantage of all of the unusual exploitation features, among other items distributing oil paintings at every available point in the shops along Broadway, and using a novel display in the theatre lobby which attracted every passer-by, because of the uniqueness of the photographs from the production.

The week prior to the opening the marquise and the beautiful inner lobby of the theatre were used for the most effective stunt seen on Broadway for some time. The management of the Capitol arranged for the use of a sufficient number of birds, including Mexican and Australian parrots, Yucatan jays, and cock-a-toos, with one of the animal shops and these were hung from the marquise and displayed in appropriate places in the lobby. Even aside from their chattering and talking, these birds attracted and held the attention of everyone passing the theatre, in addition to making an attractive display. The cost of this stunt was practically negligible and can be used to advantage in the smallest town, yet the results obtained were inestimable.

An announcement is expected shortly from Exceptional Pictures Corporation as to the releasing arrangements.

"The Toreador"
Clyde Cook Comedy-Fox

THEY hve put the Clyde Cook comedies into the New York Hippodrome, which is sure enough indication that they are deserving of big time. The droll comedian enacts the part of a toreador in his newest release. And he had a huge audience roaring at his antics in throwing the bull. There are several novel and amusing twists to this comedy. For instance he has a bitter rival, but bests him by simply employing his skill at contortion.

"The Toreador" is one of the comedian's best. And his comedies are way above the ordinary brand. Length, two reels.—LAURENCE REID.

Record Booking Claimed for Sarg Product

THE Tony Sarg release, "Fireman Save My Child," was booked by the three Shay houses in Buffalo day and date for the past week, an enviable record and one thought to establish a precedent for productions of this nature.

Simpson Heads Cast of Russell Picture

Russell Simpson, one of the greatest character actors, has the foremost place in the cast of "Shadows of Conscience," the seven reel super feature just completed by Russell Productions, Chicago.

Ever since Russell Simpson's performance in "Snowblind," released some little time ago by Goldwyn, his ability to handle the part of the grim, sturdy man of the outdoors picturesquely has made the theatre public watch for his appearances on the screen, to which he lends such character and strength by his performances.

An able assistant to Mr. Simpson in "Shadows of Conscience," is Barbara Tenant who has a flattering list of successes to her credit, made while a star in Selznick and World releases.

A clever task in the way of make-up was achieved by W. Bradley Ward who plays the half-breed. His physical appearance, as it is in "Shadows of Conscience," is the result of hours of self-study and experiment before the mirror. Others in the excellent cast are Landers Stevens, Nelson McDowell, Ashley Cooper, Ida McKenzie and Gertrude Olmstead.

New Hallroom Comedy

"Put and Take," the newest of the Hallroom Boys Comedies featuring Sid Smith, was delivered this week by Hallroom Boys Photoplays, Inc., to Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., for release.

This comedy is described by those who have seen it at pre-release showing, as another "Dog-gone Mix-up," the comedy that won country-wide notice and praise for this series of two-reel gloom-chasers.

"Hedda Gabler" Is Offered on Screen

Giovanni Pastrone, who has been called "The Griffith of Italy," has just completed a film version of Ibsen's play "Hedda Gabler." Harry Raver, who was responsible for the introduction of Pastrone's magnificent production of D'Anunzio's "Cabiria," will also present Hedda Gabler in America.

"The Golem" to be Released

Is Announced for September 18th; "Dangerous Lies" Also Scheduled

THE big European production, "The Golem," which has made a phenomenal record at the Criterion theatre, New York, and Paul Powell's production, "Dangerous Lies," are the features scheduled for release by Paramount September 18.

Few other pictures in the whole history of the industry have been received by the press with the enthusiasm which has greeted "The Golem." Heywood Broun, the noted dramatic critic of the New York Tribune, now with the World, declared in the Tribune that it was "the most notable achievement in motion pictures New York has seen." The Sun called it a screen masterpiece, and added, "It is a photoplay no movie fan should miss seeing." "The magnificence of the production has rarely been equalled," said the Mail, while the Globe critic was moved to say that it was "the most impressive and significant piece of screen work ever made since films began."

"The Golem" was first presented at the Criterion in New York on the 19th of last June and it is still running there. There has hardly been a performance, afternoon or evening, in all these three months, that has not played to standing room, declares a report from the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters.

The other release scheduled for the 18th, "Dangerous Lies," is a Paul Powell production made at the London studios of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers. It is from E. Phillips Oppenheim's story, "Twice Wed," and was adapted for the screen by Mary H. O'Connor.

David Powell is featured in the leading male role, with Mary Glynne playing opposite him. Warburton Gamble is the heavy.

Big Runs for "Quo Vadis"

Kleine's Revival of Spectacle Shown in Country's Big Houses

GEORGE KLEINE'S 1921 revival of "Quo Vadis," is enjoying a phenomenal booking, according to the F. B. Warren Corporation. This spectacle, is being booked for "runs" after eight years, which in itself is a remarkable tribute to the first big film spectacle ever shown in America.

In San Francisco, the picture is now in its second big week and is doing a tremendous business in spite of the fact that four of the biggest pictures on the market are playing in opposition at the leading San Francisco theatres.

"Quo Vadis" is in for an indefinite run at the Winter Garden in Seattle, Clune's Broadway, Los Angeles, and the Adams Loop theatre in Chicago. Louis Rosenthal, the well known New York exhibitor, who has a chain of theatres, has each of his theatres. The Rialto, Providence; Colonial, Reading; Modern, Lawrence, Mass.; Turner and Danhken Circuit, West Coast, have all booked the film for full week stands.

A special engagement for one week is playing now at Frank Wolf's Hippodrome, Ocean City, N. J., and Wolf reports that the business is way beyond expectations, even though his town is a summer resort and the weather has been against him.

The Brubel Circuit in Missouri, the Aldine in Wilmington, Del., the Majestic in Evansville, and the Liberty theatres in Honolulu; Republic, Washington, D. C.; Stiefel's, Philadelphia; Ambassador, Philadelphia; Bijou, Atlantic City; Capital, Atlantic City; American, Roanoke; Imperial, Pawtucket; Empire, New London; Temple, Santa Anna, Calif.; Colonial, Sioux Falls, S. D., and the Temple, Union Hill, N. J., have all booked the film for extra days.

Bernard Depkin will play the picture one week at his Strand Theatre in Baltimore.

Warren Outdoor Picture for Fall Release

Nell Shipman in "The Girl from God's Country," which will be released by the F. B. Warren Corporation, will be one of the best bets of the Fall season for exhibitors looking for something new in the way of screen entertainment, announced that company.

This picture is full of thrills and tense situations, to say nothing of sensational flying scenes, Canadian North woods shots with the famous Nell Shipman animals, and many others.

"The Girl from God's Country" was written by Nell Shipman, the star of the picture, who also directed the picture in conjunction with Bert Van Tuyle. In this picture Miss Shipman portrays a dual role, that of Marion Carslake, the daughter of an American millionaire, and Neeka, the girl from the great outdoors.

New Type of Art Title for Christie Comics

A new type of art title is being developed for presentation in the new series of Christie comedies, now being made for release by Educational. The art-title work is in the hands of E. G. Klein, the well-known artist. In a statement describing Mr. Klein's work in titling the new comedies, Educational declares he never permits the spirit of the comedy to be lost. The main introductory title gives in cartoon form the general idea of the comedy, while little line drawings in the sub-titles present brief ideas of the action. All this adds to a remarkable degree to the "dressiness" of the new Christie-Educational series, it is stated.

Huge Race Track Scene for "Turn to the Right"

Thousands of men and women who never had seen the inside of a picture studio became movie players at Santa Rosa, Cal., during the race scenes for Rex Ingram's Metro production of "Turn to the Right." This is a screen production of John Golden's stage hit, by Winchell Smith and Jack Hazzard.

When it became known that Mr. Ingram would take over Cotati's new speedway for the staging of special races, clerks, bankers and stablemen mingled with one another to work before the camera.

New DeMille Picture Is Announced

Cecil B. DeMille has announced the name of the new special production he is about to start at Hollywood for Paramount. It is "Saturday Night," the original story and scenario being by Jeanie Macpherson, author of "Forbidden Fruit," "Something to Think About" and "The Affairs of Anatol" an adapter of nearly all of Mr. DeMille's other big productions of recent years. The two leading feminine roles will be played by Leatrice Joy and Edith Roberts.

Cliff Smith Completes Third for Associated

Victor B. Fischer, general manager of the Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., reports that Cliff Smith has just finished the third production of the series to be released to the franchise holders of the Associated Photo-Plays, Inc. This production again stars Pete Morrison, and is entitled "Daring Danger." A print will be shipped to the New York office by the end of next week

Christie Outlines Future Plans

Will Provide Twenty-four Two-Reelers in Coming Year

AL CHRISTIE, head of the producing end of the Christie Film Company, has laid out the entire schedule of pictures for the present season of 1921 and covering a period including July, 1922, which calls for nothing but two-reel Christie Comedies, exclusively distributed through the United States and Canada by Educational Film Exchanges.

As the plans for new pictures have been announced, Bobby Vernon will head the cast in seven pictures; Neal Burns will be featured in seven; Dorothy Devore will be featured in four; Viola Daniel in four; Eddie Barry in one picture; and an all-star cast in one picture. This provides twenty-four two-reel comedies, released at the rate of one every other week over a period of twelve months. In addition to the players who are featured, other actors are being engaged for single appearances, such as, Josephine Hill, playing opposite Bobby Vernon in two pictures; Katharine Lewis, added to the cast with Dorothy Devore, Earl Rodney and others for "Saving Sister Susie;" regular leading girls such as Helen Darling and Vera Steadman; and Alic Maison, who has added to the cast of a picture now being made with Neal Burns. Henry Murdock is one of the leading comedy foils with the regular featured players.

Last year, the Christie company made three feature length productions, "813," "So Long Letty" and "See My Lawyer." Despite the fact that each of these pictures is playing to exceptional business, the Christie Company is bending every effort toward a varied program of two-reel pictures exclusively, which are to be characterized particularly by variety of subject matter.

Among the pictures already made or in progress in the new Christie series are one back-stage play, one soldier comedy, two rurals, one bungalow romance, one wedding farce, one "kid" story, and two costume plays with comedy angles. This schedule will be maintained so that the greatest possible latitude may be obtained in variety of pictures offered. Releases are also being arranged so that in each picture the actors are different from the preceding subjects.

By "big" productions this year, Christie will go into larger two-reel subjects instead of feature-length pictures. In the first Educational-Christie series such pictures as "Sneakers," "Wedding Blues," "A Home Spun Hero" and "The Reckless Sex" stood out as "big" pictures from a production standpoint. This style of production is being carried out this year in such pictures as "Nothing Like It" and "Oh Buddy," which are already playing first-runs, and in such pictures now being made as "Saving Sister Susie" with Dorothy Devore, "Fresh From the Farm" with Bobby Vernon, "A Barnyard Musketeer" with Bobby Vernon, and "A Regular Romeo" with Neal Burns.

"From an angle of stories, production, real humorous material," said Christie, "I really believe that we are going to deliver more for the money than any other branch of the film producing business this year. S. S. Harris, a leading southern showman, recently said that certain comedy producers had done this last year, and I promise that we will exceed the standard set up then.

"This does not mean making 'big' pictures just for the sake of size or of setting out to spend a certain sum of money, but when the subject calls for it, a comedy will be constructed from start to finish just as the highest class of features."

Great Madge Kennedy Feature

"Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" Pioneer Picture, Well Received

"OH, MARY, BE CAREFUL!" by George Weston, in which production Madge Kennedy is starred and which is now being released by the Pioneer Film Corporation through its 28 exchanges, is being acclaimed by the critics as among the best work in Miss Kennedy's career, states Pioneer. This feature photoplay has been adapted for the screen from the book of the same name.

Madge Kennedy is supported by a large and capable cast and no efforts have been spared to make this production one which will not only assure box office success for the exhibitor but an evening's real entertainment for fans in all theatres.

The New York daily newspapers, in their motion picture reviews, lauded "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" when the picture was shown last week in Keith, Moss and Proctor theatres in and around Greater New York, playing to capacity audiences. Reports from all Pioneer Exchanges tell of contracts with important exhibitors for first-run showings for this Madge Kennedy feature. In many instances the feature has been booked for an entire week on account of its strength in cast and story and the fact that it is being released under unusual auspices.

The release of "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" comes at a time when the Pioneer Film Corporation is making the most rapid strides in its history. Madge Kennedy is but one of a score of stars of international fame who are appearing in the new Pioneer releases for 1921 and 1922. For instance, in addition to Madge Kennedy there are the following: Florence Reed who stars in "Indiscretion;" Pauline Stark who has the leading role in "The Forgotten Woman;" Ora Carew who is starred in "Beyond the Crossroads;" Guy Empey in his latest production "A Millionaire For a Day;" Gail Kane who is featured in "Wise Husbands;" and others of equal prominence.

"We are particularly optimistic at Pioneer Headquarters," said President A. E. Lefcourt yesterday. "This optimism is justified by the reports we are receiving from all our offices which tell of the splendid co-operative spirit being manifested between the independent exhibitor and our exchanges. This condition is but a natural one because it is in keeping with the times and represents the real foundation for the success of the exhibitor. Our new features are being booked with marked enthusiasm by many of the most important exhibitors in the country. In the first place our new product is stronger than anything we have ever released heretofore and, furthermore, it has not been a matter of quantity with a sacrifice of quality. We have selected our new features with a great deal of care because we want to give the exhibitor not only features on which he can draw large and profitable audiences but also guarantee the utmost satisfaction to those who pay the admission charge into the theatre."

R-C Exhibitor Contracts Reach $1,000,000

CONTRACTS aggregating more than one million dollars have been closed with exhibitors for R-C's 1921-1922 productions, according to word from the home office of the R-C Pictures Corporation. This volume of business was secured within the space of three weeks, it is declared by the R-C office, and results from the recent advertising and publicity drive conducted by that company.

The prints of the first four of the season's releases are now at the R-C exchanges, and showings are being arranged by the branch offices for the exhibitors in their respective territories. The September releases include Sessue Hayakawa in "Where Lights Are Low"; Pauline Frederick in "The Sting of the Lash"; Barbara Castleton in "Shams of Society," a Walsh-Fielding Production, directed by Thos. B. Walsh, and "A Wife's Awakening," written by Jack Cunningham and directed by Louis J. Gasnier.

Pathe's Sept. 25th Releases

Opening of "Hurricane Hutch," and of New Animal and Comedy Series

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces the premiere of "Hurricane Hutch," the new Pathe serial starring Charles Hutchinson, the first offering of the new series of Major Jack Allen's wild animal pictures, and the first of the new series of comedies featuring Gaylord Lloyd and produced by Hal Roach, to augment the ensemble of short subject features and serial episodes scheduled for release September 25.

"The Secret Cipher" is the title of the first episode of "Hurricane Hutch" and is reported to be as replete with thrills as an entire average serial. The first of the series of Major Jack Allen's wild animal pictures, produced by Adventures Films, Inc., is "Netting the Leopard." "Rough Seas" is the title of the first of the new series of comedies featuring Gaylord Lloyd, brother of the spectacled Harold. Beatrice LaPlante is his leading lady, and the Hal Roach comedians, including George Rowe, are very much in evidence.

"Brother of the Bear" is the next photo dramatization of the well-known author, Holman Day, depicting life in the Maine forests and lumber country. Huntley Gordon plays the leading masculine role, with Mary Astor in the leading feminine role.

"The Chink" is the next Hal Roach comedy, featuring Eddie Boland. The offering is a decided satire on Chinatown melodrama amid exotic settings and amusing situations. "The Hare and the Tortoise" is the current release of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables."

"The Miracle" is the fifteenth and last episode of the Pathe serial, "The Yellow Arm," produced by George B. Seitz. In this last chapter the mystery surrounding the exploits of Juanita Hansen, Warner Oland and Marguerite Courtot are disclosed, and the culmination of two romances brings the serial to a close.

Philadelphia Acclaims "The Four Horsemen"

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," the Rex Ingram production of Ibanez's story for Metro, started its Philadelphia run at the Garrick theatre this week. It was greeted by a chorus of critical praise that echoed the superlative comments made on the picture when it was shown in New York, Boston, Detroit, Los Angeles, Pittsburgh and San Francisco.

Under the heading, "Ibanez's Novel Is Ingram's Glory," the Ledger says "a masterpiece of literature has been translated into a masterpiece of the screen. In nowise does the picture lag or fail," the reviewer continues. "The continuity is perfect. As a work of art, both from the histrionic and photographic standpoints it is superb—in a class apart. . . . Perhaps we may now hope for an era of better things from the motion picture art."

100th Bruce Scenic Ready

Titled "Strolling Minstrels" and is on Educational's October List

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES will celebrate in October a sort of a "centennial" for Robert C. Bruce, pioneer producer of the "pure scenic" in motion pictures, by releasing his one hundredth scenic. It is called "Strolling Minstrels" and is a presentation of types in wandering musicians—in the Alps and in the highland of Scotland.

Robert C. Bruce is characterized by Educational Films as "the real creator of scenic reels." The statement from Educational continues: "'Travelogues' had been shown before, to be sure, but when the Bruce picture, 'When the Mountains Call,' in three reels, was run for several weeks on Broadway five years ago, it marked the beginning of the showing of the 'pure scenics' which have since become so popular with moving picture fans."

Educational released "When the Mountains Call," and has released every Bruce scenic picture made since. The Robert C. Bruce Scenics Beautiful not only led the way, but without a doubt are today pre-eminent in their field. "When the Mountains Call" was the first and last scenic made by Mr. Bruce that ran three reels in length. All the pictures released since then have been one-reelers.

In the five years since the release of "When the Mountains Call" Mr. Bruce's life has been one of thrills and perils. Not a few times he has barely escaped with his life, and yet he has consistently held that no danger was too great to risk to get the picture that he started after.

Just a few weeks ago, Mr. Bruce and Hamish MacLaren, a scenario writer of New York, were in a canoe in a stream in Oregon when they were caught in a whirlpool and the canoe was overturned. Both men had to fight for their lives for almost an hour before they succeeded in getting out of the treacherous waters. All the valuable equipment they had in the canoe was lost. Mr. Bruce is still in the Far West, from where he will return East in a few weeks with several new pictures.

Among the Bruce scenics that have been most popular and that have had biggest success have been "The World of Dreams," which was on the opening program of the Rivoli theatre, New York, and which was the first picture shown on that Broadway theatre's screen, "The Castaway," "Me and My Dog," and "The Land of Silence."

Equity Has Campaign Book

Rothstein Prepares Useful Aid for Exploiting "Heedless Moths"

EQUITY PICTURES CORPORATION announces a new campaign book on "Heedless Moths."

The new book, designed and prepared by Nat Rothstein, originator of this effective calibre of advertising, contains punches and ideas in money getting exploitation that is bound to pack theatres wherever this style of advertising material is used, it is claimed.

The book gives the list of forty-two newspapers throughout the country and shows in actual miniature reproduction, the single and double truck Sunday newspaper feature stories that these papers carried. It also shows reproductions of many of the world famous statues, and works of art for which the famous Audrey Munson posed.

Characteristic of Rothstein who lets no opportunity escape him he shows how exhibitors can make meat out of these same double trucks in newspapers everywhere without cost to the papers.

"There is no doubt," states Equity, "but what Audrey Munson has had more country-wide publicity through huge double trucks published as special Sunday feature stories in serial form, than any artist's model who ever lived and it can be safely said that few motion picture stars ever had such a huge consecutive smash of feature stuff as this well known artist's model.

"Equity hasn't overlooked a single trick in the preparation of the matter and exhibitors will find a veritable gold mine of exploitation suggestions, ideas, stunts and showmanship of the highest calibre spread on every page of this new book.

"Special material for staging the picture and an unusually effective stunt at the finish of the picture give exhibitors something to use that will set the public talking."

Synchronized Scores for Big Chicago Theatre

Synchronized Music Scores have been made a feature of the program offered at Chicago's State-Lake Theatre, one of the largest amusement palaces of the Middle West. Harry Manager Singer after giving the Synchronized Music Scores a thorough trial declared: "It is my firm belief that Synchronized Music Scores can perform a service that has been badly needed by the exhibitor ever since pictures have taken their present place in the affections of the public. With the coming of better pictures it was inevitable that we should seek better music, and for that reason I have signed up with the Synchronized Scenario Music Company for their music service."

"The Old Nest" Booked in 700 Theatres

Goldwyn's production of Rupert Hughes' picture of home, "The Old Nest," has been booked in more than 700 theatres for showing within the next few weeks, it is stated by Goldwyn officials. New bookings are being received daily.

Two Selznick Stars in "After Midnight"

The Ralph Ince production, "After Midnight," set for release through Select as of September 20, introduces two Selznick stars in its leading roles—Conway Tearle, the advertised star, and Zena Keefe, his leading woman. Mr. Ince, the director, is also a Selznick star having to his credit "The Land of Opportunity" and "The Highest Law" his latest offering through Select exchanges.

"A Man's Home" Is Ready

Selznick Soon to Release Big Special All-Star Production

IN his announcements for the forthcoming year Lewis J. Selznick set six specials as the limit of his units apart from his star series and the twelve Talmadge releases, and of these specials "A Man's Home" was promised as one of the earliest of these specials to reach the screen. Now definite information is at hand—"A Man's Home" is ready for the exhibitor.

This picture was made months ago. Time was given to its adequate production, the editing and titling was done in a thorough manner and prints have been in Select exchanges for several weeks awaiting word from Sam E. Morris, vice president in charge of distribution, to launch the special on the market.

"A Man's Home" carries many advantages that do not usually attend the average release, according to the claims of the Selznick organization. Its advertising possibilities are many, a foundation for exploitation being found in many of its integral factors—its story and authorship, its cast and director and in the impressiveness of its settings.

Anna Steese Richardson and Edmund Breese wrote the play on which "A Man's Home" is founded and Miss Richardson adapted the story for the screen after the play had been given a few copyright performances on the stage. Miss Richardson is associate editor of Woman's Home Companion and is widely known as a writer on "home topics" and as a lecturer before women's clubs throughout the country. Mr. Breese applied his experience as an actor on the legitimate stage to the theatrical technique of the play and scenario.

Ralph Ince directed the presentation and that fact gives exhibitors and public a line on what may be expected in screen construction. Having been both the star and director of "The Land of Opportunity" and "The Highest Law" Mr. Ince is familiar to the exhibitors of Selznick pictures and they are familiar with his skill. It is declared by the Selznick forces that "A Man's Home" represents the best work Mr. Ince has done for the screen.

In the cast are names familiar to showmen and their public the country over—Harry Morey, Kathlyn Williams, Matt Moore, Faire Binney, Grace Valentine and Rowland Bottomley being names known wherever there is a screen. Mr. Morey, star of Vitagraph; Kathlyn Williams, a screen favorite long established; Matt Moore, now being starred by Cosmopolitan and known to all screen "fans"; Faire Binney, and Grace Valentine.

Screen's Best Actors in Selig-Rork Dramas

The remarkably high standard of the casting of the two-reel photoplays being produced by Selig-Rork for Educational, is evidenced in the fact that such famous artists as Lewis Stone and Wallace Beery have been consistently selected for the leading roles. Stone appears in two and Beery in all of the four productions so far completed.

"The Selig-Rork two-reel plays have the punch that spells a knockout," said Mr. Beery, who has been referred to by one of the foremost newspaper critics in the country as "the greatest 'heavy' on the screen today."

"It has been my good fortune," said Mr. Beery, "to enact leading roles in such big pictures as 'The Last of the Mohicans,' 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse,' 'Behind the Door,' 'The Mollycoddle' and others of equal success. I can truthfully say, however, that the roles in the Selig-Rork two-reel photoplays which have been entrusted to me are as big as any I have ever played."

Varied Accessories on Warner Feature

An unusual variety of advertising accessories have been devised for the Warner Brothers' latest production, "Why Girls Leave Home," featuring Anna Q. Nilsson, and these it is announced include innovations for exploitation purposes.

The complete array of accessories consists of striking one, three, six and twenty-four sheets, a sixteen page press book with an original cover design, small oval pasters suitable for use on all mailing matter, red door knob hangers with white lettering reading: "Do You Know," on one side, and "Why Girls Leave Home" on the other, put and take novelties, two sets of lobby display photographs, plain and hand colored window cards suitable for tie-ups with millinery shops, department stores, confectioners, etc., two different trailers, an effective herald, information postal cards, slides and dignified pamphlets that serve to give prospective patrons a good idea of what can be expected by seeing the picture.

The large cast includes Virginia Valle, feminine lead; Bernard Durning, actor and director; Nigel DeBrukier, Otto Hoffman, Hazel Dean, Evelyn Selbrie, Jim Farley, Tom O'Brien, Kirk Lucas, Bob Perry and Charles Gorman. Interest in "Peacock Alley"

Independent Field Aroused by News of Mae Murray Production

THE advertising campaign which is now under way in the trade papers of the film industry by the Tiffany Productions is focussing the attention of the leaders of the independent field upon "Peacock Alley," the Robert Z. Leonard production in which Mae Murray is making her first appearance as an independent star and producer.

One of the peculiar developments of the advertising is the flood of inquiries of the leading theatres throughout the country concerning the releasing arrangements of "Peacock Alley" and the other pictures of the series which Robert Z. Leonard will direct with Mae Murray in the stellar role.

Some of the biggest houses in the country have asked for pre-release engagements of "Peacock Alley." In speaking of this unusual interest M. H. Hoffman said "It is most gratifying to Miss Murray and Mr. Leonard that such wide-spread interest is being shown by theatre managers. Of course we cannot make any booking arrangements with exhibitors until one of the several negotiations now pending with some of the largest releasing organizations is closed."

Robert Z. Leonard is now engaged at the Mae Murray studios in New York putting the finishing touches upon "Peacock Alley," and it is expected that the first private showing of the completed production will shortly be made before an audience of distinguished film people.

Mr. Hoffman said that while negotiations for the countrywide distribution of "Peacock Alley" were under way, he could not as yet make a statement of the progress which has been made in this direction.

As soon as "Peacock Alley" is out of Mr. Leonard's hands, the preliminary work on the next production of the Mae Murray series will begin.

Tells Sonora Films Plans

Julius Singer Resigns from Reelcraft to Develop Sonora Company

JULIUS Singer, one of the most popular film executives in the industry and formerly connected with the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation since its inception has resigned and will hereafter devote all of his time to furthering the aims and purposes of his newly organiezd Sonora Film Distributing Corporation.

Mr. Singer is one of the film industry's pioneers and was connected with Carl Laemmle and other famous leaders before fame and recognition came their way. He was the founder of the Bee Hive Exchange, one of the first independent exchanges organized. Combined with the Interstate, Bull's Eye and the Bee Hive, the combination became the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation.

In outlining the plans of the Sonora organization. Mr. Singer stated: "Although we have been organized for the past three months, we have had little to do with the exhibitor. In those three months we devoted most of our time to exploiting our entry into the cinema world, and advertising our first independent production, a stupendous foreign feature, "Tradition." This we played at the New York Hippodrome a month to a large audience. Another reason why we did not start operations was that we determined to wait until Independence month and then fire our first shot. And our first shot is "Tradition." We have taken a suite of offices on the fourth floor of 1600 Broadway, which will be our New York Exchange. The release date for this supreme feature will be September 19th for New York and New Jersey. As to the New England, Western, and Southern territories, we will state right the product.

Canadian Rights Sold on "Heart of the North"

Rights for the Dominion of Canada were sold this week on "The Heart of the North," the George H. Davis-Joe Brandt Independent feature. L. E. Ouimet, head of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., of Canada, while on a visit to New York, screened the picture, and within thirty minutes of the time of screening, had closed the deal for the acquisition of the Canadian territory.

Mr. Ouimet made a special trip to New York for the purpose of securing a limited number of big, first-run features for Fall release in his territory, and the record time in which he acquired "The Heart of the North" speaks well for the merit of this picture.

Goldwyn to Have Weiss Series

"Sportlight" Pictures to Be Distributed by Goldwyn

LOUIS WEISS, vice president of Artclass Pictures Corporation, announced this week the consummation of important releasing arrangements between Artclass Pictures Corporation and the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, whereby the latter named organization will release fifty-two short length subjects for Weiss Brothers during the next two years.

This release will be known as "The Sportlight," produced by Jack Eaton under a special arrangement with Artclass Pictures Corporation. The new series to be distributed through Goldwyn will comprise twenty-six releases each year, one production of thousand foot length being issued every two weeks. The date for the initial release is set for September twenty-fifth of this year and is entitled "Speed," to be followed by one subject semi-monthly.

"The Sportlight" is conceived and edited by Grantland Rice, famous metropolitan sport writer, whose column of the same name appears daily in the New York Tribune, in addition to sixty other leading dailies throughout this country. Jack Eaton, producer of the latest Goldwyn release, is well and favorably known to the motion picture industry as an executive and producer. He is responsible for the series of James Montgomery Flagg special comedies released by Paramount some time ago and also produced the Grantland Rice novelty called "The Sport Pictorial" over a period of one year. Eaton will also be remembered as Managing Director of the New York Strand theatre for a considerable time, during which he introduced several innovations in the matter of presentation.

Commenting on the contract signed with Goldwyn for the release of "The Sportlight" Louis Weiss said, among other things: I believe "The Sportlight" will prove the most successful short length subject which Goldwyn has even handled. My extremely pleasant relation with Goldwyn during their distribution of our production "The Revenge of Tarzan" was a large factor in determining the national releasing organization to handle these fifty-two new short length subjects. Under the direction of Mr. Eaton we intend presenting the exhibitors with a film novelty dealing with every branch of sport. Each sport dealt with will be analyzed thoroughly by means of specially built slow motion cameras, in addition to the scenes displayed at regular speed. Every release of "The Sportlight" will be intended for first run presentation in the finest houses of the country as a short length novelty of wide appeal. The variety of subjects thus far prepared for release will touch upon every branch of recognized sport and incidently we have several surprises in mind in the selection of subjects and their treatment. The announcement of this releasing arrangement with Goldwyn is but part of the definite plans Weiss Brothers have formulated for renewed activities during the year opening with September first.

World Film Offers "Judgment"

Predict Huge Success for Victor Hugo Offering

MILTON C. WORK, President of World Film Corporation, has announced the early release to Independent Buyers of the most elaborate production his organization has ever exploited—the dramatic spectacle "Judgment!" founded upon Victor Hugo's drama, "Mary Tudor."

"Judgment!" is described as an elaborately produced picture with stupendous settings, a cast of distinguished actors, and ensembles of thousands. The story is said to have all the thrills of melodrama, coupled with the absorbingly human characterizations which only Victor Hugo could draw. The picture has been elaborately prepared for presentation; the subtitles have been written by the well known screen authors, Harry Chandle and Wm. B. Laub, and special art title effects have been prepared by the pastel artist, Warren A. Newcombe.

Milton C. Work, President of World Film Corporation, in speaking of the production, said:

"'Judgment!' in my opinion, is the greatest State Right opportunity ever offered to the independent buyer. It is a picture which will appeal to the most intellectual and discriminating audiences, and at the same time, will 'go' tremendously with those patrons of motion pictures who like thrills in their entertainment.

"It is not often that such a combination is found in a big spectacle picture. Most of them are likely to be over the heads of the average audience, but I feel safe in saying that no one who sees 'Judgment!' is going to be disappointed. Few pictures, indeed, have such thrilling scenes, for example, as the Headsman's Procession, in which those marked for death march to the scaffold; and few if any actresses could duplicate the remarkable acting of Ellen Richter as Mary Tudor."

"Judgment!" heads a list of new productions offered for the Fall and Winter by World Film. Their "Suspicious Wives," starring Mollie King and directed by John M. Stahl, has already been bought for New York by First National, and has been acquired for New England by Cosmopolitan.

World Film Corporation's series of Joe Moore-Eileen Sedgwick dramas are the latest productions of the Pacific Producing Company. Joe Moore, brother of Tom, Owen and Mat, and Eileen Sedgwick, the popular serial star, are featured in five tense dramas.

"The White Rider," the first of the series, is a mystery story of the West. "The Problem Eternal," the second of the Moore-Sedgwick series, is the story of thrilling experiences in a big city. "False Brands," as is indicated by the title, is a story of cattle rustling. In "The Wolf Pack," Joe Moore is a member of the Canadian Mounted Police.

"Arrest Norma MacGreggor," is the title of the fifth Moore-Sedgwick release—a story of Chinese smugglers in a city in Western Canada.

On its list of offerings, World Film Corporation has another production which, while it is different from the others in that it is a revival of an already released subject, should arouse marked interest. This is Clara Kimball Young's starring vehicle, "Camille."

RARE OPPORTUNITY FOR BUYERS AND SELLERS

Arrow Film Announces Feature

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, that Arrow is about to launch a super feature, which according to Dr. Shallenberger, will take its place as one of the greatest independent attractions ever made, "Ten Nights in a Barroom."

"Ten Nights in a Barroom" was made by Blazed Trail Productions, Inc., under the direction of Oscar Apfel. It features an all star cast headed by John Lowell and such sterling actors as Baby Ivy Ward, Nell Clark, Charles Mackay, James Phillips, Ethel Dwyer, Charles Beyer, John Woodford, Kempton Greene, Mrs. Thomas Ward, Harry Fisher, Lillian Kemble, J. Norman Wells, Leatta Miller, Thomas Vill, Richard Carlysle, Robert Hamilton and is a modernized version of the famous old melodrama that has thrilled the hearts of young and old in every city, town and hamlet in the United States for the past thirty years. The screen version is by L. Case Russell, and is said not only to maintain the old thrills and heart interest of the original story, but to have greatly improved it.

"Ten Nights in a Barroom" is Soon to Be Released

Dr. Shallenberger points out that it is a production of unusual value to the exhibitor, for it is difficult, if not impossible to think of another subject that is so universally and favorably known throughout the world. It is almost impossible to find anyone who has reached the age of maturity who has not either seen the play or read the book which has enjoyed one of the widest circulations of any novel ever published.

The advertising and publicity department of Arrow is actively engaged in laying an advertising and publicity campaign. This campaign will be nation-wide in scope and will include the newspapers as well as the national and regional trade papers. A special set of paper is now in work with the Ritchey Lithograph Co. which will consist of five special one-sheets; two three-sheets; two six-sheets; one twenty-four-sheet and window cards. A novelty mailing card, said to be unusual in its originality, unique in its particular application of the subject in hand, is being prepared, the initial order of which is for 100,000. This card can be used both by the exchanges and by the exhibitors. Arrangements are under way for the publication of a special photoplay edition of the song, "Father Dear Father Come Home With Me Now," on the cover of which will be an illustration of one of the scenes and the principal characters.

Arrangements have already been made for the issuance of a four-page rotogravure supplement devoted exclusively to "Ten Nights in a Barroom," with one of the leading newspapers. This will be given national circulation by the Arrow Film Corporation. Several additional exploitation aids are now being prepared while the usual full line of colored photographs and oil paintings will be supplied.

The release date of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," has not yet been set, but Dr. Shallenberger states it will be released very shortly.

Trade Showing of Entire "Tarzan" Serial

Upon the arrival in New York City this week of the last three episodes of "Adventures of Tarzan," dispatched by special messenger from the studios of the Great Western Producing Company, Louis Weiss, Secretary of the organization which is distributing this Elmo Lincoln serial, announced the completion of plans for an elaborate pre-screening of the entire fifteen episodes.

"I believe in justice to all concerned," said Mr. Weiss, "that the serial should be viewed in its entirety from episode one to fifteen, giving full opportunity to determine whether or not the quality, suspense and pace of the first episodes are maintained throughout without a let-up. In order to carry out this idea it is my intention to present within the next two weeks for the consideration of the various critics and a group of exhibitors numbering more than six hundred Adventures of Tarzan in its complete form. This unique showing is made possible by the fact that the serial is completely finished, the final cutting touches to the final episodes having been given at the coast during the past two weeks."

Kineto Offers First Feature

"NOW that we have completed 'The Four Seasons,' said Charles Urban this week, discussing his four-reel masterpiece, "I feel like sitting back and wondering why no one ever did it before.

"When you stop to think how much we all talk about Nature; how we are all the time—in speech and books and comment—referring to it in superlatives, it does seem amazing that we have neglected it so in pictures.

"Of course, we have had snatches of it. Countless scenics, no end of touches here and there, have brought it before us, but never before has anyone really tried to put Nature's whole story in a single motion picture.

"No story born of an individual's imagination could be so magnificent, so matchlessly beautiful as is the story of Nature herself.

"The Four Seasons," in Four Reels, is Remarkable Scenic

"What we have done is to take a whole year and tell the story of the universe; the whole story as it is expressed in the flora, the fauna, and the elements. The vegetation of the fields and woods and gardens and marshes; the countless children which we know as animals—reptiles, birds, the great beasts and the small; all the scores and scores of them; and finally the humors of Nature as she expresses them in storms and rainbows and sunsets, her many ways of wrath and loveliness.

"You may think it was an easy task, but it was not. On the contrary, it was extremely difficult. It required, not only great technical ability, but a thorough-grounded knowledge of animal life, plant life and science in general. We were fortunate in being able to secure the ablest of all men for such a picture as this—Dr. Raymond, L. Ditmars, curator of the New York Zoological Society. He not only has the knowledge that comes of long experience in the field, but he is an expert of motion picture men. It is also fortunate that he has an exceedingly keen dramatic sense; he has had a long contact with motion pictures and he realizes values from an exhibitor's viewpoint just as keenly as he does from the scientific.

"We have edited 'The Four Seasons' in four reels; it is like a book with four chapters, one each being devoted to the seasons; one to Spring, one to Summer, the third to Autumn and the last to Winter.

"Seeing them, audiences will find a year unrolling before their eyes; they see the beginnings in Spring, the blooming in Summer, the crumblings and preparation in Autumn and the retreat in the Winter. One year in the Universe is like any other year, except to human beings, and 'The Four Seasons' gives a perfect impression of what Nature really is.

"The Four Seasons" will be released by the Kineto Company as an Urban Popular Classic. It is the first four reel feature subject put out by this company, which heretofore has specialized in single reels exclusively.

"Tony Sarg's Almanac" Sets Booking Record

The week of September 11th has proven to be a banner week for Tony Sarg's Almanac. The fifth issue of this delightfully humorous screen classic, "Fireman Save My Child," is playing day and date at the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres in New York, and also at the three big first run Shea houses in Buffalo the Hippodrome, Criterion and the North Side. In Philadelphia it starts on an indefinite run at the beautiful new Stanley Theatre.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"Could Columbus Discover an American?"

("World Wanderings" Series—One Reel—Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

THIS is a single reel subject of unusual interest. New York's lower east side, one might think, could not offer any types or scenes which would be sufficiently novel to delight a picture audience. But such is not the case. Educational has sought out types which cannot fail to interest. Many of the human derelicts who drift about the Bowery and Cooper Square Park were entirely ignorant of the fact that they were being photographed. The camera was placed across the street and the magnifying lens was used. The result is realism, which is not, however, disgusting.

Then there are scenes of "Pushcart Row" in Cherry street and the dense crowds of Jews, Russians, Slavs, Italians, and Poles who have all been dumped into New York's melting pot. The titles are the most excellent that we have ever seen in this type of picture.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Say It with Flowers"

(Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels—Fox)

THIS is one of the most easy-going of the Sunshine brand to reach the screen in some time, and for that reason will not be as well received as its predecessors. The first reel opens with the old business of the unwelcome lover who forces his attentions upon a pretty stenographer and who persistently returns to devious ways after being ejected some eight or ten times. The second reel has to do with a house party. The suitor brings a bouquet of flowers which a youngster in the household surreptitiously introduces to an ant hill. The result is a variety of shimmy dances by the gentlemen who dance with the wearer of the flowers. A chase ends this comedy.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Brownie's Little Venus"

(Century Comedy Featuring the Dog, "Brownie," and Baby Peggy—Length Two Reels—Released by Universal)

"BROWNIE'S LITTLE VENUS" is an amusing series of dog and baby tricks in which the Century dog and Baby Peggy have about equal opportunity. With family audiences it will register as a satisfactory number on the bill and should prove especially attractive for children's matinees.

The picture recently found a place on the New York Rivoli bill where it went over in good shape.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Cyclone Smith's Vow"

(Two Reel Western Featuring Eddie Polo—Released by Universal)

THIS picture is the first of a series of two-reels featuring Eddie Polo, erstwhile serial star. The series is called "The Return of Cyclone Smith" and is a sequel to some similar productions made by Mr. Polo several seasons past.

The initial offering is a melodramatic short feature in which the star figures as an ex-convict of a Western state who has done time for a crime his brother committed. He gets a job on a ranch and wins the heart of the rancher's daughter. His past is discovered, however, and his suit disapproved.

Later he starts out to capture some bandits, only to find one of them is his brother. The brother is killed by one of his companions which releases "Cyclone" from a promise made to their mother and explanations and a happy ending follow.

As a story "Cyclone Smith's Vow" contains nothing new and its development wastes little time with details. However, the picture has action of the sort that admirers of the star undoubtedly like and viewed from this angle it should prove a satisfactory release.—J. S. DICKERSON.

Movie Chats—No. 40

(Released Through National Exchanges, Inc.)

THERE is considerable action in this short subject, but it is chemical and not movie action. The reel is entitled "The Chemistry of Combustion" and shows a series of experiments illustrating the spontaneous, and at times, violent combustion which results when various chemicals are mixed. The titles are technical, and only a chemical student will know it is all about. However, the result is interesting to watch, even to the "great unwashed" of moviedom. To them chemistry is a land of temperamental elements which very suddenly and unaccountably erupt, expand, fume and combust, in a most mysterious manner. And this reel will increase their wonder and add to the mystery.

"Hiking the Alps with the Swis Boy Scouts"

(Kineto Review No. 42—Released through National Exchanges, Inc.)

THIS is a most appealing short subject—on of the most appealing, in fact, of the Kinet Review series. Besides being a Swiss sceni it will be welcomed by every youngster who be longs to, or is interested in, the Boy Scou movement. And there are few boys, and ne many more adults, who could not be included i this list. The Swiss youngsters are clean cu likeable chaps, and this reel follows thei through the most striking points of interest i the Bermese Oberland, scenically one of th most enchanting spots on the globe. For in stance, they visit the Simplon Hospice, and rom with the majestic St. Bernard dogs.

This is a Kineto review which should be we com in any theatre.

"The Cowpuncher's Comeback"

(Two Reel Western with Art Acor Starred—Released by Universal)

ART ACORD and a cast of cowboys con tribute a lot of hard riding and quic shooting in this conventional Western about girl who owned a ranch, a wandering cow puncher who protected her and thwarted a num ber of villains who were rustling cattle.

Action is the keynote of the entire two ree and viewed from this angle the offering is en tirely satisfactory.

As an actor Acord is a first-class horseman Joey McCreery is the rose of the rancho. Th story and continuity is by Robert Dillon. Ed ward Laemmle directed. Some very fine wester scenery is in evidence.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"A Tongue Sandwich"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—One-half Reel—Wm. Fox)

THESE two brain children, or pen childre of Bud Fisher get mixed up in this hal reel with a Chinese tong. The result is on fairly amusing. Comparing it with other adve tures of this inimitible pair of cartoon cha acters, the subject is below par. They have bee more cleverly drawn in the past. And the have been more amusing ideas in previou drawings. This one concerns the sudden ar well-plotted rescue of Jeff by Mutt from sacr fice to a Chinese god. Tieing the Chinks' cu together is largely responsible.—MATTHE A. TAYLOR.

Southern House Remodeled Into a Modern Moving Picture Theatre

Mobile, Alabama, Now Has Movie Temple with Metropolitan Appointments

Taking over of the old Dauphin theatre by J. B. Webster and the remodeling and transforming of it has resulted in Mobile, Ala., getting a moving picture temple—the Bijou—of which the city may well be proud. The new show house will be operated by the Bijou Amusement Company, which already owns and operates the Empire theatre in Mobile. Mr. Webster is president of the company, H. W. Fowler vice-president and Miss Marguerite Luckel, secretary and treasurer. Miss Luckel will also act as manager of the new theatre.

The Bijou theatre is a materialization of the mutual confidence existing between the people of Mobile and the Bijou Amusement Company, Miss Luckel stated.

"The Bijou was built," said Miss Luckel, "because it was felt that the people of Mobile would appreciate a new theatre and because of the splendid patronage they have given the Empire theatre in the past seven years. We have tried to live up to this policy and Mobilians have been exceedingly generous in their response. We introduce the Bijou theatre with the feeling that amusement lovers in this city deserve the best and that they always appreciate it."

Miss Marguerite Luckel, manager of the Bijou and Empress theatre, Mobile, Ala. The former, which is a First National sub-franchise holder, opened recently

The equipment and decoration of the Bijou theatre places it in the class of modern theatre construction, and it is possibly the most up-to-date playhouse within a radius of several hundred miles. Work was begun on the building in February and has progressed with attention and care to every detail which would give Mobilians a better theatre.

The entrance on Dauphin street is through a foyer 100 feet in length, the front being developed in verde antique bronze. A Spanish Moorish design has been selected for the foyer, gold and green being the keynote of the color plan here as well as in the house. Tiffany blends were used by the artist, James F. Guiterrez, who did all the designing and decorative work. The walls are panelled, pilasters and panels being outlined with gold and black while the woodwork is mahogany. The foyer is tiled and brass posts connected with green velvet ropes serve to separate incoming and outgoing audiences.

Hansen Seating Device Installed in Million Dollar Los Angeles House

New System Proves Highly Successful in Graumans Third and Broadway Theatre

New equipment for theatre conceived by a telephone company electrical engineer and consisting of seating plan of the house shown in miniature electric lights in a cabinet in the foyer, each one connected with a single seat and lighting if the seat is empty, has been installed in Grauman's Third and Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, and is proving highly successful. According to Mr. Grauman, the vacant seat indicator is worth a great deal daily to his house, for it means the elimination of help, the pleasing of patrons by permiting them to select their own seats and at the same time shows the floor managers and ushers every vacant seat in the theatre. An extension of the device, with an additional cabinet, is being placed in the private office of Mr. Grauman so that he will at all times know the number of people in the theatre.

The device was invented by Harris J. Hansen, and is known as Hansen Vacant Seat Indicator. It is very simple in its construction and operation, and consists of applying the telephone switchboard devices to the seats. On each seat is a small spring, which raises the seat slightly. This operation makes an electrical connection by a small switch and the light goes on in the indicator cabinet. Every fifth row in the indicator cabinet has green lights, making it easy for the usher or patron to immediately see the exact location of the vacant seat for which the light is burning.

The cost of operation is trivial, as a transformer cuts down the electrical current to ten volts, the required amount for the lighting equipment in the cabinet. The equipment can be installed after completion of a theatre, as cables are used to connect the indicator and the seats. The company owning the patents planned to install the devices on a lease basis.

Projectionists' Letter Box

J. A. B., Ohio: Will you tell me in what way the Compensarc differs from the ordinary house-transformer?

Reply: A compensarc is an adjustable transformer of the constant voltage type. That is, when the current on the arc side varies the voltage remains approximately the same, although there is a very slight voltage increase with considerable increases in current. In this respect it is similar to a pole—or, as you call it, a house-transformer. But the compensarc differs because of the reactance coil which is placed in series with the secondary. This coil is the current controlling means operated by the switch on the cover of the compensarc. With all of the reactance cut in, the current is at its lowest point. Successive current steps are obtained by cutting out certain portions of the reactance coil.

C. S., Los Angeles: In an argument—a friendly one—here recently it was stated that by speeding up the machine, the revolving shutter would cut through the light beam faster and therefore give more light on the screen. The man who put forward this idea said that the Baird uses the principal on all its machines. It doesn't seem right to me, but I am not sure. Do not use my name in the answer.

Reply: This question comes up frequently. It has even been discussed in the News, but since C. S. is ignorant of the facts, others may be also, thus making it worthwhile to repeat the facts here.

No matter how high you speed your machine, providing you do not alter the gear train of the shutter shaft, you cannot get additional illumination on the screen. For while your shutter does revolve faster your film is passing the aperture faster in the same proportion. The shutter is therefore still allowing the same percentage of light to reach the screen.

And what is more, this is not the idea used in the Baird projector. The Baird uses a two-winger running on a 1½ to 1 basis. This means that instead of the shutter making one revolution to each revolution of the flywheel it makes one and one-half turns.

Suppose, for example, you number the two equal blades on the Baird No. 1 and No. 2. As the intermittent starts to pull the film down blade No. 1 covers the light ray. As the film rests and is being projected to the screen blade No. 2 and then blade No. 1 cut across the ray and provide the balancing flickers. Finally as the film starts to move again blade No. 2 covers the ray. Thus you see that the shutter has made one revolution and a half to the one cycle of film movement.

The quicker covering power of the blades and their rapid obscuring movement when used as flicker blades means that a greater percentage of the total light flux reaches the screen. But the machine itself rotates no faster than the ordinary projector.

Chief Projectionist at Capitol Theater An Enthusiast on Latest Equipment

Arthur J. Smith Always on Lookout for New Devices—Praises Paramount Condenser Lens

Arthur J. Smith, who as chief projectionist of the Capitol theatre, New York, who is in charge of about the neatest projection room that it is possible to have, is always on the lookout for equipment that will stand all the unusual strains which it would be called on to bear if used in that large house.

Smith is as much an authority on the use of devices and equipment as one man is able to be. He has worked at every end of the camera and projection game for about the past seventeen years. Starting out as a camera man he traveled through most of this country for several companies.

At one time he became interested in the improvement of color films. This was when that art was in its first stage. So in line with his usual pioneering methods of always looking for new devices and improvements in any part of the movie game. With a side kick he traveled to Germany and spent much time and much of his resources working on this idea.

Afterwards he returned to camera work again and was with D. W. Griffith for five years. During this time his ramblings took him into nearly every section of the globe—Canada, South America, Austria, Germany and France.

He is now chief projectionist of the Capitol, perhaps the best known temple of motion pictures in the world. Smith is an ardent enthusiast about any piece of equipment which he has found to have worked well for him. Smith has several small labor and time-saving devices in the Capitol's projection room which he has designed himself.

The chief projectionist and his staff, George Bothwell, Cecil R. Wood, Sr., Cecil R. Wood, Jr., Robert Millstein and Fred Stoffregen had great difficulty in securing a condenser lens that would bear the strain of the work at the Capitol. Several condenser lens were tested out and proved failures, as they could not stand the heat generated by 150 amperes in the arc, necessary for the large throw of two hundred and seventeen feet to the 22-foot square screen. Smith, after experimenting and testing, at last found a lens which satisfied him—the Paramount Condenser Lens.

M. H. Tromba of the Paramount Lens Corp.

Smith says that he is very well pleased with these lenses, declaring that they have been subjected to very severe and rigid tests, and have withstood all of them. "The Paramount condenser lenses are about twice as hard as the others we have tried, and withstanding pitting, they last over twice as long. They give a clear field, with almost no spherical aberation. The grinding and polish of the lenses are good, and there is no discoloring. The lenses have been subjected to amperage varying from 140 to 150. They are a true economy, besides withstanding all the unusual strains which they must bear in the Capitol."

Pastime Amusement Co., of Charleston, S. C., Planning to Erect Its Sixth House

S. D. Easterby, Efficiency Manager, Visits Equipment Centers in Quest of New Ideas

Charleston, S. C. is the home of the Pastime Amusement Co., a live-wire organization headed by Albert Sottile, who is president.

At present this company has five theatres, all of which are equipped with Simplex Projectors, installed through the Lucas Theatre Supply Co., of Atlanta, Ga.

These theatres offer a wide variety of entertainment such as vaudeville, road attractions and the best of motion pictures, including the city news, shot by a local cameraman. All of which is something to feel proud of, having been accomplished in a few short years.

As an expression of their faith in the future of Charleston, the Pastime Amusement Co. will open their sixth theatre this fall, which, according to present plans, will be one of the foremost in the South.

With this end in view, S. D. Easterby, general efficiency man for this progressive company, has been scouting around the country for ideas that could be incorporated in the new house which would add beauty and comfort to same.

While in New York, Easterby visited the Simplex factory, Capitol theatre, Cinema equipment center and many other places well known in the industry. Mrs. Easterby who accompanied her husband was busy, too, taking in the various organ recitals with visits to a number of organ factories, as upon her judgment will rest to a large degree the selection of the organ for the new theatre, she being an accomplished musician.

S. A. Wall and H. R. Meyer, projectionists with the above company, were also recent visitors to New York, and spent considerable time at the Simplex factory, watching the making and assembling of projectors.

Plan New Theatre

Plans are being drawn by the Hoffman-Henon Co., of Philadelphia, for a $600,000 legitimate theatre to be located at 1825-33 Market Street, Philadelphia. The capacity of the house will be 2,400. A. M. Greenfield, of Philadelphia, is agent for the syndicate putting up the theatre.

Monsoon Company Stages Novel Stunt in Making Installations in Richmond

Trucks Bear Giant Monsoon Fans Through Streets in Operation—Five Wells Theatres Equipped

Richmond, Va., was recently treated to the most unique parade in the history of the city when a string of huge motor trucks, loaded with equipment of the Monsoon Cooling System, Inc., wended their way through the streets to five theatres of the Wells Amusement Company and now the Lyric, the Academy, the Bijou, the Isis and the Odeon theatres are the proud possessors of Monsoon Cooling Systems. Two of the trucks are shown in the accompanying photographs; one bearing a Giant Monsoon in operation.

The equipment required to insure perfect comfort to the patrons of the Isis theatre during these sweltering days consisted of two Duplex Sets, one with two seven-foot and the other with two five-foot "Monsoons." With the assistance of a 10 and a 5-horse-power motor they will furnish pure air in abundance with the result that the theatre will not only be cool, but thoroughly ventilated at all times.

In the Bijou theatre a Duplex Set of two six-foot "Monsoons" and two eight-foot "Monsoon" singles were necessary to make the theatre comfortable. The power for this collection of breeze makers consists of a 5 and two 2½-horse-power motors.

The Lyric theatre boasts of a No. 9 Duplex Set with two nine-foot fans operated by a 20-horse-power motor while the Odeon has two six-foot "Monsoon" Singles with a 5-horse-power motor and the Academy a Duplex Set with two eight-foot "Monsoons" and a 15-horse-power motor.

In all, fourteen "Monsoons" and eight motors with a total of 65-horse-power are going to do some tall chasing of hot weather and the patrons of five Wells' theatres are going to be happy in the knowledge that they may now enjoy watching their favorite "movie star" or "staress" without drops of perspiration skidding down their back or dripping off the tips of their nose. And, more than that: when an exhibitor gives a contract for the installation of a cooling system in five of his theatres at one time to one manufacturer it is a pretty good indication of the exhibitor's confidence in the ability of that manufacturer to "deliver the goods," and, what is more, in this instance, it is an excellent proof of the wonderfully growing popularity of "Monsoons."

Furthermore, be it known, these installations were made without interferring in the least with the usual performances in any of the theatres.

Cann Has New Iris Device

A new camera device which Bert Cann is employing for the photography of productions presenting Doris May as a star in her own right, in Hunt Stromberg Productions released by Robertson-Cole has attracted attention.

The new invention is in the form of an automatic iris. Under the old system of a hand-propelled iris, the cameraman was required to turn the camera crank with one hand, and operate the iris, by means of a little lever, with the other. This was satisfactory to an extent, but in comparison with the new automatic iris attachment, which, attached to the camera, is operated by the pressure of a tiny button, fades into oblivion, for the new invention gives a smoothness and clarity not held by the old method, and also lightens the task and concentration of the cinematographer.

The finesse and brilliancy of the photography is said to be one of the important features of the production qualities of the first Doris May production.

"Power's Governor Type Mechanical Speed Control Is Very Simple and Works Perfectly" Says F. H. Richardson

Progress
DEPEND UPON POWER'S

The Noted Editor of the Projection Department of Moving Picture World

THE NEW POWER'S SPEED CONTROL

F. H. RICHARDSON

MOVING PICTURE WORLD, SEPT. 17TH, 1921

The Nicholas Power Company is out with a new and exceedingly unique projector mechanism speed control, which combines a mechanism almost exactly similar to the take-up friction device now in use on the Power's Projector and a spring-actuated engine governor.

The control has been thoroughly tested out, and we may accept the fact that the Power Company is willing to supersede its old type speed control with the new as pretty conclusive evidence that the new control is all right.

Looking at Figure 1 we see shaft M, on either end of which are collars P and Q. This shaft runs in bearings N and U. All parts between pulley A and part B, including ball bearings O, G and F, are mounted on shaft M, but are not in any way attached thereto.

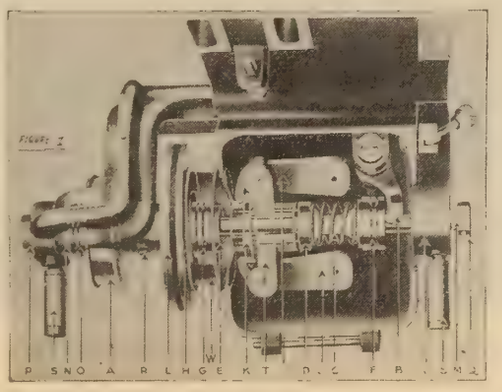
Get it clearly in your mind that these parts simply use shaft M as a spindle upon which to revolve.

The action of the governor is as follows: The driving motor is belted directly to pulley A, which accommodates a ⅝-inch flat belt. This pulley, together with part L and the disc or face of friction material attached rigidly thereto by means of screws, form one part and revolve as a unit.

Part B is a fork which forms the lower end of the speed control handle used by the projectionist. Part F is a ball bearing, as are also part G and O. These three bearings ride on shaft M. They do not, however, carry any part of the machinery, but act as thrust bearings to accommodate the difference in movement between parts A-L and all other revolving parts of the mechanism. In other words, they carry the end thrust, which is the basic principle upon which the whole device operates.

How It Operates

When the projectionist's speed control handle is in the position which stops the projector mechanism, fork B is moved back away from thrust ball bearing F. When the projectionist's speed control handle is in a position which starts the projector mechanism, fork B is moved against thrust bearing F, shoving it endwise and compressing coil spring C, which brings part L and H together under pressure. The projector is driven by a ⅝-inch flat belt operating on pulley W, which is a part of disc H.



Now look at Figure 1 for a moment. Pulley A and disc L are driven direct from the motor, as per Figure 2. Coil spring C being compressed by part B, brings discs H and L together under pressure, the amount of pressure depending upon the amount of force exerted by coil spring C. The projector mechanism being driven by pulley W, we may easily understand that when the pressure between the two friction discs becomes sufficient, the projector mechanism will be started.

ARM TO WHICH PART B FIG 1 ATTACHES
FRICTION MATERIAL ATTACHED TO DISC L, FIG 1 BY SCREWS

BALL BEARING O FIG 1

Where the Governor Comes In

And here is where governor I comes in. Governor weights I J, being subject to centrifugal force, the tendency is, of course, to throw them outward, and thus to pull part K towards coil spring C, thus compressing spring C and reducing the pressure between parts L and H.

When it is desired to drive the projector at a certain rate of speed the projectionist sets his control handle in the proper position, which will cause spring C to exert just enough pressure so that when the speed reaches the desired point, governor weights I J will exert sufficient force to relieve the pressure between discs L and H, and thus prevent the speed of the projector mechanism going beyond the desired limit.

This sounds a bit complicated, but it really is very simple, also it works perfectly.

As we before said, the device has been thoroughly tested by the Nicholas Power Company. There seems to be nothing likely to get out of order, and we congratulate the company on the improvement thus accomplished in the Power Projector.

Projection room of the new Aldine theatre, Wilmington, Del., showing the two Simplex machines

Simplex Lands in New Wilmington House

Lewis M. Swaab & Son, of Philadelphia, Pa., distributors of Simplex Projectors for Delaware, southern New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania, report the opening of the Felt Bros. new 2,000-seat Aldine theatre, Wilmington, Del., which is said to be one of the largest theatres ever erected in the State.

One of the many novel features of this new theatre is the large comfortable projection room, which is sixteen feet wide and ten feet deep. There is also a noise-proof room for the generator set, as well as a lavatory and wash room.

The equipment consists of two Type "S" motor driven Simplex Projectors with Snaplite Lenses, Kleig Spotlight, Martin Rotary Converter and a special metal work-bench placed in the rear of the Simplex Projectors. This bench contains a motor rewind, concealed light for use when splicing films and compartments for scrap film, carbons and tools.

Frank Page and Albert B. Williams are the lucky projectionists whose duty it will be to project an eighteen-foot picture on a Super-lite Screen at a distance of one hundred and fifty feet with the above equipment.

Thomas W. Lamb, the architect, is to be congratulated upon his thoughtfulness in providing such wonderful working quarters for the projectionists, for with such conditions it makes a projectionist take pride in his work and good projection is bound to be the result.

New Theatre for Toronto

It's a new Eastman product but the response from the trade has been general and immediate.

Seven colors are now available—amber, blue, green, orange, pink, red and yellow.

All Eastman Film, tinted or untinted, is identified by the words "Eastman" "Kodak" stencilled in the film margin.

"Vets" Operate Machine Equipped with Powers-G. E. High Intensity Arc Lamp

Theodore Ridder and Michael Smith Are Proud of Installation at Central Theatre

Theodore Ridder and Michael Smith, veteran projectionists at the Central Theatre, Broadway, New York, are the first operators to run a machine equipped with Power's G E High Intensity Arc Lamp. The installation in the Central on June 15 is claimed to be an event in cinemachinery industry.

Ridder and Smith were employed by the Fox Film corporation at the time the installation was made in the Central, but this theatre has now been taken over by the Universal Film Company and Ridder has been made chief projectionist with Smith as his assistant. Prior to his becoming an operator about twenty-two years ago Ridder was a machinist. He was then engaged by Pailey to run the machines in Proctor's Theatre, 28th Street and Broadway. The picture was run by Pailey as an act. Only one reel was shown and many will remember that often audiences found one reel more than sufficient. From this theatre Ridder went to Proctor's, 125th Street Theatre, New York, later becoming road machinist for the old Kinetograph Company. He remained when the firm was taken over by the General Film Company and spent four years traveling the Poli circuit. Since then he has been with the National Board of Censorship and with Fox in the Laboratory and Foreign Departments.

Michael Smith, Ridder's assistant, is also an old operator, starting over ten years ago as reel boy and becoming a full fledged operator in the Ohio Theatre, New York, one of the first of the Moss houses. He then tried being an exhibitor by opening the first open air motion picture theatre in Camden, N. J. At the close of the summer season he was employed by Rothafel in the Regent, New York. He has since gained wide experience by working for the Fox circuit, Sidney Cohen, Griffith, Prisma and others prominent in the motion picture industry.

Smith and Ridder are the two leading projectionists of the Central staff and are the ones who have handled the Power's G E Lamp since its installation, which they have taken great pride in doing. The installation on July 15th was of the simplest nature and was without special preparation. A representative of the Nicholas Power Co., simply installed the lamp in a Power's 6B Type "E" Lamphouse, gave a few general directions regarding the new device to Theodore Ridder and M. Smith, and then left. The two veteran projectionists proceeded to give the afternoon's performance with the Power's G E lamp and have continued to operate it since. With this installation the high intensity arc lamp passed from the experimental stage into the files of commercial use.

When asked to furnish a few details regarding Power's-G. E. Lamp and its operation, Ridder said, "Speaking for myself and Mike, we have taken considerable satisfaction in having been the first men to operate Power's G. E. Lamp in any theatre. While there have been many experiments with the High Intensity Lamp this installation marks the successful inauguration of this new lamp for practical theatre operation. We have had no trouble with the lamp apart from a few minor changes which were found advisable when the new device was subjected to practical tests in this theatre. The Nicholas Power Company is substituting carbon clamps of an entirely new design in place of the spring clamps now in use and the spring tension controlling the contact shoes will be removed a considerable distance from the source of heat. These two changes will entirely eliminate any troubles developed through the springs in the clamps and on the contact shoes becoming annealed and thus losing their tension. The lamp eliminates two-thirds of the work in trimming and the sp once set remains the same unless lamp is move It does away with the tightening up of nu which was frequently necessary on the old sty arc control as this lamp embodies its own a control. The entire device is remarkable co pact and is entirely inside the lamphouse. Th does away with the possibility of stumbling ov the arc control which not infrequently happe with the devices now on the market. The lam requiring no adjusting of screws to lengthen shorten arc and inserting and replacing carbo is a very simple matter. Summed up t Power's G. E. Lamp is extremely simple operation, is very cool, embodies its own a control, has few parts to get out of order, a is as close to being automatic as any proje tionist could wish."

Veteran Projectionist Realizes Need of Efficient Film Delivery Servic

Charles F. Mavety, Operator at Toronto, Canada, Runs a Fleet of Three Cars

Charles F. Mavety, a veteran moving picture projection machine operator of Toronto, Ontario, has built up an extensive film delivery service in Toronto for which he operates a fleet of three motor trucks and one passenger automobile, the latter being used for delivery work when emergency arises.

Mavety made his start when he realized how much inconvenience and confusion was caused through the make-shift methods of delivering films, frames, posters and signs between local exchanges and theatres almost every night in the week. Mavety was the operator in a nice West End suburban theatre, and he knew exactly how careful he had to be to see that films were delivered in time for shows, and had to be returned quickly for use in some other house in Toronto or elsewhere. He undertook to transport films to and from the theatre where he was employed, and it was not long before an exhibitor up the street asked him if he would like to be responsible for the delivery work in connection with the films for his house. This gave Mavety the real idea of a special delivery service for theatres only to l managed by a man who was right on t inside of the business and who knew eve pitfall of film transportation. He launch into business for himself.

After several years of hustling, Mave is the proprietor of an enterprise that do business with about 80 theatres in Toron —almost all of them. These include t Allen houses, the independent neighbo hood theatres, and others.

Mavety has devised an order form f the use of exhibitors which shows wh features, serials, comedies and other film as well as posters, are to be picked up delivered on various days during a wee These forms are used by exhibitors, a Mavety's drivers follow instructions wit out further worry. Under Mavety's d rection they know exactly when to st out on the rounds for either delivery pick-up and regular routes are followe A single extra trip costs 50 cents to a exhibitor or exchange manager, but reg lar contract rates are arranged for co tinued service requirements.—GLADISH.

Metal Frames Aided Exhibitors

Howard Reif, owner and manager of e Rialto theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, has und a simple solution for a dressy house ont, even when the architect has done hat he could to obviate any chance of a splay for the people on the sidewalk nder a marquise. The marquise on his eatre was, of necessity, extended over e sidewalk at the same level as the ceilg of his lobby, so that no space was ft for the installation of lights or other splay under it.

Banners were not satisfactory, for no atter how carefully they were put in sition they began to sag in a day or two nd looked sloppy. Cardboard was no tter, and even beaver board would not and the strain of being stretched over e lobby.

Metal frames finally solved the probn. The metal gave a rigidity which nich made it possible to use either ths or cardboard, and also offered a corative effect which greatly enhanced e appearance of the lobby.

The Rialto, Macon, Ga. Latest addition to the Capital Theatre Co. chain

Capitol Theatre Co. Adds Another Modern Movie House to Their Chain

The Rialto at Macon, Georgia, a Comfortable Moderate Sized Theatre Modernly Equipped

With the completion of the Rialto theatre at Macon, Georgia, the Capitol theatre company, which is controlled by the Southern Enterprises, Inc., of Atlanta, has added to its growing chain another comfortable moderate-sized moving picture house. The Rialto is located on the site of the old Macon theatre on Cotton avenue at Cherry street.

The house was put up under the direction of Walter Thames, a local contractor, and is a gem of motion picture architecture. Embodied in the Rialto are all the latest devices which provide for the comfort of the patrons. The Rialto has a capacity of 800.

The general color scheme of the theatre is rose, a gray blue, and tan, combined with several other colors in the detailed decorations with pleasing effect. The entrance, a half circle in shape, is tan and blue with a ceiling of buff. The background of the interior is tan relieved with large panels of rose outlined in blue with small designs of gold. The panels in rose are separated with columns painted a chocolate color—just a tone deeper than the tan which predominates.

The fixtures of the stage carry out the rose idea in the peacock and rose flowers that stand out brilliantly on a black background of heavy silk.

Approximately five hundred people can be seated in the main auditorium on seats that are arranged on a sharp slant towards the stage. Because of this unusual slant the stage is but a few feet from the main floor. The balcony has a capacity of about three hundred.

At the heads of the stairs to the balcony is located a reception room, furnished with wicker and five floor lamps and a reading lamp on a long table. Leading from the reception room there is a rest room for women. This room has all the marks of a sun parlor with its large windows draped in blue and gold, and with its gray wicker chairs upholstered in blue and gold with touches of rose. In addition to these two rooms there is a dressing room for women, and a smoking room for the men.

The Rialto has a $20,000 Robert-Morton organ and is equipped with an up-to-date cooling system. It is Powers equipped.

Southern House Completely Remodeled

ish design has been modified by modern tions of the beams, cornices, proscenium arch, and balcony. The scenic work around the proscenium, the dainty classic bits circling the balcony and the harp moclassic adaptations detected in the decoratifs placed about the walls are distinctive touches. Every bit of work on the walls has been done by hand.

The house has a seating capacity exceeding 1400, with wide aisles and numerous exits to permit of emptying the theatre instantly. In addition to the Dauphin street entrance, there is another exit on Conception street. The orchestra floor has a comfortable slope with seats of fumed oak upholstered in brown leather. The aisles are covered with dark red carpets. Several stage boxes are on the orchestra floor while the balcony has a semicircle of loges. The boxes are done in golden Tiffany blends and draped with green velvet curtains. All curtains, drapes and carpets were furnished by L. Hammel & Company of this city. The chairs and other fixtures of this kind came from the Winter Safe and Fixture Company. To further carry out the color scheme the large steam radiators are painted in dull green. L. Leahy furnished all steam fittings and plumbing work throughout the building.

A beautiful feature of the completed theatre is the distinctive lighting effects. An indirect lighting system has been installed except for the house lights to flood the theatre between pictures. Amber and green lights concealed by the cornice and controlled by a perfect system of dimmers permit of some exceptionally lovely lighting effects. The switchboard is the most complete of its kind in existence and controls every wire in the house. Huge golden bowls flood foyer and house with white lights by the indirect method.

Ventilation in the Bijou will be secured by three Typhoon fans, two exhaust and 20 wall fans, the system resulting in a perfectly cooled and thoroughly aired house at all times.

The Bijou will be an Associated First National House.

Rembusch Screen in Century Theatre

The two-million-dollar theatre of Charles E. Whitehurst of Baltimore and his associates—the wonder Century, has such an exceptionally large capacity that all the equipment must be of unusual quality to uphold their ends.

The theatre has a seating capacity close to 4,000, and when the roof theatre for special feature showings is finished, will make a total of nearly 7,000. To handle the crowds, there are three elevators, each measuring 8 feet square with a capacity of 4,500 pounds, which can take one hundred persons per minute from the foyer to the roof theatre.

The stage, screen and projection equipment were all selected to meet the fitting needs of the Baltimore house. The projection room over the balcony measures eighteen by twenty-four feet. On one side there is a rest room and on the other a rewinding room that is six by eight feet. The battery of three machines are operated from three wired direct current of 120-140 voltage.

To meet the especial needs of such a large house a Rembusch Crystal Gold Fibre Screen was selected. The screen measures sixteen by twenty-one feet and rceives a picture 19.6 by 14.6 feet. The throw to the screen is one hundred and forty-five feet.

Immense Monsoon fans can produce an entire change of air in the house in two minutes, as the system throws a 1,000,000 cubic feet of breeze. The fans are driven by a 30-horse-power electric motor.

New Theatre Burned

The Dirigo theatre at Ellsworth, Me., a motion picture house built last year was recently destroyed by fire. The loss was about $20,000—AGARD.

Dallas House Changes Ownership

The Capital theatre, formerly Dallas Opera House, will be opened by the Southern Enterprises, Inc., at Dallas, Tex., about September 15. Carl Peters, now manager of the Jefferson, will have charge of the Capital with Floyd Stuart as supervisor and Frank Powell as scenic artist—NOBLE.

Theatre as Business Asset

That a motion picture house is considered a desirable asset to business prosperity of a town, or section of a community, is being illustrated at Southington, Conn., where merchants of the southern district are taking the initiative in securing a playhouse there. They hold that absence of a motion picture house results in loss of trade, residents of that section going to other parts of the town to combine "taking in the movies" with a shopping trip. As a result, several of the merchants have bought a centrally located site on Main street, and are having plans for a family motion picture house drawn, work to be started as soon as the plans are accepted. No details as to identity of merchants back of the project or general plans for the house will be divulged until the plans are accepted—AGARD.

New Theatre, Baltimore, Renovated

Charles E. Whitehurst's new theatre Baltimore, Md., was recently opened after being renovated at a cost of $15,000. The house is now decorated with a French gray damask effect on the walls of the auditorium. The mellow lights have Japanese silk shades. New seats of blue velour have been installed. The walls of the foyer have been finished with a Caen stone effect, while the sub-foyer is done in French gray. A new women's room is among the improvements.—COOPER.

"RAVEN HAFTONE SCREEN"

What F. H. Richardson Says in the Moving Picture World, Sept. 10, 1921

Regarding the

RAVEN "HAFTONE" SCREEN

The Raven Screen Company has submitted to the department samples of the very excellent screen surface it is putting out. The surface consists of a very finely woven cloth facing, carried on a backing of rubberized material.

The surface seems to be about as nearly a perfectly devised one as it would be possible to get. The surfacing material is very thin, but between it and the rubberized backing is a filling of some sort, so that the screen presents a dead white and very finely grained projection surface.

The material is very flexible, or perhaps we might better say pliable. The makers claim that it may be laundered, the same as a linen sheet.

For a portable screen we do not believe that the surface under discussion could be materially improved upon. For a traveling exhibitor it is ideal, and for the theatre the surface certainly would give an artistic picture, with no appreciable fade-away presenting.

Install New Machinery

These are busy days at the plant of the Newman Manufacturing Company, in Cincinnati. Machinery has recently been installed for the manufacture of wooden frames and the finishing touches to the various departments are being added this week.

The House of Newman has realized for some time past that there exists a constantly growing demand for elaborately ornamented display cabinets, and that many exhibitors will overlook the long life of Newman Brass Frames in favor of more "showy" wooden frames.

The majority of these frames will be made throughout of genuine oak; most of them will be machine-carved, but the Newman folks are also prepared to manufacture hand-carved frames and ticket booths.

The frames will be finished in all natural wood finishes, that is the regulation mission colors. Preparations have also been made for finishing the more expensive frames in gilt, copper, verdi and duo-tones.

In preparing this line the Newman folks have been careful to include a large number of combination photograph and poster frames. All of these frames are arranged to hold one one-sheet poster in combination with several 8 x 10 in. or 11 x 14 in.. photographs.

In the line has also been included an announcement card holder, with spaces for each day of the week, and several special unit frames and corner display cabinets.

Arrangements have been completed for making quick shipments from their Chicago branch, as well as from the main factory.

The Newman folks also manufacture brass railings and door hardware for theatres, and ticket choppers in four different styles at popular prices.

'THE AFFAIRS OF ANATOL"
(De Mille-Paramount)

A Knockout—Undoubtedly De Mille's Greatest

"THE AFFAIRS OF ANATOL" is deserving of superlatives from every angle. Perhaps no picture ever produced occupies quite its position or could be so fittingly selected as an example of what the photoplay may achieve.

"The Affairs of Anatol" is not an "accident" as has often been claimed for the unusual picture. It represents something that brains, money, technical knowledge, studio experts and exceptional players have conceived, planned and executed, with a very definite knowledge of what the result thereof was to be—a picture that would set a new standard because no part of its construction suffered in comparison to another—a "Deacon's One Horse Shay" as it were.

Undoubtedly to Jeanie MacPherson goes first prize in the awards for work well done. With an idea suggested by the play of the same name, Miss MacPherson has built a story, without plot complication or the use of a villian, that is never commonplace, usually highly entertaining and often wtih a truly humorous touch and which carries suspense and interest from the first scene to the final fadeout.

Illustrating these scenes are titles so epigrammatic and cleverly worded that they stand as models. The continuity is divided into four episodes, with the action and incident of each unbroken—a perfect work.

From this material Cecil De Mille has delivered his share of a great whole. The sets are lavish, sometimes bizarre, and novel when required as a proper background for the action, but always artistic, and in keeping with the spirit of the play. The direction is faultless. It gets the most from every bit of incident, maintains the exact tempo desired in each scene but never overstresses a point. The camera work and lightings could not have been improved upon. The art titles are in colors and set a new standard.

In the matter of acting, the picture is truly all star. Every member of the cast has a real starring role and is a fine type for the part.

Wallace Reid is a convincing "Annatol." He resorts to farce comedy tricks occasionally but never to the detriment of the picture. Theodore Roberts makes the part of the stand-pat old rounder a real personage. Bebe Daniels is indeed the "good little bad girl." Wanda Hawley just misses being perfect as the girl of the "primrose path" and Gloria Swanson is a fine type as the wife.

As a box office magnet the picture can not fail. It will please audiences from a dozen different angles and it has quite as many exploitation possibilities. If ever a picture was sure fire, for big cities and little towns alike, this is one. The man who doesn't sell out for every performance of a double run should turn his show shop into a Quaker meeting house.—Length, 8 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Cecil B. De Mille productions are famous for the ultra-fashionable wardrobes of the feminine players, but it remains for "The Affairs of Anatol," the latest Cecil B. De Mille Paramount production which comes to the ———— theatre next ————, to set a new mark in this respect.

An important contributing cause to the general effect is the remarkable assemblage of feminine players who appear in this production. Gloria Swanson, Wanda Hawley Bebe Daniels, Agnes Ayres and Julia Faye, are all famous for their fashion flaire both on and off the screen. The first named trio wear gowns in this picture that rival the latest Parisian creations. The other three shine by contrast because of type of roles which they portray.

PROGRAM READER

All the world knows Arthur Schnitzler's famous play, "The Affairs of Anatol." Written by one of the foremost Continental playwrights, it achieved great popularity both in Europe and America, where it served as the starring vehicle for John Barrymore a few seasons ago.

"THE GIRL FQOM GOD'S COUNTRY"
(Nell Shipman Productions-F. B. Warren Corp.)

Moviesque in Plot; Excellent in All Other Ways

THE versatile Nell Shipman is just that in her latest production for release through the F. B. Warren Corp. She is the author, star and co-director of a picture which gives her a dual role, and which has a plot into which are crammed all sorts of intrigue, adventure and mystery.

"The Girl From God's Country" might be termed "moviesque" in its story and development. To counterbalance this there are some excellent "great outdoor" scenes; plenty of attractive animal shots; a well selected cast; and an abundance of real action. Miss Shipman knows full well the charm of the "snow country" to a picture audience. This is undeniable. She introduces herself as "Neeka," the French-Canadian girl, hurrying in a crude canoe through the rapids to save an endangered puppy, and from then on her outdoor scenes are well nigh perfect. "Neeka" is a wild, untamed young thing—"one of nature's vampires"—and when the story allows her to mingle with society people it affords opportunity for humorous sub-titles. Also there is a very slight resemblance to the "female Tarzan" role, with its consequent appeal.

By calling the picture "moviesque" we mean that the story is so complex, so improbable, and so filled with unconvincing twists, that it cannot be accepted by discriminating audiences who have outgrown the typical movie plot. It is really two stories. One takes place in the North, where the supposed father of the nameless girl returns. Revenge is sought and the man is nearly murdered. Then there is a quick shift to Southern California and an aeroplane story. New characters are introduced. There is to be a trans-Pacific aeroplane race, and the supposed father has stolen the plans for solidified gasoline and a motor silencer, the inventions of a demented recluse. Then comes an earthquake, the inventor regains his memory and recalls that he is the true father of "Neeka." All the characters are trapped in a fire, escape in the nick of time, and the girl and a blind aviator jump into a plane for the trans-Pacific flight. They meet an enemy plane in mid-ocean; he falls into the water, and the girl jumps after him to obtain the stolen plans. The blind man, alone, pilots his machine in the air above, and after the girl has defeated her enemy, he hears her cries (there is a motor silencer), swoops down and picks her up, and off they go to win the trans-Pacific flight and spend a honeymoon in Honolulu.

Such a whirl of complex action will be a delight to some audiences and is most assuredly not fatal to the picture's box office value. Certainly the production is scenically beautiful, very capably acted and filled with excellent photography.—Length, 7 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A virile, fast-moving drama of the Northlands is announced as the feature attraction at the ———— theatre for ————, when "The Girl From God's Country" will be shown. This picture stars Nell Shipman, who will be remembered from her work in "Back to God's Country" and other thrilling pictures of the snow country. "The Girl From God's Country" is a fitting vehicle for the talents of this star, who not only enacted the leading role, but who also wrote the story and directed the picture in collaboration with Bert Van Tuyle.

Miss Shipman plays a dual role. She enacts the part of a wealthy Southern California society girl, and that of a French-Canadian girl of the North country, parts which call for two distinct personalities. While the cast is an all-star one, including such players as Edward Burns, Walt Whitman, Al Filson and George Berrell, it has a number of screen actors which are nameless. They are bears, deer, foxes, wild cats and even skunks. The scenes laid in the Northland are scenically some of the most beautiful to reach the screen.. They bring the atmosphere of that land of romance and adventure, of brave men and true women, direct to the audience.

The story itself is a gripping one, and one that holds the interest of the screen fans to the very last moment. This is because of the excellent suspense and action which fills every foot of the film. It has, in short, all of the elements which go to make up a successful and popular audience picture. It will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to May 7, 1921.
